NO HEAD TO FRANCE.

M. Casimir-Perier Has Resigned the Office of President.

PARIS, Jan. 17.—The chambers of the senate and deputies were crowded when those two bodies met to receive the resignation of President Casimir-Perier. When order was obtained the letter of resignation was read. It simply elaborates, though not at length, on the reasons given in these dispatches yesterday for his act. It is a complaint that a campaign of slander has been waged for months against every branch of the government and sarcastically refers thereto as "liberty of thought." Then those whom he had the right to look to for support had betrayed him and in short he could no longer retain his own self respect and the presidency at the same time.

The reasons for resignation were variously commented upon, but hardly any one approved them. The socialists looked upon the crisis as a victory for them. Of course there was disorder in the deputies. There were loud cries for election of president by universal suffrage, and a socialist shouted "Vive le Republique." The reply came quickly from a couple of royalists: "Vive le Roi." Members of the Left retorted with loud cries of "Vive le Republique."

This increased the excitement greatly and caused the members of the Left to gather together and shout for the republic at the top of their voices, while cheers for the king were to be heard mingling with the cheers for the republic, But the shouting for the latter drowned out the cries for the former and the chamber of deputies was emptied amid a scene of great tumult.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 18.—M. Felix Faure, minister of marine in the present cabinet, was elected on the second ballot to be president of the French republic. NEBRASKA STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

THE CALL.

A State Convention, under the auspices of the Nebraska Christian Association, is hereby called to meet at HUMBOLDT, NEB., IN THE FIRST METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, ON MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY FOURTH, continuing through the following day and evening, February 5. Pres. Chas. A Blanchard, of Wheaton College, is expected to be present and deliver an address on each evening. All the friends of the crusade against oath-bound secretism are urged to attend this convention.

W. I. BROOKS,
Pres. Nebraska Christian Association.

ADDITIONAL.

The State President opens the feast with an address—"Why this Convention?" Then follows: "Clearing Away Rubbish; or Answering Objections"—such as "It is none of your business;" "There are a great many honest men in these associations;" "If the lodge is so bad, could it have lasted so long?" etc. "The Initial Work, or Initiation;" "The Worship, or Religion, of the Lodge;" "Jesus Christ the Only Way;" "Substitute Saviours;" "The Oaths and Obligations;" "Toleration vs. Bigotry;" "The Work of the N. C. A.;" "Secret Societies in Politics," etc.

Free entertainment will be furnished for all who come from a distance.

The conference of the Swedish Evangelical Lutheran church of Nebraska will convene on the 5th of February, at Oakland, in the northeastern part of the State, thus preventing the attendance of Rev. C. G. Wilder and other ministers in that denomination at our convention.

Rev. Simpson Ely, Dean of the Bible School at Fairfield (Neb.) College, who stands almost alone with our reform—among the Disciples, or Campbellites, or Christians—will read a paper impeaching all secret societies. Many prominent ministers in that denomination have forsaken the anti-secrecy principles of Alexander Campbell, as well as Christ, and joined the lodges. Dean Ely is one of the few faithful ones who have not gone after Baal to worship him, and is, withal, a very talented writer.

Rev. Howard P. Young, pastor of the Asbury M. E. church at West Lincoln, Neb., will address the convention on "Secretism and Loyalty to Christ."

Let there be a full attendance.

As we go to press Tuesday morning the Ohio State Anti-secrecy Convention is in session at Xenia. We hope to report a very profitable gathering in our next issue.

Friends of the anti-secrecy reform in Minnesota, it is proposed to hold a State convention in the city of St. Paul about the middle of February, and it is desirable, as the time is short, that you at once begin to prepare for it with your influence, talent and financial support. Further on more definite information will be furnished. Write to Secretary Phillips at this office about it.

The Catholic World, controlled by Roman Catholic prelates in this country, says editorially: "Education must be controlled by Romish authorities, even to war and bloodshed." What does it mean? On the other hand, at the famous meeting of the Sunset Club in this city, General Hawley said: "The next President of the United States will bear the A. P. A. mark, or there will be no President." "We have fallen on strange times."

Before the next issue of the Cynosure will reach many of our readers, the Nebraska State Anti-secrecy Convention, at Humboldt, will have met and dispersed. The prospects of an excellent gathering are flattering. The call and some other particulars appear on this page. Whatever of success shall attend its deliberations, we are sure that a large share of the credit of it should be given to Rev. W. I. Brooks, the President of the State Association, upon whom has devolved the management of the preliminary arrangements.

Another result of the strike at Pullman, last summer, manifested itself last week in the beginning of the trial of President Eugene V. Debs and about thirty other members of the American Railway Union, in a government tribunal, for conspiracy. Their offence was the unlawful detention of trains employed to carry the mails. In the meantime, unless released upon writs of habeas corpus, Debs and several of his associates will serve out their jail sentences at Woodstock, Ill., for contemptuous disobedience of an order issued by the Federal court during the Pullman strike.

A dispatch from New Orleans, La., January 23, brings information that a Chinese, named Cony Chisesi, who recently arrived in that city from Chicago, was murdered that morning, His head was nearly severed from his body with a razor. While in the throes of death he said his murderer was Marcel Mathelo, lately released from the Texas penitentiary. It is believed that Mathelo was simply the tool of the Mafia in this case. New Orleans seems to be particularly infested with this murderous clan, notwithstanding the wholesale lynching of its members in that city, a few years ago. More bloodshed will probably follow.

The indignation of the German lodges of Knights of Pythias at the recent order of the Supreme Lodge, forbidding the ritual to be used in any but the English language, still continues, and there is trouble all along the line. Questions of property ownership in German lodges which propose to surrender their charters serve also to complicate affairs. Without prejudice, it seems to us to have been a most unwise movement on the part of the Supreme Lodge. The Odd-fellows are more shrewd, since the ritual of their subordinate lodges is now printed in English, German, French, Spanish, Norwegian, Italian, Swedish and Bohemian. The Rebekah ritual is printed only in the English and German languages.

A collision between the New York State militia and the striking employes of the Brooklyn street car system was a significant event in the history of the past week. The strike was general, and not only hindered passenger traffic but developed considerable mob violence among the strikers. The heat of the situation was increased by the decision of a judge that it was the imperative duty of the street railway company to keep those cars running which carry mail-matter, at whatever expense. On Monday of this week great suffering was reported among the strikers and their families. Other strikes, in other localities, are also threatened by discontented workmen, with more prospective suffering. This is the way in which labor unions "protect" their members.

In the course of a week the Cynosure receives, in exchange, dozens of religious newspapers, representing, probably, a dozen denominations of Christians, many of them being, also, the mouth-pieces of their respective synods, conferences, etc. Looking through these papers from week to week, it is, as Longfellow says, "with a feeling akin to sadness" that we fail to find even a single line or sentence that condemns the secret lodge system. There are a very few exceptions, for which we are glad; but the great majority of our exchanges, while they advocate all other reforms clearly and earnestly, never have a word of condemnation against the lodges that are sapping the churches of their spirituality, and robbing them of moneys that should be devoted to the advancement of the pure gospel of Jesus Christ, but is being squandered upon the support of un-Christian secret work. This ought not to be. The churches owe it to themselves and the cause of Christ to cut loose from the slavery of secret societies, and to cast out the unclean works of paganism and spiritual darkness. We thank God that there are churches who will not tolerate the secret societies, or admit their members to fellowship. Of such is the kingdom of heaven.

WHAT IS THE DUTY OF THE CHRISTIAN TOWARD SECRET SOCIETIES?

[A paper read by Eld. W. H. Pruett, of Weston, Oregon, at the Pacific Coast Anti-secrecy Convention, held at Philomath, Benton County, Oregon, Sept. 26, 27, 1894.]

This question is one of paramount importance to every disciple of the Lord, and is one which has puzzled many an honest, simple-hearted believer. We find some who are doubting as to the propriety of belonging to any organization but the church of the Lord Jesus Christ. They keep aloof from them, but do not see that it is the duty of a Christian to oppose them, or speak against them, or even trouble himself in regard to them or to inquire into them as to whether they are good or bad. This good and peaceable man says: "I attend to my own business, and let others attend to theirs. I don't trouble myself about secret societies. I don't believe in them, for myself. But if others want to belong they can," etc., etc.

Now the question comes up: Is ours a positive Christianity, or only negative, being a Christian so far as the absence of evil is concerned? Others, we find, are of a more active turn of mind, and they will tell us that they belong to several of the so-called secret societies, and they never have seen any harm in them, but much good socially and in every way; and yet, from these two apparently equally good men, if we accept their testimony as evidence in the settlement of the question, what is our duty, as Christians, toward Secret Societies?

We are forced to say, let them alone. If professed Christians want to belong to any organization that pledges its membership to keep secret its doings, just let them enjoy their privilege; and we may not annoy society, and stir up strife, and disturb and divide the church, with our personal opinions. Thus both classes are saying, Let us have peace.

But there is still another class in the church whose consciences are at unrest on this vexed question of the duty of the church towards members who belong to secret societies, or towards those who would identify themselves with the church and are already members of some of the secret orders. All three classes are honored and well-reputed members of the Baptist churches and of Christian societies; and each, as men of intelligence and Christian integrity, commands a proper consideration and should be treated with Christian courtesy and due respect.

Dear Christian hearer, let me appeal to your better judgment. Stand up in your Christian manhood, and ask yourself the question: Which of the three classes is right? Does your conscience answer that ALL may be right? Are you willing, before the coming Judgment, to rest this matter here? Oh, for the sake of precious souls—for Christ's sake—do not refuse or neglect to take God's word and by its light, for the love you have for Christ and the purity of his church, settle the question in God's way by God's own word.

Secret societies, even of the simplest form, are societies of darkness; secretiveness—hidingness. They not only, necessarily, to maintain an existence, must teach men to keep in the dark;—that is, to keep from the light of certain things. Hence their societies, however simple, are of necessity "works of darkness."

We come now to the answer of two questions at once; which settle at once and forever the question of our relation to, and our duty towards, any and all secret societies. "Having no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." (Eph. 5:11, 12 and 2 Cor. 6:14–18). Here membership in them is absolutely shut off. No fellowship, no membership in them, thus declaring our love to and for them, much less church fellowship, thus bidding them God-speed, and partaking with them of the forbidden fellowship—the unchristian works of darkness.

Again our duty as Christians is clearly set forth in God's truth: "Reprove them."

My Christian brother or sister, you feel that you would rejoice to see the church, the bride of Christ, triumph over sin and over all the works of darkness. You delight to realize that the world, as the poet sings, "is overcome through the blood of the Lamb." Let me refer you to Rev. 12:11. I entreat you, my brother, my sister, as the friend of Jesus, for the love you have for Christ, don't be so ungrateful as to put the whole responsibility of the great victory over the beast and his image (Rev. 13:17) all on the blood of the Lamb. Do a little yourself, as the appointed means.

Would you see the church arise and clothe herself in her beautiful garments of salvation and rejoice in victory through the blood of the Lamb? Then be willing to do your part. It is not the blood alone; for we read: "And by the word of their testimony." (Rev 12:11). Here, Christian man, or woman, is your duty pointed out plainly, to testify against the unfruitful works of darkness. It may cost you persecution. Are we not, in the word of God, assured that those who live godly in Christ Jesus, (can not avoid,) shall suffer persecution. (2 Tim. 3:12.)

Yet how consoling to know that the persecution of the world does not in any way disturb the spiritual serenity of the soul, but adds to it in sweetness, richness and sublimity of hope. "For I reckon," says the apostle, "that the sufferings of the present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us." (Rom. 8:18). This is not the extent of the test of our true fidelity to God; but we learn that those who overcame "loved not their lives even unto the death." (Rev. 13:11.)

Would you be an overcomer? Then yours must be a positive Christianity. Dismiss forever from your mind the thought that you can be indifferent in regard to matters of such vital importance; that you may occupy a neutral position in the premises has been the suggestion of the evil one.

Let Jesus Christ decide for you through his word, and then obey for his own glorious name's sake. Although you may come up through great tribulation, let not the man of God shrink from the cross for Christ. In the light of the judgment, what are you doing? What is your testimony on the question of Secret Societies?

But doubtless some one is thinking, why not give us your solution to this vexed question. Very well. By reference to John the Revelator, we get a scriptural solution to the question under consideration: "And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb," (but the limit of our obligation does not cease here), "and by the word of their testimony;" "and they loved not their lives unto death." (Rev. 13:11.)

Then what is our duty as Christian men and women toward Secret Societies? The answer is clear and unmistakable. By the word of our testimony we are exhorted not only to come out and be separate, but to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, "but rather reprove them." Let our testimony be against such unfruitful and unholy alliances. (2 Cor. 6:17, 18.) We can not be passive in the matter; but in order to prove our fidelity to God, we must be a witness against organized secrecy. Oh, how this sin of omission, like a wave, comes over us! How many golden opportunities have gone by unimproved by those who were strong anti-secretists in principle, but never testified against the abominable inquity.

My dear brethren and sisters, this is the trouble. You can not remain silent. "Ye are the light of the world." How can your light of testimony shine out into the darkness of secrecy, the great sin of the age, unless you have something to say on the subject? Our imperative duty in the premises is to let our testimony be against the masterpiece of satanic wickedness. Too much, and too long, have Christian men and women been silent. If every Christian today was faithful in testimony, the line of separation would soon be drawn, and oh, how wonderfully God would be glorified in his saints.

These Secret Societies are all religious, i. e., using the forms of religious worship, and yet are, without question, of the world and not of Christ, but Anti-Christ. While the true church is of Christ, I beseech of you, do not try to mix the two, and then ask God's blessing upon the mixture.

To those of you who stand connected with organized secrecy; I have special reference to those who profess to love the Lord Jesus Christ—there are those who have given audience to what has already been stated, who affiliate with organized secrecy. Your duty as Christians is made clear by reference to Leviticus 5:4–6.

In all secret societies the members are required to forswear themselves. The inspired historian has told us how we may be honorably released from such obligations: "If a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him," etc. "When he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty," etc. Then his duty is "to confess that he has sinned in that thing." (Lev. 5:5). Confession is imperative. Yes, this is the only way taught by the Lord by which you give your testimony in favor for God. There is no escape of God's judgments upon you. You must adhere to God's terms; otherwise you are not free. We advise you to read carefully Deut. 13:6–11; also 17:2–7.

Freemasonry, according to its own authors, is sun-worship. Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship, by a special enactment of their lodges, reject the name of Christ from use in the lodge, and yet they pray—or profess to pray; but Christ teaches: "No man cometh unto the Father but by me; and he that rejecteth the Son, rejecteth the Father also." (Jno. 14:6). And yet we keep company with them in the church, fellowship them, and thus bid them God-speed. We become partakers of their evil deeds and are in condemnation with them. My dear Christian brother, you who affiliate with organized secrecy, did it ever appear to you that your sin was of a two-fold nature? You are not only grieving the blessed Holy Spirit yourselves, by persisting in such a course, but you entail the sin of condemnation upon your brethren and sisters whom you compel to fellowship you in your church relationship.

Allow me to invite your attention to what Paul says, (1 Cor. 5:9–13; 10:7, 8, 14, 20, 21. Also, see 1 John 4:1, 2–5. We cannot take good professions at all times. See 2 John 1:7, 10–11. Would we be more perfectly instructed in regard to our duty toward those who persist in fellowshiping Baal-worship, please turn and read your commission from Paul, in 1 Timothy 5:20. "Those who sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear;" and, furthermore, Paul wrote to Titus: "Wherefore reprove them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith." (Titus 1:13).

Then, again, Peter tells us that there were false prophets among the people in that day, who denied the Lord who bought them, etc.;—who bring upon themselves swift destruction." (2 Peter 2:1.) There are many false teachers in this our day and age, who are bowing at altars where they deny the Lord Jesus Christ, as Masons do. (Rev. 13:11–18.)

I am fully persuaded that if we love the blessed Christ's cause, as we should, and are new creatures in Christ, we will neither affiliate nor sympathize with these institutions of men, but as loyal servants to God, will, by the word of our testimony, show the people their transgressions. Amen!

SHALL AMERICANS PAGANIZE?

BY MANLOVE N. BUTLER.

The Protestant population of this country are in an uproar and fulminating dire charges against the Roman Catholics of the nation. Whether these wholesale charges are true or false is not the purpose of this writing to determine. As a born citizen of the United States, of Protestant parentage, yet not a member of any religious organization or denomination, it occurred to me that some words to the general public might not be amiss. Let us have fair play, and when both sides are heard the reading millions can easily determine whether the "most immediate danger" is from Roman Catholicism or misguided Protestism. Let us see the trend and drift of this Protestanism, and then ask if fifty millions of Protestants should not do a big job of house-cleaning at home before jumping five to one onto the Roman Catholic community? People who live in glass houses should not go into the stone-throwing business. And as the Protestants have started in to correct and renovate Roman Catholicism and "sift it to the bottom," would it not be a noble and patriotic return for ten millions of Catholics to do a little investigating of so-called Protestantism? It has been stated that nine-tenths of the Catholics are in the cities, and that a majority of the Protestants reside in the rural and smaller towns. It is asserted that municipal offices and emoluments are in the hands of Catholics in disproportion to their numerical strength in cities. But when it comes to the general federal, state and county governments, how is it? It is no use to go into long preliminaries, beat the devil about the bush or talk all over the world of politics and theology; the simple and well-known fact is, there is a religio-political organization throughout the Union much more powerful than Roman Catholicism. Its affiliation embraces only about seven hundred thousand, yet it rules American Protestantism with a rod of iron. It is an absolute hierarchical despotism in which the mitre governs the crown. It is an organized empire in our republic. Protestants fairly rave about Catholic priests and the reverence paid them by "ignorant foreigners," women and children, yet Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregational and Episcopalian ministers in every county-seat are bowing to and hailing men as "high priests" and "most excellent grand high priests." Protestants are horror-struck at the veneration and supreme loyalty of Catholics to the pope, yet they and their ministers in every community are kneeling to "worshipful masters" and "most worshipful grand masters." Men who go into spasms at the mention of "cardinal" are swearing their very lives and eternal allegiance to "kings" and "grand kings." Citizens who howl themselves hoarse about an "unmarried priesthood" and "auricular confessional," bind themselves to this despotism of able-bodied men (no women can ever join the order) for time and eternity. This ecclesiastical imperialism now firmly set up and planted in America (not by Catholics) actually and openly confers almost every title of royalty and nobility known to "hated monarchies" of the Old World. No one will question for a moment that a little over half a million of these avowed (non-Catholic) imperialists do hold a vast majority of the offices outside of the larger cities. Why don't the Protestant secular and religious press so much as whisper this tremendous fact? Why do the American Protective Association papers condone all this imperialism and entirely overlook its "sublime princes" and "most eminent grand commanders?" These wide-awake and "intensely American" papers would no more dare to print its extra-judicial oaths and unlawful blood-curdling death penaltles than they would its anti-republican principles and un-American doctrines. It is not necessary to go back into the dark ages and ancient history to dig up thunder on this line; not even to the time when Quakers and witches were burned, or free Americans fought four long years for negro-slavery. Evidences of disloyalty and plotting conspiracy are mountain high. The "strong grip of the lion's paw" has American Protestantism by the throat. Its clutch is on the popular denominations and politics of the land. The "grip and sign" rules courts, judges and juries. Behind tyled doors and blinded windows nightly lessons are given in intimidation and subjugation. Thousands of these Protestant "slaves" are making faces at the pope across the Big Pond when every State and Territory has a "most worshipful grand master" or pagan pontiff. Instead of one king the United States has forty-eight or more "grand kings" and hundreds of little kings duly installed under Protestant supremacy. And the blighting system that is officially laying the corner-stones to our state-houses, court-houses and church edifices hangs like a pall of night over the entire Protestant commonwealth. The question then is not, Shall America Romanize and Catholicize, but shall it despotize and paganize? High Catholic and Protestant ecclesiastics have fired their guns in this discussion, and to all Christian voters the religious phase is of most vital import. Do they realize that all about and around them is a vast system of kingcraft and priestcraft the most complete on earth and unparalleled in the world's history? Instead of being a succession of the reilgion of Christ, Peter and the apostles, it repudiates all these, and its "worshipful masters" and "high priests" are the legitimate succesors of those faced by Elijah on Mt. Carmel. Its religion is a reproduction of ancient heathenism and paganism pure and simple. It is the worship of Osiris and Isis—the sun and the moon. The man who has been denuded and initiated into these obscene and degrading rites and ceremonies must be lost to all sense of dignity and should be the last fellow on this green earth to talk decorum and propriety to a Catholic or any one else. This Christless, pagan religious association of able-bodied men holds convocations for the dead and publicly baptizes infants, and just why any man with beard on his face should, as a Protestant, so heartily approve all this and then so bitterly denounce Catholic "mass for the dead" is past finding out. The Catholic church, nor any orthodox Protestant church, proposes to do no more for its most faithful devotee than does this hierarchy. Imagine a good Protestant bishop or doctor of divinity in worship with the Christ-hating Jew, saloon-keeper, gambler and libertine, then listen to that pious pagan haranguing an audience about "Jesuit hypocrisy." Behold a brave, bold editor penning leading editorials against beads, pictures, and crossing one's self before the Catholic ecclesiastic, then watch that editor "walking on the square," throwing signs and dueguards at a "worshipful master" or "high priest," or kneeling to the sun, moon and stars. A lecturer hurls his wit and sarcasm at Romish candles, crucifixes and holy water; the next night as a Protestant pagan he stands beside three tallow dips solemnly repeating the ritualism of Sabianism and parading on his faithful breast the emblems of nature worship. He accuses the Catholic of "Mary worship," while he himself, through the potentate "in the east," tries to approach, not the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob through Christ, but the "Grand Architect of the Universe" through the sun. The mother church never has denied the Christ, but this idolized established paganism that is leading a community of fifty million Protestants by the nose is as Christless as Mohammedanism and Buddhism. This obtruding hierarchical heathenism has its image and the "mark of the beast" all over modern Protestantism. Must the followers of Luther and the sons of the Pilgrims, while denouncing Catholicism, approve and uphold paganism? To those who have been taught to hate ecclesiastical supremacy, it is like a jump from the devil to the deep sea, or a hop from the frying-pan into the fire. Would it not be more consistent for Protestantism to put down this organized empire of pagan despotism in its own bosom and rid our beloved republic of this foulest and most dangerous and deadly kingcraft and priestcraft, before waving danger signals at shadows from continental Europe? Say nothing more about the "cruel inquisition" until this throat-cutting and tongue-pulling, breast-tearing and heart-plucking, body-severing and bowel-burning system is destroyed root and branch. This enemy that has ridden down American Protestantism will ride down Catholicism. It is now pushing Catholicism between itself and what Protestants it has failed to subdue. It proposes to strike at Catholicism but conceal the hand.

Dare the Roman Catholic press, clergy and laity meet the real issue? If a half-million pagan sun-worshipers have awed the politics and Protestantism of America, surely ten millions of Catholics will require some nerve to grapple with this dark empire, so completely entrenched in every Protestant community. The fact that this enemy of all Americanism has turned back Protestant civilization five thousand years and firmly established itself in the United States, capturing church and state without firing a gun; the fact that it assumes the lead of the war on Catholicism, omens no good to Protestantism and less for Catholicism in the final round-up. But let the Protestants take their own bitter medicine. "Physician, heal thyself!" And when Protestants have cast their beam of kingcraft and priestcraft out of Protestantism, it may then be policy to turn their microscopes and spy-glasses on foreign monarchies. Let the real believers in Christianity and Americanism, irrespective of denominational differences and party affiliations, stand solidly against this usurping pagan empire. Publish its ritual, rites, ceremonies, philosophy, jurisprudence and openly-declared government. Place before sixty-five millions of Protestants and Catholics its extra-judicial, unlawful oaths and inhuman death-penalties; its openly-avowed treason and disloyalty; its vile paganism and heathenism. Ronayne's sworn exposition of the inside work, and Butler's "American Hand-book," a complete compilation and synopsis of the openly-proclaimed character and make-up of the order, with its unimpeachable and overwhelming evidences and official testimony, proving beyond the shadow of a doubt the utter despotism and unadulterated heathenism of the "royal fraternity," are to be had for 90 cents by addressing W. I. Phillips, 221 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill. The most damning facts and truths show beyond all cavil that this dictating, domineering power has its footprints through every department of American society, and those two books make it so plain that he who runs may read. Catholicism will be "sifted to the very dregs," so declare a million of A. P. A.'s, and their papers print week after week the alleged oaths of the Catholic hierarchy, and affirm that Catholics propose the overthrow of popular government. The Catholic church must pass through the crucible of criticism and fire of hottest discussion. No stone will be left unturned to divert attention from this despotic empire and its pagan priesthood to an onslaught on Catholicism. Passing strange that so few Protestants have the patriotism and courage to face the real foe. Where are the great dailies and the popular orthodox religious journals amid all this pagan imperialism? This is awful reality, and will be American history, and one hundred years hence our children's children will stand aghast at all this pagan despotism and blush that their bold ancestors ever tolerated so colossal a hierarchical empire in the United States.

SELECTIONS.

"THE ORDER OF KNIGHTS OF ST. JOHN AND MALTA."

[In the Cynosure for January 10, we gave a partial exposition of the order of "Knights of Malta"—including a sketch of its origin and history, and its revival in the United States in 1884. Of this order a contemporary says: "It has no affiliation, in any way, with any (other) order. It is the lineal descendant of the Scottish branch of 'the Sixth Language of the Ancient High and Exalted Order of Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, afterwards of Palestine, Rhodes and Malta.'" Below we reprint from its own circular a history and description of "The Order of Knights of St. John and Malta," and a comparison of it with what we have already printed, will show that although the Knights of Malta claim that their fraternity "has no affiliation in any way with any order," they both derive their origin from one source. It is also to be distinctly understood that neither the one nor the other has any connection with the Masonic Knights of Malta, which is a degree appendant to the Knights Templar, as set forth in our expositions of that order.—EDITOR CYNOSURE]

THE ORDER OF KNIGHTS OF ST. JOHN AND MALTA.

In the days of the Crusade there were several great chivalric military orders; the most celebrated among them were the Knights of St. John and the Knights Templar. The order of St. John was established as a Hospitaller order at Jerusalem in 1048. About the year 1118 the order was re-organized on a military basis. Driven from Jerusalem at the end of the Crusade, in 1291, it migrated to Cyprus, from thence in 1301 to Rhodes, where it sustained two celebrated sieges; sojourned at Casto, Medina and Rome from 1522 to 1530, and possessed the Isle of Malta from 1530 to 1798. The order was divided into eight languages or nationalities, one of them being the English, which was divided into three Grand Priories, viz: English, Irish and Scotch. Through the latter the order came to America in November, 1870, when the first encampment in America, St. John's, No. 74, G. R. S., now No. 1, G. R. A., was instituted. In olden times the head of the order was elected for life, and his title was the "Grand Master." His assistants were formed into a general chapter, or Chapter General. The Knights wore over their usual garments a crimson surcoat, embellished before and behind with a broad white cross of eight points. In time of peace the dress of ceremony was a long black mantle, upon which the same cross of white linen was sewed.

THE ORDER OF ST. JOHN IN AMERICA.

The order seeks to perpetuate in the nineteenth century principles equally enduring as the historic achievements of their fraters of the Crusades.

The solemn obligations of his reception bind the novice to the constant exercise of the duties of fraternity. The order is Christian, but not sectarian, and practical benevolence is encouraged and systemized by means of the endowment and sick and funeral benefits. It is governed by a continental grand body styled the Chapter General of America, composed of its own officers, representatives from the subordinate bodies, styled Encampments, Past Grand Commanders, Grand Priors, District Deputies and Past Commanders. In each State the order is under the supervision of a Grand Prior. For prudential reasons the Chapter General was on March 14th, 1883, incorporated as a beneficial association under the laws of the State of New York. The temporal affairs of the order are managed by a board of seven, consisting of the Grand Commander, Grand Chancellor, Grand Almoner, Grand Medical Examiner, and three Grand Trustees, which meets regularly every month at the city of New York. There are encampments in several States of the Union and in Canada.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR MEMBERSHIP.

Any white male of not less than 18 years of age, of good moral character, a Christian, after passing a clear ballot, can be received as a member of our encampments.

THE RITUAL CEREMONIES.

The secret rites and ceremonies of the order are pronounced by those who are familiar with the rites of other orders to be most beautiful. There are three ancient primary grades or orders, viz.: Knights of Justice, Hospitaller and Priesthood, together with the appendant order of Knights of the Red Cross and Sepulchre.

MILITARY.

As in the ancient order, the Sir Knights are encouraged to perfect themselves in military drill.

The handsome uniform of the orders is a most attractive feature, though its purchase is entirely optional.

BENEFITS.

The ancient brethren were most practical in their system of benevolence, and so are we. The order in America as yet owns no great hospital, but probably greater benefits to humanity are being conferred by means of sick and funeral benefits paid by many of the encampments, and by means of the endowment.

ENDOWMENT DEPARTMENT.

This department was organized under authority from the State of New York to issue certificates as a charitable or beneficial association or corporation. The endowment enables men of moderate means to provide for their families in case of the death of the bread-winner. After careful medical examination certificates are issued which entitle the beneficiaries of companions dying in good standing in the endowment to participate in the endowment fund to the extent of $1,000. Certificate-holders are assessed according to age at date of certificate, as the deaths occur.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A sensible law.—How many legitimate daily sales a druggist can make —Drinking among the Connecticut militia. —A young Boston woman takes the veil —The Armenian question.—The strike at Haverhill —An older order than Freemasonry.

Connecticut, the land of steady habits and many inventions—has just passed which compels every doctor, when requested, to make out his prescriptions in plain English. It is to be hoped that other States will follow her example. The barbarous jargon in which a senseless custom decrees that physicians' prescriptions shall be written, is evidently intended to keep people in a state of blissful ignorance as to the exact kind of mixture they are taking into their stomachs. The Protestants have ceased to consider Latin as the language of theology; why must we be so curiously inconsistent as to still retain it as the language of medicine? It is a relic of the dark ages, when the degree of mystery in which physicians shrouded themselves measured the faith with which they were looked up to by the ignorant; when the healing art was associated with the black art—with demonology, astrology, and the search after the philosopher's stone.

RUM-SELLING DRUGGISTS.

The number of sales which a respectable druggist who keeps within the term of his license may reasonably make is a question with which the Massachusetts Board of Registration in Pharmacy has been lately wrestling. A firm of Pittsfield druggists had been refused a license by the board, it having been shown that the sales of this firm ran from fifty to sixty a day, and more on the holidays. Their attorney, ex-Congressman Rockwell, urged in their defence that the sales of the other druggists in Pittsfield, to whom licenses had been granted, were just as large. The board confesses itself guilty of an unwitting error in is suing certificates which it would now revoke if it had the power, and states that in its opinion an honest druggist will rarely exceed three sales a day, and never ten. Temperance people in towns cursed by rum-selling druggists will take note.

DRINKING MILITIA.

Connecticut finds the drink habit a sore evil among her militia. Without doubt her sister states could tell a similar story. The General Assembly is going to investigate the charges brought against her National Guard. Prohibition tax-payers have to help support this institution, and should know why, when the militia go into State encampment, obviously to perfect themselves in military practice, they must turn it into a prolonged spree. It is to be hoped that the General Assembly will investigate at once, and that the first on whom judgment falls may be the drinking officers, who set the example to their men and are responsible for this scandalous state of things.

INTO A CONVENT.

Miss Ruth Burnett, of Boston, who has just been received into the convent of the Sacred Heart, belongs to the family whose name and fame have been spread far and wide by the various "extracts" which bear that label. She is another illustration of the fruit of convent teaching on American girls. One ponders a little curiously over Mrs. Cleveland's letter acknowledging the invitation of this her most intimate friend, for whom Baby Ruth was named, to be present at the ceremonies which attended her taking of the veil. Did she "wish her much peace and happiness in her religious work," really believing that she would find it by taking upon her the vows of the cloister? Was "the great pleasure" which she expressed that her friend "had found joy and contentment," the smooth, superficial utterance of one who had never begun to gauge the question, or was it the real, intelligent expression of her actual feelings? In the latter case it is not pleasant to see this added proof of the trend toward Rome at the White House.

PERSECUTION IN ARMENIA.

A letter received from Mrs. M. G. Pepazian, formerly of Rowley, Massachusetts, now in Aintab, Turkey, brings the startling news that the authorities have closed all the colleges in Armenia and imprisoned thirty-five American professors. This is bringing the Armenian question very near home, especially to New England, so many of her foreign missionaries having chosen Armenia for their field of labor. It is more than a pity; it is a shame and an outrage that their interests should be represented by such a man as the present American minister to Turkey, Tirrell. His wife has received a decoration from the Sultan, contrary to American law; and he himself, apparently, has no idea that his office requires of him anything but a persistent ignoring of all subjects that could be construed as offensive to the Sultan's government. After Lincoln was assassinated, he wrote a poem in praise of the act, which ought to have forever excluded him from holding any government office. Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, at the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, stated that no Christian school was allowed to exist in Turkey unless there was a Catholic school in the same place; but Jesuits were never interfered with. It may yet be found that the Vatican has more to do with affairs at Constantinople than is generally imagined. It is to be hoped that the resolutions passed by the Alliance, "demanding, in the name of humanity, a firmer defence by the government at Washington of the rights and honor of its citizens in Armenia" will stir up even the phlegmatic Cleveland administration from its disgraceful apathy.

THE HAVERHILL STRIKE.

One good fruit is likely to grow out of the Haverhill strike; and that is the abolition of the contract system, which binds only one side—the employer—and takes away the personal liberty of the workmen. But those manufacturers in New England who think to escape the consequences of their own unjust policy by moving their plants South, may find that they have only exchanged the frying-pan for the fire. Many of the Southern States have enacted more drastic labor laws than can be found on our statute-books at the North. For instance, in Georgia a corporation cannot "black-list" its employees without incurring a fine of not less than $100, or more than $500, for each offence. Even South Carolina has felt the pressure of the labor question, and been obliged to adjust her code to new requirements. Manufacturers who desire an easy time, while they violate the Golden Rule continually in their relations to their work-people, will find themselves in trouble, whatever the section of country to which they choose to emigrate.

Boston is proposing to have

by which the mayor will be appointed for three years, and no city councillor or committee shall be able to draw directly or indirectly any sum from the city's treasury "for refreshment, carriage hire, or other personal expense." With this and a few other unnecessary leakages stopped, perhaps sufficient appropriation might be made to build schoolhouses for the three or four thousand children of Boston who now get their education in the streets because there is no provision made for them in the Modern Athens to be educated anywhere else.

A LABOR ROW.

There is trouble among the Massachusetts Knights of Labor. M. J. Bishop, State secretary and treasurer, in company with Grand Master Sovereign and another "Grand" official, locked out a number of delegates from the New Orleans Convention, and succeeded by this ruse in carrying their own measures. Some of the excluded delegates have sent out a circular, showing that the order has fallen among thieves, and that much of its property has been sold or conveyed to others for the apparent benefit of one or two of the officers of the organization. Sovereign and other leaders have tried to explain away these charges, but not to the satisfaction of the Knights. The National Trades Assembly, at its meeting in New Haven, last Sunday—when will workingmen learn that they can never have God on their side while they trample on his holy day?—proposed to form a new order. What they need is, not a change of name, but of principles and leaders.

ESSENES.

A lodge of Knights of the Ancient Essenic order is to be established in Waltham, Mass. It is a pioneer lodge, being the first ever established in New England. The order itself claims to be older than Freemasonry. Let the "ancient and venerable" society of Hiram look to her laurels.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Liquor Legislation in the District.—International Arbitration.—To Regulate Labor Disturbances.—The Anti-trust Decision.—Debs Defeated in the Supreme Court.—Religious Items.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 23, 1895.

LIQUOR LEGISLATION.

Representative Morse, of Massachusetts, has introduced a bill in the House to amend the liquor law of the District of Columbia in two important particulars—to prohibit brewers selling or delivering beer on Sunday, and providing that all places where liquor is sold in quantities of less than one pint shall be termed bar-rooms and be required to procure bar-room licenses as provided by existing law. These amendments have been made necessary by the construction of the present local officials, it having been decided that there was nothing in the present law to stop brewers from selling and delivering beer on Sunday, and that an incorporated club may dispense intoxicating liquors to its members and to invited guests without being required to procure a bar-room license. The prospect of getting these amendments adopted at this session of Congress can hardly be considered encouraging, but the temperance people are going to do their best to do so.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

President Cleveland granted a personal interview to the bearer of the petition asking for legislation looking to the establishment of an international tribunal of arbitration, which was signed by many members of the British Parliament and other influential Englishmen, and assured him of his interest in and sympathy with the movement.

The troubles attending the Brooklyn strikes made the favorable reporting of the bill for

THE SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES

by a national arbitration commission, from the House Committee on Labor, particularly timely. The committee accompained its report with letters from Samuel Gompers, John W. Hayes, H. C. Denning and J. H. Sovereign, the well-known labor leaders, approving the bill. The report says: "Congress is the proper body to authorize the appointment of such a commission, as it is composed of members coming from all parts of every State."

THE ANTI-TRUST DECISION.

The decision of the Supreme Court in the case brought under what is known as the Sherman anti-trust law, against the sugar trust, although not unexpected among lawyers, including the Attorney General himself, has excited much interest. The decision, which was delivered by Chief Justice Fuller, is in effect that the formation of the sugar trust was no violation of the law. Attorney General Olney says it was because of his belief that the Supreme Court would take just that view of the matter that he had not attempted to proceed against other trusts under the Sherman law. The Supreme Court was not, however, unanimous in its decision. Mr. Justice Harlan dissented, and in a vigorous opinion gave his reasons therefor, which I quote in part, because they represent the opinions of a large majority of those who reason from equity rather than from a knowledge of legal statutes: "If this combination, so far as its operations directly affect interstate commerce, cannot be restrained or suppressed under some power granted to Congress, it will be cause for regret that the patriotic statesman who framed the Constitution did not foresee the necessity of investing the national government with ample power to deal with gigantic monopolies which hold in their grasp, and can injuriously control in their own interest, the entire trade among the States in food products that are essential to the comfort of every household."

The Supreme Court refused to issue a writ of error in the strike leader, and his associates, but consented to hear arguments for a writ of habeas corpus, and directed that the prisoners might be released on bail pending a decision. It will be remembered that these men were sent to prison under a clause of the Sherman anti-trust law.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

Rev. Dr. James L. Hill, of Salem, Mass., who will be remembered by those who attended the Christian Endeavor convention at Cleveland, last year, for the speech he made announcing the choice of Washington for the 1896 convention, was one of the speakers at the third annual convention of the District Christian Endeavor Union just closed. He preached a splendid sermon on "Atonement" Sunday morning, taking the words of St. Paul—"If he hath wronged thee or oweth thee aught, put that on my account. I, Paul, have written it with my own hand. I will repay it. Albeit I don't say to thee how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides"—for his text. On Monday Dr. Hill was entertained at lunch by the '96 convention committee.

Senator Jarvis, of North Carolina, delivered an address to the Colored Young Men's Christian Association Sunday evening that was full of sensible advice to the race. He laid great stress upon the necessity of purity in their teachers, spiritual as well as temporal.

Mr. Herant M. Kiretchjian, a Constantinople collegiate, delivered an interesting address Sunday morning from the pulpit of the Eastern Presbyterian church, on the present status of the Armenians from a religious standpoint, which he will repeat at the church of the Epiphany to night. He speaks from personal knowledge.

—Our brother, Rev. T. H. Acheson, has the sympathy of his many friends throughout the church. Three times lately has death entered his home, calling away first the wife and mother, and then the two little babes. It is a great comfort in a time of great grief to know that our times are in God's hands; that he has an end in view worthy of himself in everything he does, and that hereafter we shall see how "all things work together for good to them that love God." These providences which now bring tears to our eyes and make our very hearts bleed, seen hereafter in their true light, will fill with joy and occasion songs of praise. It is the Saviour who says: "Let not your heart be troubled ye believe in God, believe also in me." With such a blessed assurance we can wait until in clearest light all is made plain.—Reformed Presbyterian.

REFORM NEWS.

THE NEW ENGLAND SECRETARY IN OHIO.

WASHINGTON COURT HOUSE, O., Jan. 22, 1895.

I have drifted into this combination depot, en route for Greenfield, predestinated to a two-hours' delay. Freight and not passenger traffic evidently rules in accommodations at this station. Judging from wall-notices here, as elsewhere in this region, the Knights of Pythias are forging to the front in the secret empire. Certainly no one of that order need be ignorant of a place or the time where and when he may meet his "kith and kin," in the sanctum and at the altar of their pagan worship, if sufficiently erudite to read the English language, or interpret their mystic symbols.

Some fifteen years ago I visited this region and found many friends, some of whom remain until the present. It is cheering to note that not all traces of Christianity have been obliterated, or the old landmarks of our holy religion swept away by the dragon-flood of papal superstition and Christ-rejecting worships pouring from the mouth of "the Supreme Architect" of moral, mental and religious chaos.

There are breakwaters and dykes that tower above the wreck, however, and which even the deluge cannot overturn. Dr. Morton, in a thirty-two years' pastorate at Cedarville, has built up a fortress against which the gates of hell dash their unavailing force. It was my good fortune to meet the doctor and speak to his people last Sabbath morning, and to be greatly refreshed in spirit, both in the well filled house of worship and his model Christian home. Rev. J. C. Sproul, though less venerable in years, is no less faithful to the flock over which the Holy Spirit has made him overseer. His home, his study, his larder and the good-fellowship of his family were placed at my disposal, and the kindly offices of his estimable household I shall ever bear in grateful remembrance.

Union services had been arranged for the evening in the hall, at which I was invited to speak. The audience room was well-filled, and four of the pastors, I was informed, were present, and so prepared to detect and protect their flocks from any heresies that might be promulgated. There was marked attention on the part of all as I spoke of heaven and hell, of God's claims and man's responsibility, and, as best I could, I urged each one to accept Christ as a personal Saviour. I learned, incidentally, that some present considered my remarks about the state of the finally impenitent "strange doctrine," owing, presumably, to ignorance of the Scriptures or to a delusive faith in "the lion's paw or strong grip" of some system of devil-worship, promising to "raise them from the grave of ignorance" and give them "King Solomon's pass" to the "Grand Lodge above." "The lot is cast into the lap, and the whole disposing threreof is of the Lord."

Xenia has changed less than most towns to which I return after an absence of fifteen years. The old landmarks remain.

Dr. Carson is rounding out a pastorate of a quarter-century in the Second U. P. church, hale and hearty, and full of zeal. Dr. Morehead is older, but still retains that magnetic spiritual enthusiasm so inspiring to good works. Dr. McDill extended a friendly hand, with most cordial greetings, and all will do what in them lies to make the approaching convention efficient and memorable in the reform record of the Buckeye State.

The place of meeting has for me one feature of peculiar interest. It was in this Second U. P. church that I was made a Mason by "Worshipful Master" E. Ronayne. The lodge was opened in due form on the third degree for work, with Elder John Finney in the east, Dr. Wm. Wishart in the west, and Bishop Wm. Dillon in the south, worthily representing the wisdom, strength and beauty of the fraternity. Rev. Bro. Coggswell officiated as conductor, while I was the worthy and well-qualified candidate for the honors of the occasion. Many incidents escape my memory, but I have not forgotten the hearty and prolonged applause with which I was greeted when led from the anteroom into the arena, "neither naked nor clothed, neither barefoot nor shod," hood-winked and cable-towed, to be inducted into the mystic rites of ancient sun-worship. To say that I loathed and abhorred the whole system of blasphemy more fervently than ever before is but faintly to picture my feelings of disgust and contempt as I was manipulated around the altar of Baal, and at the end of a most degrading pantomime dubbed a "brother" to Jeff. Davis, Arnold, and a host of civil outlaws and renegade preachers. I had read the horrid tale of initiation. I had heard it from the lips of President C. G. Finney, Elder David Bernard, and scores of others who had been betrayed into the heartless clutches of this Briarian monster. I had even seen it performed upon the image of God, but never, until wrapped in its winding-sheet, crimsoned with the blood of its victims, and lowered into its grave, echoing with curses from homes and hearts it had made desolate, and reverberating with the fruitless cries of the countless host it has sent to writhe and groan and curse in the "Grand Lodge above" (!), did I have any adequate conception of its fathomless depth oi iniquity. How can any man, who is not a knave or a fool, attempt to justify such a hell-born monstrosity, or how can any minister say that the church is wrong in opposing it, and that when the Masons are compelled to leave the church they should go out in a body and "I will go with them"?

SO. CHARLESTOWN, O., Jan. 24.—Either I am unfortunate in making connections, or this country is especially unfavorable for local travel. I am booked for a talk at Cedarville, eleven miles distant, but am obliged to wait for six and a half hours for a train. I have been out distributing bills for the convention, and trying to find some of the ministers. I am told there are three resident clergy in the place, but they seem to be from home, or perhaps too busy or otherwise indisposed to entertain "strangers."

While at Greenfield, I was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Carr, who showed me much kindness. Mr. Templeton also put me under renewed obligation for hospitality and the use of his horse and car-

MASONIC RELIGION—LUSTRATION, BAPTISM, CREED AND PRAYER.

CHICAGO, Jan. 23, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Let us do the Masons justice, even though it is difficult to tolerate them as the foremost Protestant secret society in the world—the Jesuits of the Roman Catholic hierarchy being their peers in importance as promoters of "works of darkness." It is true that Freemasonry is a religion, and a dangerous one, since it professes to save men from the wrath of God—a dogma that is working incalculable evil by leading men away from the true salvation contrived by the Creator of all men through the precious blood of Christ. It is the contemplation of this dogma, and a misunderstanding of it, that has, undoubtedly, led some very good people to believe that the Masonic theology requires its adherents to receive "Masonic baptism," as Christians on entering Christian churches receive Christian baptism.

We should remember that Freemasonry proper, notwithstanding all the villainous changes which it has undergone in the hands of infidels and scoffers at Christianity since the beginning of the eighteenth century, is the descendant of ancient paganism, whose mysteries and ceremonies it has adopted and perpetuates; and that among these is what is known as "Lustration," which is thus described by Dr. A. G. Mackey in his "Encyclopædia of Freemasonry:" "Lustration is a religious rite practiced by the ancients, and which was performed before any act of devotion. It consisted in washing the hands, and sometimes the whole body, in lustral or consecrated water. It was intended as a symbol of the internal purification of the heart. It was a ceremony preparatory to initiation in all the ancient mysteries. The ceremony is practiced with the same symbolic import in some of the high degrees of Masonry." Page 478.

On page 107 of his Encyclopædia, Dr. Mackey thus treats of "Lustration" and Masonic Baptism:" "The term 'Masonic Baptism' has been recently applied in this country by some authorities to that ceremony which is used in certain of the high degrees (of Masonry), and which, more properly, should be called 'Lustration.' It has been objected that the use of the term is calculated to give needless offense to scrupulous persons who might suppose it to be an imitation of a Christian sacrament. But, in fact, the Masonic baptism has no allusion whatsoever, either in form or design, to the sacrament of the church. It is simply a lustration or purification by water, a ceremony which was common to all the ancient initiations,"

As the "ancient initiations" here referred to were a part of the ancient pagan mysteries on which, as we have seen, modern Freemasonry is founded, it cannot be deemed, as Dr. Mackey says, even a designed imitation of the baptism practiced among Christians, but a washing ceremonial common to pagan rites. The higher degrees of Masonry, however, make it an adjunct of that Masonic plan of salvation which is perpetuated by the fraternity without the mediation of Christ, the Saviour of men. As the doctrine is not a Christian one, so the "lustration" is not a Christian sacrament.

Respecting the Masonic religious belief, Dr. Mackey, in his Encyclopædia, page 192, thus defines "A Mason's Creed:" "Although Freemasonry is not a dogmatic theology, and is tolerant in the admission of men of every religious faith, it would be wrong to suppose that it is without a creed. On the contrary, it has a creed, the assent to which it rigidly enforces, and the denial of which is absolutely incompatible with membership in the order. This creed consists of two articles: First, a belief in God, the Creator of all things, who is therefore recognized as the Grand Architect of the Universe; and, secondly, a belief in the eternal life to which this present life is but a preparatory and probationary state. To the first of these articles assent is explicitly required as soon as the threshold of the lodge is crossed. The second is expressively taught by legends or symbols, and must be implicitly assented to by every Mason, especially by those who have received the third (Master's) degree, which is altogether founded on the doctrine of the resurrection to a second life."

The "resurrection" here referred to is performed by "the grip of the lion's paw"—the hand of the Master of the lodge, and Christ has no part therein.

"In ancient times," continues Dr. Mackey, quoting from the Grand Lodge of England, in 1717, "Masons were charged in every country to be of the religion of that country or nation"—whether pagan or not—"whatever it was; yet it is now thought more expedient only to oblige them to that religion in which all men agree" (theism) "leaving their particular opinions to themselves; and this is now considered universally as the recognized law on the subject."

Finally, as to lodge prayers, Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry, page 369, informs us that "all the ceremonies of our order are prefaced and terminated with prayer, because Masonry is a religious institution, and because we thereby show our dependence on, and our faith and trust in, God."

Let us give Freemasonry credit for being a "religious" institution, in-so-far as paganism is a religion; and, as we have shown, its religious imitations of apparently Christian ordinances are drawn from heathen practices and rites. Mackey tells us, in his Encyclopædia, page 641, that "Freemasonry is not Christianity, nor a substitute for it." Let us take his word for it. It is nothing but pure, unadulterated paganism, with a theology so nicely balanced that it fits either Baalism or deism in any other form; but it is Christian in nothing. FELIX.

WANTED—A STODDARD IN IOWA.

DE KALB, Iowa, Jan. 19, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have been a reader of the Cynosure since it was small and published by Ezra A. Cook. It has sown much seed beside all waters, and ministers and other agents have planted and watered it. In the providence of God, it seems easy now to gather the fruit. Numbers have been snatched from the lodges, as brands from the burning. Good men are fast leaving the fraternities where reform work is being done.

We need a man who will prove himself a successful worker in the anti-secrecy reform—such a man as Bro. W. B. Stoddard—to work in Iowa.

Without a worker to rekindle the watchfires of reform, interest will be lost in that which promotes loyalty to Christ in his own church. It is now true, to some extent, though the seed which has been sown will bring fruit if there be the right effort.

There are Christian fathers whose sons have joined the lodge, and though they are anti-secrecy men, they have no financial interest in the reform. This would not be so true if workers were in the field, but many of them would become subscribers to the Cynosure and hearty supporters of the cause it represents. Anti-secret "faith without works is dead," it being alone.

There are Christian reformers enough here, in Iowa, to abundantly support a worker in the field. May God, in his mercy, send us a Stoddard, and help us, for Jesus' sake, to exercise faith in his Son, and show it on the anti-secrecy line by helping on this reform, though it be a cross, and save our sons and our neighbors from the Christ-dishonoring lodge. CYRUS SMITH.

FREEMASONRY AND ITS RELIGION.

(A DELAYED LETTER.)

MEDARYVILLE, Ind., Dec. 11, 1894.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I saw in the Cynosure a quotation from an address of a certain Methodist minister in behalf of secret societies, in which he said that if he were to drop dead on that platform the members of his order would at once notify his wife by telegram. But what would become of his poor soul? "Not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." What kind of a telegram would be sent to heaven?

Let us see what kind of an order Masonic sun-worship is. Turn to Ezekiel 8:16: "And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and behold at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men with their backs toward the temple of the Lord and their faces toward the east; and they worshiped the sun toward the east." Verse 18: "Therefore will I also deal in fury; mine eyes shall not spare, neither will I have pity; and though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them." Now, by reading Masonic books, we find that Masonry is taken from ancient Baal or sun-worship. I once heard a Freemason say that King Solomon was a Mason. I thought he was ignorant, and did not think that other Masons believed such a thing; but by inquiring of other members of the order, I found out that there were many believed that Solomon was a Mason. Now I do not think that he is much credit to Masonry after he is supposed to have joined. We will suppose that Solomon and Hiram, king of Tyre, and Hiram, the widow's son, were Masons, and that the widow's son was killed in the temple, as the Freemasons claim, because he would not give the secrets of Masonry to those that were not entitled to them; that he was buried, and that an evergreen tree grew up over his grave; that Solomon raised him to life by the "lion's-paw grip," as the Masons say.

Let us try to find out what kind of a religion Masonry or Baal-worship is. I think you will find by the Bible that the worship of Ashtoreth and Baal-worship is of the same nature. "For Solomon went after Ashtoreth, the goddess of the Zidonians, and after Milcom, the abomination of the Ammonites; and Solomon did evil in the sight of the Lord, and went not fully after the Lord as did David his father. Wherefore the Lord said unto Solomon, Forasmuch as this is done of thee, and thou hast not kept my covenant and my statutes which I have commanded thee, I will surely rend the kingdom from thee and will give it to thy servant." 1 Kings 11:5, 6, and 11. Now read 1 Kings 16:30: "And Ahab the son of Omri did evil in the sight of the Lord above all that were before him; and it came to pass as if it had been a light thing for him to walk in the sins of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, that he took to wife Jezebel the daughter of Ethbaal, king of the Zidonians, and went and served Baal and worshiped him."

This appears to be the same kind of worship that Solomon practiced, and the ten tribes were taken from him for his idolatry. As Ahab had introduced it into Israel, let us see what becomes of it. 1 Kings 20: "And the Lord said, Who shall persuade Ahab that he may go up and fall at Ramoth Gilead? And one said, on this manner, and another said, on that manner; and there came forth a spirit and stood before the Lord and said, I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And he said, Thou shalt persuade him and prevail; also go forth and do so." Read verse 38: "And one washed the chariot in the pool of Samaria, and the dogs licked up his blood, and they washed his armor, according unto the word of the Lord which he spake." So Ahab did not come to a very good end with his Masonic, or Baal, worship. "And he said: I have an errand to thee, O captain; and Jehu said, Unto which of all us? Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, I have anointed thee king over the people of the Lord, even over Israel; and thou shalt smite the house of Ahab thy master, that I may avenge the blood of my servants the prophets, and the blood of all the servants of the Lord at the hand of Jezebel." 2 Kings 9:5, 7. That does not speak well for false worship. Now read Rev. 2:20: "Notwithstanding, I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication and to eat things sacrificed unto idols." So we can see that the same false doctrine was still in existence in the time of the New Testament; and if there ever was false worship in the world I think that there is to-day. Think of a preacher of the Gospel going through the mock ceremony of Moses and the angel of the Lord appearing to him in a bush; and they call this organization "the handmaid of religion."

JOHN MCFARLAND.

OBITUARY.

ELDER ARCHIBALD MEGREW

was born November 26, 1809, in Allegheny county, Penn.

In 1833 Mr. Megrew was converted, and united with the Church of God at its organization. In 1836 Mr. Megrew removed to Ohio and entered the ministry of that church, continuing in the work for over forty years, enduring the hardships of pioneer life on a circuit and at times in charge of stations. In 1851 he moved to Iowa, continuing his ministerial work. He preached for the people in various localities, being employed by the Board of Missions of Eastern Pennsylvania, and afterward stationed at various places.

He resided in Grandview township, part of the time on a farm, from 1859 to 1875, when he removed to Letts, which has been his home until July 6, 1894, when he was called to his reward, aged 84 years, 7 months and 10 days.

Elder Megrew wss a man of strong convictions, deliberate in thought, word and deed, and carefully investigated all the questions of the day. To him God's truths were eternal, and changed not with the so-called "progress of the ages." The word of God was his guide and compass, and he faithfully tried to decide all things by its teachings. As a man sincerely opposed to secret societies, and a long-time subscriber to the Cynosure, he wondered much that Christians would affiliate with organizations whose members call their creed a religion, but exclude the name of Christ, who was his hope, from their rituals.

While for years an invalid and a part of the time partially paralyzed, his mind was clear and he took an active interest in everything around him, especially the church and its ministers and the friends of earlier years, and more and more enjoyed their companionship and sympathy.

Though he had been a constant sufferer for years, his last illness was short, his last hours peaceful. A few hours before his death a friend asked: "Is the Lord precious to-day?" He replied: "Yes," faintly but firmly, and never spoke again. Thus passed away one who had lived a long and useful life.

Short services were held at the house, and the funeral sermon was then preached in Grandview at the Methodist church by Elder M. S. Newcomer, of Cedar Rapids, who also conducted the services at the grave. Text—Romans 8:28–39.

Elder Megrew was twice married: Dec. 8, 1831, to Hester Pifer, who died in 1849; and in 1850 to Miss Martha E. Hoff, who, with seven of his nine children, survives him.

IT'S A MILLSTONE

About a young man's neck to be a sufferer from nervous exhaustion, nervous debility, impaired memory, low spirits, irritable temper, and the thousand and one derangements of mind and body that result from, unnatural, pernicious habits, contracted through ignorance. Such habits result in loss of manly power, wreck the constitution and sometimes produce softening of the brain, epilepsy, paralysis, and even dread insanity.

To reach, re-claim and restore such unfortunates to health and happiness, is the aim of the publishers of a book written in plain but chaste language, on the nature, symptoms and curability, by home treatment, of such diseases. HOW TO USE SCRAPS OF BREAD.

Economy In a Direction of Which Most Housekeepers Are Ignorant.

A covered stone jar filled with bread crumbs is indispensable to a well appointed pantry. When slices of neatly cut bread are left from a meal, pile them up until you have enough for a dish of toast. There are three ways of serving it. If the bread is quite fresh when toasted, it may be lightly browned and served dry. If the bread is pretty hard, toast it brown. Have on the back of the stove a deep dish with two heaping tablespoonfuls of butter to a cup of boiling water and a little salt. Dip the toast quickly in and out of this and serve on a hot dish. For another kind of dip toast boil a pint of milk, season it with a tablespoonful of butter, salt and a very little pepper, and thicken slightly with flour. Let boil up once. Dip the toast in a dish of plain hot milk, put in a deep hot dish and pour the thickened milk over it.

If scraps of bread are left, cut them into inch squares, put them into the oven and toast very brown, then put away in a glass jar. If in a dry place, the cubes will keep an indefinite time. They are delicious in thin soups, and nothing nicer can be found to serve with a small roast than toasted cubes softened with rich gravy. The crumbs left from the cutting of the cubes should be dried thoroughly, then put on the bread board and rolled to powder or pounded in a pestle. Put the crumbs in a jar to use for breaded chops, oysters, meat "stuffing" and any of the hundred little economies into which bread enters quite as palatable as cracker crumbs.

A delicious supper for little children is made of toasted bread. Toast the scraps very brown and pound into small bits. A tablespoonful or two in a glass of milk make a light, nutritious lunch, and it will keep for weeks. If the bottled crumbs happen to gather damp, pour into a pan and set in a hot oven for a moment or two.

If you get tired of toast, steam the dry bread. Put over the fire a skillet of water, and when it comes to a boil set over it a tin steamer. Into this steamer put slices of bread, cold baking powder biscuits or cold light dough biscuits. Pile the steamer full if you like and lay over the bread a perfectly clean cloth; then put on the lid and let the thing steam for ten minutes. If the bread is very dry, it may take longer. Steamed bread should be served a piece at a time, as it is required to be eaten, for it dries quickly, but is a delicious morsel when eaten piping hot.

How to Make Memorandum Pockets.

Cut a piece of gray cardboard 21 by 4 inches and seven pieces 3 by 4 inches. Letter the latter with the days of the week. Lay them on the larger piece. Have all eight punched around three sides at the shoemaker's. When the smaller pieces cover the other, lace them together with Tom Thumb ribbon at the sides and bottom of the pockets thus formed. Blue or red is pretty as a color for this ribbon. Tie in suspending ribbons at the top and slip notes in the respective days' receptacles as memoranda are required.

How to Make Cheese Straws.

Roll thin a rich pie crust and spread thickly with grated cheese and a dash of cayenne pepper. Fold over several times, roll again and spread with cheese, repeating this process three times. Then roll out one-eighth of an inch thick, cut in strips 4 inches wide and cut this paste in sticks one-eighth of an inch wide. Cut some of the paste in small rings, place both on buttered sheets and bake in oven till light brown. Serve the straws through the rings like a bundle of sticks or tie in bundles with bright ribbons.

The earlier symptoms of dyspepsia, such as distress after eating, heartburn, and occasional headaches, should not be neglected. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla if you wish to be cured of dyspepsia.

Mothers will find "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" the best to use for children while teething. An old and well-tried remedy.

Babies

and rapidly growing children derive more benefit from Scott's Emulsion, than all the rest of the food they eat. Its nourishing powers are felt almost immediately. Babies and children thrive on Scott's Emulsion when no other form of food is assimilated.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 31, 1895.

WASHINGTON'S WARNING.

Washington's warning to the people of the United States to beware of secret political combinations, under whatever specious pretext they were organized, was timely, and of far greater significance in these days, when oath-bound secret societies are in the ascendancy. The need of his monition is proved by the records of the past, and by the events of the present era, which will soon become history, and for which coming generations will surely judge us.

Usually, the greater the professions of virtue made by these secret organizations, the greater is the probability that they may cover schemes of fraud. True worthiness, whether in society, politics or religion, is content to perform its work openly in unassuming garb, while deception strives to hide its deformities under its frayed cloak, that is in need of constant repair. With the bad, robbery is substituted for benevolence, even in many so-called "charitable" institutions that carry on their work behind closed doors and curtained windows. Secrecy may become the refuge of robbers, and in even a plausible cause is liable to suspicion among the good.

As has often been suggested, it is wrong to oppose these secret combinations, however hurtful to the people or the nation, by forming other secret societies. Such methods are unscriptural and un-American. Take Tammany, in New York, for instance. In the report of the Union League, another organization, quite as political in its work as Tammany itself, we find the following statements:

"The chief head and front of the offender in this municipality has been a benevolent organization known as the Tammany Society. It has been simply and only, so far as its managers are concerned, a business corporation or combination of individuals for private gain and public plunder. It has seized upon all the offices of the city, and has controlled, through legal machinery, the magnificent annual resources of the city, amounting to over $34,000,000. It has derived an enormous revenue from its system of assessments upon officers and employees of the city, from the highest to the lowest. It is hard to account for the suddenly acquired wealth of many of the managers of that association upon any other theory than that there has been in vogue a relentless system of plundering the city, the citizens and the employees of the government.

"The Tammany Society has aided and abetted the most gigantic frauds upon the ballot-box, and has found in these frauds its buttress and bulwark. Wherever vice is reeking and ignorance prevails, there it has found the chief support of its organization. In proportion as vice, crime and ignorance prevail in the most degraded portion of our city, in the same proportion has the strength of Tammany increased."

Washington was right when, foreseeing this desecration of the people's rights by such societies, he uttered his cautions against their iniquitous existence. Both Tammany and the Union League are useless excrescences on our republican body politic.

FOR SHORTER HOURS.

The secret unions, federations, brotherhoods, and what-not of organized labor, are still working to obtain a system of less hours to constitute a day's work. The effort has much to commend it as a matter of social economy; but the question as to the benefit which it would really bestow upon the working classes is still unsolved. If there were less saloons and other resorts of equally questionable character to tempt the unemployed to visit them and squander their wages "for that which is not bread," this problem would present a more desirable plea for its speedy solution. That eight hours of manual labor are enough for a healthful day's work has been widely admitted, thus dividing the twenty-four hours into three periods of equal length for labor, sleep and improvement.

Now, however, it is sought to reduce the working hours to six. Prominent among the advocates of this change is the Bricklayers' Union of Chicago, the agency which first obtained the eight-hour day in this city.

The records show that previous to that movement the bricklayers' organization was a branch of the International Union, but taking umbrage at the indecision of the controlling body concerning the proposed eight-hour system, it withdrew and independently succeeded in its cherished reform.

About this time in January the Bricklayers' International Union is gathering in convention in New Orleans. The Chicago union has appointed a committee to attend that convention and to propose a reunion with the International organization, the condition being that the latter will adopt the policy of making six hours a day's work. If this proposition is not accepted (although there are several leading union men who believe it will be), the Chicago bricklayers will make the move on their own account, trusting to other unions in the building trades to follow them, as before. It is not proposed that the demand for actual reduction of hours will be made this year, but will be inaugurated with the opening of 1896.

Until the result is known, we shall reserve further comment.

THE NEW "AUXILIARY" OF THE G. A. R.

We are indebted to an attentive correspondent for the following particulars relating to the new "Grand Army Association," auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic. The object and practice of this organization is to bring into close affiliation with the Grand Army the influence of wealthy and prominent men who were never in the army. It is an incorporated society.

Our correspondent, who writes from a town in New Hampshire, gives us an inkling of its "material" as follows: "Among the Springfield, Mass., outsiders are some who are not Masons; but here few if any of the original members of the G. A. R. were not Masons, while those recently taken in (here) are Masons of the worst kind—that is, they are young men, drinking men, and men trained in secrecy and trickery—such as never enter a church, and whose morals are anything but good."

In the Springfield (Mass.) Daily Republican of January 16, appeared a long report of a meeting of Wilcox Grand Army Post in that city on the previous evening, at which time the post "received its first citizen auxiliary, admitting well-known citizens into associate relationship."

From the comments made on that occasion, we have gathered such extracts as may serve to throw light upon this new society:

The ceremony was impressive, and the address of welcome was accompanied by scenes from the war thrown on a screen by a stereopticon. The hall was crowded, and besides the associates and Grand Army there were large delegations from the Sons of Veterans, the woman's relief corps, the ladies' aid societies and many others not members of these organizations gathered to witness the reception ceremonies. The exercises began at about 8 o'clock with Commander Derby and the officers of the post on the platform and Department Commander Wetherbee of Boston as guest of the evening The Temple quartette sang the "American Hymn," after which Commander Derby gave the charge to the associates. Department Commander Wetherbee made a short address of welcome to the associates, after which a collation was served. On reassembling speeches were made by Mayor Long, ex-Lieutenant-Gov. William H. Haile and Judge Maynard. Department Commander Wetherbee presented retiring Commander Derby with a fine gold watch on behalf of E. K. Wilcox post in recognition of his three years' service. Col. C. L. Young made a short address, and the exercises closed with "America."

Perhaps we can give no better idea of the ostensible purpose of the "Auxiliary" than is contained in the editorial notice of the meeting given in the Daily Republican:

"Wilcox Grand Army Post of this city does well to extend the privilege of associate membership to so many citizens who are only too glad to come into closer relations with the good work which the old soldiers are doing. This fashion of an adjunct membership is a growing one. The union will be good for the associates and of benefit to the post by enlarging its support and resources, for there is nothing in the way of reasonable aid the veterans can ask that would not be given with the utmost readiness—and any money contributed by outsiders must always be the least of the offering. Whatever else may fail in human relationship, the brotherly helpfulness of the Grand Army of the Republic is constant and sure. Year in and year out the 'comrades'—word full of intense meaning for those who shared a common peril and glory—are true to each other and to the families of all."

Attention is called to the lines emphasized in the foregoing extract. Possibly they express more than may be agreeable to the Grand Army. As Mayor Long told the assembled members of the G. A. R: "Your organization is not perpetual. As the years come and go your ranks will become thinner and thinner, but your friendship and love for each other will never end." This seems to hint quite plainly the design of taking in the "auxiliaries." The old soldiers are dying off, and unless replenished from the ranks of common citizens the G. A. R. will in a few years become extinct. To avert this inevitable result, the Masons and others who favor the perpetuation of secret societies will unite, as "auxiliaries," to save the order from dying a natural death. If any one can tell what other object there is in this new organization we should like to hear from him.

As American citizens, we accord all due honor to the officers and men of the Union army of 1861–65. For thirty years we have honored and caressed them, have given their leaders the highest offices in the government, and in many ways have expressed our heartfelt gratitude for their patriotism and valor, and we shall regret their passing away in the course of nature. The G. A. R was organized, among other objects, to cement these old soldiers in companionship, which, in itself, was commendable. In later years, however, it fell under suspicion as a faction allied to a dominant political party for the alleged aggrandizement of office-seeking leaders, in which purpose it has been accused of using secret and unfair methods. Whether these charges were true or not, they have served to weaken the confidence of outsiders in the integrity of the organization. One thing is certain, the G. A. R., as it exists to-day, has the reputation of being one of the worst Sabbath-breakers in the country, by traveling to its annual encampments in multitudes on that day.

As time goes on the original G. A. R. will disappear, and the "Auxiliary G. A. R." will supersede it, without a reasonable excuse for its existence; and to what results this new society may lead as a secret manipulator in public affairs none can tell. It will bear watching.

NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

JANUARY MEETING OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

The Directors of the National Christian Association met at the rooms, No. 221 West Madison street, January 19. The following members were present—President Chas. A. Blanchard in the chair; Messrs. T. B. Arnold, E. A. Cook, J. M. Hitchcock, E Whipple, H. F. Kletzing, J. A. Collins, and E B. Wylie.

Messages were received from Messrs A. G. Johnson and W. O. Dinius, explaining their absence.

Wm. I. Phillips met with the board, and rendered a hopeful report of his work as General Secretary and Publisher.

Mr. J. M. Hitchcock read a carefully written paper on the literature of the Association, and especially the Cynosure. The suggestions made by Mr. Hitchcock were considered at length, and a committee was appointed to devise a plan for the improvement of the publications of the Association. The committee consists of Rev. J. A. Collins, J. M. Hitchcock and Rev. E. B. Wylie.

The General Secretary's statement was the main feature of the meeting, and, notwithstanding the continued financial conditions from which the National Christian Association, with all other benevolent and charitable associations, suffers, the report was re assuring, and proves that the Association has friends who are appreciative of the many pressing needs of the continent-wide work that engages its efforts.

CHAS. A. BLANCHARD, Pres.
EDGAR B. WYLIE, Sec'y.

—From an exchange paper: "The Herald cannot live on resolutions and good words; we must have cash—and have it now." That is to the point. Will Cynosure subscribers take the hint?

—Rev. P. B Williams writes from Roseburg, Ore., January 23, that he has safely arrived at home from his trip to California and is resting for a few days before resuming active work on the coast.

—Rev. William Fenton, writing from St. Paul, Minn., last week, remarks: "The Pope's ban has made the people think about secret societies, and makes the foolish people who belong to them more uneasy than the ministers of Christ or God's own Word can. 'It is a 'muss' in the devil's own camp." It reminds one of Bryant's poem of "The Prairie Fire," in which a party of emigrants, confronted by a frightful prairie fire, cut away the grass on which they had temporarily halted, and applied a match to the grass just outside the clearing. Thus fire fought fire, and the emigrants were saved. Let the secret societies and the Pope wrangle, if innocents shall be saved from the lodges by their contention.

—A correspondent of the Christian Standard writes: "In San Francisco the Salvation Army has done more for the poor than the churches have done. I say this with due deliberation. It is the gospel of the Sermon on the Mount put into practice." When a man joins the Army, he leaves Freemasonry. Perhaps if some churches adopted the same rule, their deficiency in good works would be less visible.

—One of our New York exchange papers prints an extract from the letter of an old friend: "I thought I could not afford to take your paper," but nevertheless concludes that he cannot afford to do without it, and so promptly renews his subscription. The cost of the Cynosure to a subscriber is less than half a cent a day, and its readers frequently find enough in one issue to pay for a year's subscription. Moral—renew.

—Rev. Simpson Ely, Dean of the Bible School of Fairfield University, Nebraska, will be at the Nebraska State Anti-secrecy Convention, at Humboldt, where he is to present a paper on some topic connected with our reform. His "Ten Chapters Against the Lodge," which were recently printed in the Cynosure, have served to favorably introduce him to our readers, who greatly appreciate their excellence; asd we are confident that his paper before the convention will be equally acceptable.

—Mrs. Ballington Booth, wife of the commander of the Salvation Army, was in Chicago last week upon an errand of mercy in behalf of the fallen women with whom the city abounds. She lectured eloquently upon tbe subject at Central Music Hall on Thursday evening, and at Princess Rink on Friday evening. At the first meeting she obtained free-will offerings amounting to $3,000 for the establishment of a "rescue home" for the modern Magdalenes, to be controlled by the Salvation Army, and probably enough more money to insure success to the enterprise for which she so forcibly appealed. Such an institution, conducted by consecrated Christian men and women, deserves a most liberal support.

riage for a trip into the country. We called together on our old-time friends, Mrs. McWilliams and the Murry brothers, and found that neither years nor changes had dampened their ardor in the cause of reform. Mr. Beatty, whom I met on the street, gave a substantial expression of his interest, as did others, in meeting the necessary expense of the approaching convention.

As I remember it, my first visit to Greenfield was in 1874, to assist Past-Master Edmond Ronayne in working two degrees in Freemasonry. The Presbyterian church furnished temporary accommodations for the exposition, and the town was quite thoroughly stirred up at the time. It was the sower going forth to sow the seed, and no marvel if some fell upon stony ground and among thorns, to wither and perish. But not all was lost. The foot-prints are readily traced in the subsoil, though drifting sands have buried much that gave early promise of perennial growth. It is worth all the cost and sacrifice to find in after-years even a few who have the manhood to stand up and face the devil at every point of approach. The verdancy of some secretists is really amusing to one who has had experience in dealing with the craft. At Greenfield I was introduced to a gentleman, who assured me of his devotion to the cause of Christ. As he displayed the mystic symbol of a Knight Templar, our conversation naturally tended toward the center of gravity in that system. After assuring me that he had been greatly helped in his spirituality by the order, and that he had known a number who had been brought to Christ and saved through its influence, he asked: "Have you ever taken the sacrament of the Lord's Supper?" I replied, "Yes, but I have never taken the Fifth Libation of a Knight Templar;" whereupon he responded: "I have taken both, and they are perfectly consistent with each other." Parties standing by noticed the admission, and it gave me an opportunity to explain, which seemed rather to confuse than to edify my informant. Mr. Head should be more guarded in his assertions, or better far, he should repent of his sins and renounce the "cup of devils" if he would retain the confidence of either the friends or enemies of Baal-worship.

Mine host, at dinner to-day, hung out the jewel of a chancellor in the K. P. lodge. On paying a fair bill for a good dinner, and exchanging a few words on general topics, I alluded to his brotherhood, and remarked that I had been a little shy about swearing to keep other people's secrets before knowing what they were, and had tried to live in such a way that it would be unnecessary to protect myself by swearing my friends to keep mine; to which he replied: "I have found it necessary, and I would not give up my order for twice what it cost me." I said: "It looks a little suspicious when men claiming to be honorable, law-abiding citizens confederate together and swear to keep each others' secrets under penalty, as you confess to have done." It had never dawned upon him until that moment that he had made such a confession, and he seemed not a little perplexed to find some means of extricating his neck from the noose with which he had unwittingly garrotted himself.

Asking a man supporting the three links, of the number and prosperity of his lodge, etc., the inquiry as to whether they used a manakin or real skeleton, or a wax or plaster-of-paris imitation, brought out the desired information which I sought to use for his benefit in showing him "a more excellent way." Such incidents help to relieve the tedium of long delays in depots and hotels among strangers; and who knows but that the Master may use even trifles like these to break some man's chains, and deliver him from eternal burnings?

CEDARVILLE, Jan. 25.—The citizenship of this place was fairly represented in the meeting last evening. Rev. J. C. Sproul presided, and Dr. Morton made the opening prayer. I spoke for a time on the general featureso f the lodge system, and the interest justifies the hope that some good will result. W. B. Stoddard gave notice of the convention, and after the friends so disposed had made an offering in support of the cause, the meeting adjourned with the benediction.

I go to Xenia, where I am to speak to the theological students this evening, and fill up the time, while my son spends Sabbath with a U. P. church in Columbus. J. P. STODDARD.

THE COLLEGE AGENT IN THE SOUTH.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 23, 1895.

The American Missionry Association purchased the Slater school property from Mrs. Austin, a few years ago, and they have three or four missionary young ladies teaching there now. Miss Hubbard is the principal. I found the school arranged in three grades and taught in separate apartments. It seems to be managed very intelligently, and with the use of the best modern improvements.

These young ladies attend the A. M. A. Congregational church and Sabbath-school, in Mabry street. The Rev. B. A. Imes is the pastor. I became acquainted with him, while he was preaching in Memphis, Tenn. By invitation, I preached a reform sermon, on the Sabbath, in this church. The congregation appears to be intelligent and ready to receive the testimony of their faithful pastor, who is doing a good work amidst many difficulties.

There is also an A. M. E. church on Mabry street; the Rev. Mr. Morley is pastor. I preached there on Sunday morning, and showed them that slavery to sin and the lodge is worse than the slavery from which some of them were freed thirty years ago.

The University of Tennessee is also located at Knoxville, with some agricultural and mechanical departments. They have a regular West Point drill, as exercise, for all the students who are willing to learn military tactics. This is a popular institution, and Dr. Dabney, the nominal president, is most of his time in Washington, D. C. I found in the library some anti-secrecy books, deposited by the N. C. A. a few years ago; and I had hoped to give the little Lodge Lamp a pretty wide circulation here. But upon more particular inquiry I learned that there were five secret societies among the students of the university, and that the four principal professors were members of the lodge. The librarian placed one L. L. in the library; but he refused to distribute any. And the secretary of the Y. M. C. A., to whom he sent me, would not receive them. So I gave 18 or 19 to those I met on the campus, or in the halls, and went on my way.

On the 17th inst. I visited the college of the Northern Presbyterians, which is located at Maryville. Dr. Boardman, the president, invited me to lead the chapel exercises, and at the close, I gave a brief address to the students. I learned afterwards that some of them, a short time before, had taken the initiatory steps for forming a college secret society; which coming to the notice of the faculty, they put a stop to the movement. My address was said to be quite appropriate to the state of affairs, although I was ignorant of it. This institution is well-endowed, with large halls and dormitories, and numerous students. It has an able faculty, who are doing a noble work for the young of both sexes. I gave some fifty copies of the Lodge Lamp for distribution.

There are two institutions of learning in Maryville sustained by the Northern Quakers. One is a high school for white scholars, and graded. It is not large, having only about 75 students. The other is called the Freedman's Normal Institute, and has some 260 in its catalogue. It is especially designed for the education and training of teachers of colored schools, although it has many other pupils in the classes. I gave away a good many of the Lodge Lamps to the older classes of these schools; and I trust that they will remain free from the fetters of secretism.

Yours as ever, S. F. PORTER.

A lecture on secret societies.—About the A. P. A.—A Swedish deacon repels the Association.—Other matters.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 24, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Last Tuesday evening, at a meeting in the auditorium of the U. N. L. C. Seminary, of Minneapolis, conducted by Rev. E. G. Lund, vice president, and English professor of theology in the seminary, your agent was invited to address the students and faculty of the seminary and others, upon the subject of secret societies. The subject seemed to interest the audience. A challenge was given to the secretists to respond, but there was no response. Then opportunity was given for questions to be asked, which evoked the question: "What do you think of the A. P. A. society?" And the following reply in substance was given: "If the trumpet gives an uncertain sound, who shall prepare for battle?" The Bible gives no uncertain sound about secret societies, for the spirit of such societies is condemned by the Bible, Jesus Christ himself resenting the malevolent insinuation of his inquisitor, Annas, that he belonged to a secret society.

Last summer a deacon of a Swedish Lutheran church, under the influence of patriotic motives, undertook to join the A. P. A. society, but he was surprised and indignant when they attempted to tamper with his eyes by putting the customary pagan "hoodwink" over them; he resented that interference with his civil rights to the use of his own eyes. They told him that it was a harmless ceremony, but the deacon could not so regard it, and indignantly refused to have anything to do with them.

I think that all who love and obey the Saviour will agree with the deacon in that thing. The Lord Jesus Christ, who has all authority, is well able to lead all his own people against our common foes in his own way; and commands us not to believe them when they tell us that he is in the secret chambers, and not to go after them. The vultures may be there, but he is not. He said: "In secret have I said nothing."

Our State Legislature has just elected our governor, Knute Nelson, to the United States Senate. The governor is a Swede, and we think that his election is a wise choice, for we uniformly find that the Swedes in the United States are loyal to the Republic.

In our State Senate chamber, the other day, a Jewish Rabbi was a substitute for the chaplain and made an opening prayer while the Senators were standing. But what do our Senators care if their chaplain did crucify Christ? Their chaplain, Freemason Robert Forbes, is a bold champion of Masonic lying and devil-worship; he is pastor of a Methodist church in Duluth; but what do Methodists care if their pastors are misleading and devil-worshipers? Yours truly,

W. FENTON.

A PATRIOTIC SOUTH.

REV. MADISON C. PETERS BESTOWS HIGH PRAISE.

The Only Truly American Part of Our Nation—Southerners Are Patriotic and Honest—Remarks on Negro Domination. The Science of Self Support.

Having recently spent a few weeks in the south, I feel it to be my duty publicly to admit that I had until I enlarged my information by personal observation an entirely erroneous idea of the south, and I take this means publicly to apologize for those uncharitable thoughts. My lectures were on American lines, and my pleas for intenser Americanism and more enthusiastic loyalty to American ideas as laid down by the founders of our republic met everywhere with the heartiest response. If the tocsin of war should be sounded, a foreign foe invade our shores or an insurrectionary body arise in our midst, a million men armed to the teeth would come from the south and rally round tho flag of the Union. Why, the south is the only truly American part of our nation today. The south may yet have to be called on to save the north from her reckless immigration, which is now weakening and undermining the foundations of our social order. Rebel? That word must henceforth not be spoken. I believe that the south today grasps the hand of the north in a fellowship which has in it no misgiving nor deceit. The public men of the south are not, as with us, "professional foreigners," who have made public office a public steal. The southern men in public office are patriotic and devout, conscientiously American and personally the embodiment of integrity. But you say they do not believe in negro domination. Neither do we north. Enfranchising all the negroes immediately after their emancipation was practically one of the greatest mistakes ever made by any free government. In many counties and states the colored voters are in the majority, and a majority rule would take the government entirely from the property owners and place it in the hands of those who, with few exceptions, have no qualifications to entitle them to a voice in the affairs of the government. Negro domination would mean white damnation.

The solid south is broken and will break more and more if they are let alone. But let the next congress agitate a force bill, and self defense will solidify the south again. A suffrage limited to an educational qualification is the only solution of the negro problem. But illiteracy is not confined to the south. Our northern cities are thronged with foreigners as imbecile in their ignorance and degraded in their morals as were the rabble hordes that wrecked the republics of antiquity. Universal suffrage is a menace to free institutions. The ballot is in the hands of 16,000,000 men, 4,000,000 of whom never vote, 3,500,000 cannot read their ballot and 3,500,000 more who sell their vote. Disfranchise those who won't vote, and those who can't read, and imprison those who sell their vote, and we can solve all the political, social and moral problems that now confront this nation.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 3. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Advance, Endeavor!—Ex. xiv, 15-81; xv, 1, 2. (Christian Endeavor Day.)

Another anniversary of the Christian Endeavor movement! The splendid work of this God given movement has still gone forward, deepening and widening with each advancing year, and yet the end is not in sight. There is still work to be done "for Christ and the church," and the topic of "Advance, Endeavor!" is therefore appropriate just at this time. The command of God to the children of Israel at a critical moment in their march to Canaan was, "Go forward!" This is ever and always the command of God to his church and to his people, considered either as organizations or as individuals. The principle of the Christian life is advance. There is to be no standing still and no retreat until the heavenly Canaan is reached, and even then we shall advance.

Let us, then, as Endeavorers advance. Advance in Christian character, in missionary enterprise, in proportionate and systematic benevolence, in labors for good citizenship and in every good work that will advance the kingdom of Christ on the earth.

1. Advance, even in the face of difficulties. The Israelites are in a critical position. The Red sea is before them and the Egyptian army behind them, and there are murmuring and complaint within their own ranks. Yet God says unto Moses, "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." Opposition within! Opposition without! This is characteristic of the advancement of almost every good work. There are always some to oppose noble movements. The Christian Endeavor movement has not been an exception, though the opposition is rapidly dying out. But no work of God is to falter because of opposition. It is to go forward against all obstacles and difficulties.

2. Advance in the way God points out. God not only commanded the people to go forward, but opened up a way for them, and they followed it. God never commands us to do an impossibility. He will point out the way if we will only seek for it and follow it. God's way of meeting opposition is always the best way. Human methods usually increase the difficulties, but all obstacles vanish before divine methods. Amid all obstacles and difficulties to personal, society or church advancement let us search out the way by which God would have us meet them. That way will always be successful. The way that guides God's people will often confound his enemies, as the cloud was a light to the Israelites and darkness to the Egyptians.

3. Advance depending upon God. Moses and Israel did this. It was the salvation of the Lord. We should always depend upon God for success and not upon ourselves. "The Lord is my strength," sang Moses. "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon" should be our battlecry.

4. Advance with praise and gratitude to God (Ex. xv, 1,2). When the victory had been won, Moses in joyful acclaim sang praises of gratitude to God. Thus should all Christian workers advance.

Bible Readings.—Jer. vii, 24, 32-34; Acts xxviii, 15; I Cor. ix, 24-27; Gal. vi, 9; Phil. i, 9-11; ii, 12, 13; iii, 13, 14; II Tim. iv, 7, 8; Heb. vi, 1, 2; xii, 1, 2; I Pet. ii, 1, 2; II Pet. iii, 18; Rev. ii, 7, 10.

For a Thin Neck.

The most effective way of hiding a thin neck is not only to have an ornamental band of some kind round the throat, but festoons of beads or pearls or diamonds falling over the collar bone. It is easy to get these, and it is not difficult to arrange them, always provided that you can obtain the bars, which ought to keep the festoons in place. These necklaces vary from three to six rows. Some new bands for the neck take the form of a straight piece of tulle, black or white, gathered to the depth of about two inches and caught down at intervals by bars of diamonds or jet. These are singularly soft and becoming.—Kansas City Star.

Spartan Training.

Perhaps the children who are not "coddled" are happiest as well as hardiest in the end. At least those who have their share of sympathy and affection, while learning at the same time to scout at fear, are surely fortunate.

A young man who rode horseback to perfection was asked when and how he learned.

"Oh," said he carelessly, "when I was a little fellow, my father put me on a horse and told me how to ride. I was afraid and slid off, but every time I touched the ground he cuffed me and set me on again. So I found it cheaper to learn."

A certain stern Greenlander, when the breakers were riding highest over the rocks, would place his young son in a kayak and throw him into the surf. The little fellow, with the double paddle in his hand, would watch his opportunity, right himself as he descended, and then triumphantly paddle through the boiling sea to the little haven where the canoes land.

"You will drown your boy!" people used to say to this Spartan father, but the sage hunter of seals and whales would reply:

"If the boy cannot right a kayak in a stormy sea, he cannot kill a seal, and if he cannot kill a seal he cannot live in Greenland, and in that case he might as well die!"—Youth's Companion.

Mills College Girls.

Mills college girls, California, have Our Tramping club. One condition of membership is the ability to walk ten miles. They go out once a fortnight, sketching and making natural history collections at pleasure. They wear blouse waists, and skirts reaching to the tops of their shoes. This seems more like a story of English girls than of Americans, but possibly in the climate of California such long excursions are possible. They would be most unadvisable here, except as the gradually acquired result of careful, systematic training over much shorter distances. It is not the space in miles covered, but the enjoyment of each mile of the way that is the real test of a tramping party. To arrive at the destination with distressed countenances or quite cross, in consequence of overdoing it, it is to be hoped is not permitted to these eager Californians. The English climate has much to do with English habits of exercise, though their customs are a considerable factor. Both men and women here usually take a car in preference to walking when their digestion, their complexion, their appetite and their good spirits would all be improved by walking.—Philadelphia Ledger.

More Pathetic Than Humorous.

An aged couple living south of Brazil, Ind., who had devoted their threescore and ten to rural life and the making of a farm, sold their possessions for the snug sum of $16,000. When the purchaser called with a notary to close up the deal by taking the deed of title, the husband having signed and passed it to the wife, she positively refused to sign without a consideration, saying she had spent her life in making the farm and had never realized anything she could call her own, and now was her opportunity. The husband failed to satisfy her and secure the signature. Then the purchaser asked to know what she would take to sign the deed, fearful that she would be exacting beyond his inclination to comply. After a good deal of hesitancy she said she thought she ought to have $2, which he promptly handed her, and she signed the title. She turned over the silver dollars time and time again, laughing over her good luck. She said, "Well, well, this is the first money I have ever had in my life that I could call my own and spend it as I may wish to do to suit myself."—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The Popular Girl.

It lies within the power of every girl to become popular. My dear lass, if you imagine that in your particular case nature has been miserly in the dealing out of physical charms, let that not discourage you. Cultivate every girlish grace, plant in the fair garden of your soul the seeds of unselfishness, learn to be thoughtful of others, considerate of those with whom you come in contact, train your lips to smiles and forswear frowns, discipline your moods—those "pretty whimsies" that do so much to make or mar the sweetness of your character—by your own fearless frankness inspire others to confidence in you, share your every gift of soul ungrudgingly with those who fill your own particular world, comprehending that it is for this, in part, your lovely life was planned; be quick to sympathize with sorrow and with joy, and fostering every inherent faculty for good reap the harvest of pure happiness that lies in golden masses along the radiant pathway of the popular girl.—Christian Work.

Christian Endeavor Abroad.

Rev. F. E. Clark, president of the United society, has recently returned from a four months' trip to Europe. Though his health was much broken in the summer, he reports himself as quite well and strong once more, having had a few weeks of absolute rest in Switzerland and Italy. Of late, at the request of many Christian people in Germany and Scandinavia, he has been attending meetings in Berlin, Frankfort, Leipsic, Dresden, Copenhagen, Stockholm and Christiania in the interests of the Endeavor society. In all these countries he found much interest in the movement, especially in Germany, where already some societies have been formed since his visit, with a promise of many thousands in the years to come. He also attended special meetings in Great Britain for two weeks, addressing large gatherings of young people in different parts of England and Wales, Ireland and Scotland. In London 5,000 Endeavorers assembled in the Metropolitan tabernacle. While in Bristol no building large enough to accommodate the audience could be obtained, and two simultaneous meetings were held in the American style. So in Edinburgh, Dublin, Cardiff and other centers great throngs of Christian Endeavorers came together with their pastors and older friends.

Sound Advice.

Mother, when your child goes to a neighbor's house, don't ask as soon as he comes home, "What were they doing?" "How were they dressed?" and "Was Miss Jennie's beau there?" Don't, I say. Do you know you are teaching him a habit which will give him the unenviable reputation of a tattler and perhaps a liar in the end? That is putting it pretty strong, but if a child is bright enough to look around, taking in all the details to be repeated at home, is he not bright enough to manufacture and repeat yarns to please his mamma? The habit, once acquired, is hard to break.—New York Journal.

To Make the Waist Fit.

Every woman who possesses a loose fronted coat or jacket with a tight fitting back knows tho difficulty of keeping the back close to the figure. It has a most provoking way of falling away with almost every movement, and consequently it deprives the coat of the trim appearance it might otherwise have. An ingenious device has been made with a view to obviating this state of things. It consists of a spring steel band, which is attached to the inside of the coat from the side seams, so that it goes round the back of the waist, and while keeping the coat in place is not seen in front.

Children's Eyes.

Do not let children read in the morning before the sleep has been washed from the eyes. Never read by a failing light. If study must go on by gaslight, and this should not be allowed if possible to prevent, provide such child with one of the cheap brown or green cardboard shades to be had from stationers. A yellow shade should cover an electric light used to read by. Do not allow children to fall into the easy and injurious habit of rubbing the eyes at any unusual sensation in them. Give them the old rule—rub the eye with the elbow only, because you cannot.—Exchange.

A Widening Gulf.

Every school boy or girl who has read a little of Greek history knows how important a part the Eubœan gulf or channel, between the island of Eubœa and the mainland of Greece, has played in that history, but the gulf itself has a history as wonderful and interesting in its way as that of the people dwelling along its shores. According to the belief of some geologists, it has been created by earthquakes, and it is gradually growing wider.

It began, long before recorded human history, as a surface crack in the earth's crust, which became filled with water from the Mediterranean sea. In the course of time the gulf was widened by the breaking and settling of the rocks, each important step in the process being accompanied probably by severe earthquakes.

The latest occurrence of this kind was in the spring of 1894, when, during the earthquake that shook Athens and destroyed three villages in eastern Greece, a huge fissure, 34 miles long and varying from a few inches to 10 feet in width, was opened near the Grecian shore of the gulf. Along a part of the course of this fissure the ground sank so much that several yards were added to the width of the gulf.—Youth's Companion.

Five Little Brothers.

Five little brothers set out together
To journey the livelong day.
In a curious carriage all made of leather
They hurried away, away!
One big brother, and three quite small,
And one wee fellow, no size at all.

The carriage was dark and none too roomy,
And they could not move about.
The five little brothers grew very gloomy,
And the wee one began to pout,
Till the biggest one whispered: "What do ye say?
Let's leave the carriage and run away!"

So out they scampered, the five together,
And off and away they sped.
When somebody found that carriage of leather,
Oh, my, how she shook her head!
'Twas her little boy's shoe, as every one knows,
And the five little brothers were five little toes.

DRINKING IN SWEDEN

HOW A NATION BECAME ENSLAVED TO KING ALCOHOL.

An Extravagant Ruler Degrades His Country to Fill His Coffers With the Price of Misery — Royal Sheriffs Ensnared the Farmers—A Change Has Come.

The Swedes have not always been a drinking people. There was a time when they were sober, moral, brave, and as a result their word in international politics had weight, and the army of Sweden was considered to be invincible. But a relapse soon came.

During the last century, when Gustavus III came to the throne of Sweden, that country had a prohibitory law. Gustavus, who was an extravagant man, could not get income and expenditure to balance each other, and so he said, "If I only can get the farmers to drink, then I will get as much money as I want." He therefore built "royal distilleries" (krono brannerier) throughout the whole country and royal saloons (krono krogar) in every large village and especially near every church. In these royal saloons everything was royal. The bottles, the glasses—in fact, all that was closely connected with the liquor selling—bore the insignia of a royal crown.

The sheriffs, in royal uniform, were recommended to meet the farmer on Sunday in the churchyard and tap him in a friendly way on the shoulder, while reminding him of the excellent beverage in the royal saloon.

The priests were directed to announce the presence of the saloon near by and to recommend the inspiring brandy to their hearers from the pulpit, the result of which was that the farmers, their sons and hired men visited the saloon before the service through the recommendation of the sheriff and after the service through the recommendation of the priest; hence the proverb, the church dram (kyrko supen).

The king also employed the most skillful poets and musicians of the time, the foremost of whom was Carl M. Bellman, to sing the praises of Bacchus and Venus, and they were so successful that Bellman could at a later period of his life send a communication to the king advising him that he by his songs had been able to sing the worship of Bacchus and Venus into every house in the country, asking the king for a little extra encouragement of 300 daler.

Almost the only place where the farmer could sell his products was at the royal distillery, and the chief article he carried home for his products was brandy.

The result of all these efforts was that the degradation became so general that mothers often dipped lump sugar in brandy and gave it to the sons while yet on the breasts to make them familiar with the taste of liquor from infancy upward. The girls were saved from this ordeal, as it has always in Sweden been considered a disgrace for a woman to drink.

Here was a country in which personal liberty was enjoyed to its fullest extent, and what was the result? If a poet had been brought to the scene to describe the condition, he could not have done so in any better language than by perverting one of our most beautiful hymns and singing:

In the royal gin I glory, tow'ring o'er the wrecks of time.
All the blight of sacred story gathers round that curse of man.

All this work of degradation was not done without protest, it is true—there were ranks even then—but in those days it was easy to silence disturbers—either in a prison or in exile.

At last the army got tired of the conditions, and the king was assassinated at a masquerade ball by a captain. Bellman and others of his coworkers also died, but their work continued for many years.

In 1860 a young sailor came home from abroad saturated with total abstinence principles and brought his little influence against rum, with the result that in 1862 a petition signed by thousands was presented to the king, asking that the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors as a beverage be prohibited. It did not get any further than the king. In 1876 Mr. Eli Johnston of Brooklyn paid a visit to Sweden in the interest of the temperance cause.

From that time temperance organizations sprang up as if by magic, especially in the northern part of the country—that is, north of Stockholm. In some cities they had two columns in their temperance pledge—one for total abstainers and one for those who reserved the right to use beer and wine. In other cities, again, and in the country they struck out straight for temperance, and the effect was wonderful.

Sweden now ranks ninth as a bibulous country instead of first as formerly. Whatever change for the better has taken place is in spite of the Gottienburg system, which is protection for the trade.—C. Anderson in New York Voice.

Wine and Beer In Austria.

In Austria the use of wine and beer is almost universal. Especially is this true in the gay capital city, Vienna. Though abundantly supplied with exceptionally pure water, it is regarded by the citizens as unwholesome. Consequently a strong prejudice exists against its internal application. But an incipient revolution with regard to the unrestricted consumption of even the mildly intoxicating beverages used has begun in the famous cafe city.—Exchange.

ADULTERATION OF BEER.

Result of the Investigation of a New York Society of Moderate Drinking.

At the present time the evils inseparable from any form of alcoholic stimulation are greatly aggravated by the impossibility of obtaining any form of alcoholic drink which is not adulterated with the most poisonous and deleterious drugs. Several years ago there was organized in New York a society for the promotion of moderate drinking. It regarded itself as a temperance society, though not a total abstinence one. Its members were pledged to drink moderately. Recognizing the evils arising from the adulteration of liquors so universally practiced, the society was desirous of finding some brands of pure beer which it could advise its members to drink to the exclusion of every other. Accordingly a committee appointed for that purpose procured samples of the most celebrated varieties of beer direct from every principal brewery in the country, and a competent analytical chemist was employed to analyze them and detect what impurities, if any, they contained.

The result of this investigation showed that there is not a drop of perfectly pure beer brewed in this country. Instead of containing only malt, water and hops, every specimen of beer examined was found to be adulterated with rosin; aloes, a very powerful purgative, which irritates the rectum and tends to produce hemorrhoids; picrotoxin, a peculiar bitter principle derived from the seeds of Cocculus indicus and a poison so deadly that five grains of it are sufficient to kill the largest and strongest dogs, and many other drugs of an equally deleterious and dangerous character. Equally general and equally dangerous adulterations are made in every form of alcoholic beverage of which we have any knowedge.—New York Voice.

HOW DRUNKARDS ARE MADE.

By Degrees the Appetite Grows on the Unconscious Victim.

We often wonder how it is that sane reasoning beings become drunkards, especially when surrounded with evidences of the awful results of the drink habit.

The explanation is simple.

No one ever begins to use liquor with the expectation and much less the hope of becoming a drunkard. If it happens to produce pleasurable excitement, he repeats the dose now and again, but fails to note the fact that he is constantly increasing the quantity, and that the effects are becoming more profound. In fact, he thinks very little, if at all, about his danger, caring only for the effects. Even when the taste of liquor is offensive, as it usually is to those who become drunkards, he bolts it down or resorts to various means of disguising its taste.

The beginner is not aware of the fact that he is not quite himself while enjoying the pleasurable alcoholic excitement. His friend may not notice it at first, but it is not long until it becomes apparent to those who know him best and then to all who may see him or hear him speak. The victim may not be so oblivious to these mental changes that he honestly considers himself duly sober when he is visibly drunk from his head to his heels.

His first realization of his condition is when he finds it necessary to take liquor to make him feel comfortable. He has probably been taking it for this purpose for a long time without being aware of it.

What must be his thoughts and feelings when he first realizes that he is a dipsomaniac?—Pittsburg Commercial-Gazette.

Facts For Beer Drinkers.

I have treated nearly 7,000 cases of inebriety, and eight-tenths of that number originated from wine and malt liquors.—Albert Day, M. D., Superintendent of Washingtonian Home at Boston.

Beer drinking in this country produces the very lowest forms of inebriety, closely allied to criminal insanity. The most dangerous class of tramps and ruffians in our large cities are beer drinkers.—Scientific American.

Belfast has one license for drinkshops to every 37 families.

A petition has been presented to the Transvaal parliament against the employment of barmaids.

Four thousand of the 11,000 members of the Blue Cross Temperance society in Switzerland are reclaimed inebriates.

London hospitals are finding less use for alcohol in medicine—a hopeful sign. At one hospital the amount expended yearly has been reduced 85 per cent in 10 years.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VI, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, FEB. 10.

Text of the Lesson, Math. xviii, 1-14—Memory Verses, 2-4 — Golden Text, Math. xviii, 14—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "At the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" After the transfiguration Jesus cast a demon out of a child, foretold again His death and resurrection and wrought a miracle to pay the tribute money for Himself and Peter. Then follow the incidents of today's lesson. This was not the only time that the 12 or a portion of them talked of greatness in the kingdom.

2. "And Jesus called a little child unto Him and sat him in the midst of them." The little child was not afraid to come to a stranger. There must have been something winsome about Jesus that drew the children and the simple minded. How could it be otherwise? Object lesson teaching is the very oldest kind, for God began to teach this in the garden of Eden by the tree of life, the cherubim, the sword and the coats of skins.

3. "And said, Verily I say unto you except ye be converted and become as little children ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." The first thing is not position in the kingdom, but the qualification to enter the kingdom, and therefore the Lord said to Nicodemus that even he, good, moral, religious man, must be born from above, horn of water and the Spirit, ere he could see or enter the kingdom of God (John iii, 3, 5).

4. "Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven." The child came when called and yielded itself to Jesus for His pleasure without saying, I won't! or, What for? or, What will you give me? It had no requests nor preferments, but was content to be in Jesus' hands and dealt with as He might please. Happy child! Let us be like him—just to let thy Father do what He will, just to know that He is true and be still.

5. "And whoso shall receive one such little child in My name receiveth me." As soon as we come to Jesus and in simplicity receive Him we become children of God (John i, 12) and members of the body of Christ (Eph. v, 30). It is as if He said to the Father concerning each one, "Receive him as Myself, and if he oweth aught put that to my account" (Phil. 17, 18).

6. "But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in Me it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." As truly as Jesus appreciates and will reward every good thing done to His redeemed, so surely will He punish every evil thing done to them (Math. xxv, 45) or every good left undone.

7. "Woe unto the world because of offenses, for it must needs be that offenses come, but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh." There are stumbling blocks, many, both in the church and out of it, and there are many temptations to be offended, but Jesus said elsewhere that though we should be put out of the synagogue or even slain for His sake we must not be offended (John xvi, 1, 2). It is a privilege to suffer with Him and for His sake.

8. "Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off and cast them from thee. It is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire." There is fire, and it is as everlasting as life. It was prepared for the devil and his angels (Math. xxv, 41), but whosoever does not have his name in the book of life shall be cast therein (Rev. xx, 15; xxi, 8).

9. "And if thine eye offend thee pluck it out and cast it from thee. It is better for thee to enter into life with one eye rather than, having two eyes, to be cast into hell fire." The Lord Jesus who made these bodies and knows better than any one else the importance of each member says plainly that, if the losing of a hand or a foot or an eye could be the means of causing us to escape hell fire, it would be better far to lose that member than to keep it and let it lead us into hell fire, where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched (Mark ix, 42-48).

10. "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones, for I say unto you that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father, which is in heavon." However poor and unlearned may be the messenger who shall warn you to flee from the wrath to come, despise him not. His guardian angels are in constant communion with heaven (Heb. i, 15), and if we despise the messenger we despise the Lord Jesus, whom he represents (Luke x, 16).

11. "For the Son of Man is come to save that which was lost." The Lord Jesus would not have come from heaven and suffered for our sins if we could have been saved without Him, but knowing the realities of hell and the awful torment awaiting the lost He endured all things which He suffered to save the lost. The sailor boy had more of His spirit than many have today when he would not be shut up, but kept at the people till they were compelled by God's spirit to listen.

12. "How think ye? If a man have an hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine and goeth into the mountains and seeketh that which is gone astray?" Going astray is more serious business in the Lord's eyes than in ours.

13. "And, if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you he rejoiceth more of that sheep than of the ninety and nine which went not astray." How can we who have been led to receive Jesus realize more fully what we have been saved from and the cost of our salvation, that so we may be more truly grateful to Him who has saved us and devote ourselves more fully to Him that through us He may save others? Let us earnestly ask Him to be more filled with His spirit to this end, and as we read of the torments of the finally impenitent believe that God means what He says; then surely we shall greatly rejoice over one soul saved.

14. "Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish." It is plainly written that "God is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" (II Pet. iii, 9). In Ezek. xxxiii, 11, it is written, "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked." John iii, 16, shows the provision He has made for all, and John vi, 37, says that none will be cast out who come, while John x, 28, says that having received eternal life it is impossible that any power can pluck them out of His hand. Let us see to it, then, that we are wholly in Jesus' hands for the salvation of the lost and by His grace kept from being a stumbling block to any.

The drunkard not only injures and enfeebles his own nervous system, but entails disease upon his family.

EIGHT LIVES LOST.

FRIGHTFUL BOILER EXPLOSION AT MENDOTA, ILLS.

Five Story Brewery Building Completely Wrecked by a Boiler-Burst—Six Other Men Severely Injured—The Whole Town Shaken by the Shock.

MENDOTA, Ills., Jan. 26.—At 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon the main building of Henning's brewery in this city was wrecked by a boiler explosion, the concussion being so great that every building in the city was badly shaken. The building destroyed was five stories in height and filled with machinery. The force of the explosion completely demolished it, killing six men and badly injuring six others. The killed are: C. Seifert, foreman; David Wells, fireman; David Gheer, engineer; Lemuel de Shaso, iceman; Henry Pert, laborer; John Kennedy, a well-borer, of DeKalb.

The injured: James Love, Chicago, arm broken and head badly cut; A. McLeod, Chicago, head and face cut; George Parker, Chicago, head cut; F. M. Carpenter, badly hurt; William Long, badly hurt; Henry Varmore, badly hurt.

The Chicago men and Kennedy, of DeKalb, had but lately come here, and were engaged in sinking a well near the building. Up to a late hour no more bodies had been found in the debris, and a blinding snowstorm almost stops work, but it is thought more men are buried under tons of brick and beams. The loss of property amounts to over $100,000, and a large number of men are thrown out of employment.

Building Fell in a Heap.

The explosion seemed to have an upward tendency, lifting the building, and then everything fell in a huge heap in the center of the inclosure. All was excitement, and many were driven frantic with the thought that husband, father or son might be beneath the ruins. Women, bareheaded and wild with fear, braved the wind and cutting snow that some tidings of the injured might be learned. In the excitement a number of citizens received injuries in removing beams and lumber. Never before has this city suffered such a blow and many are the conjectures as to the number of dead at the bottom of that great heap of brick and mortar and broken machinery.

Larger Dead-Roll Looked For.

The work of removing the ruins is progressing slowly and it will be a day or more before the list of dead will be complete. When the explosion occurred every building in the city was shaken and men rushed to every conceivable place to learn the cause of the concussion and when the real cause and the terrible results were learned a gloom of sadness fell upon the town. The dead are men highly respected and several of them are prominent secret society members.

MENDOTA, Ills., Jan. 28.—Two more men were killed by the explosion in the Henning brewery than reported at first. These were Adam Biersheil and William Long. Two more are missing.

From the conclusion of the treaty of Berlin De Giers was the chief guardian of the foreign interests of Russia. April, 1882, on the retirement of Prince Gortschakoff he was advanced to the post of minister of foreign affairs.

FRIGHTFUL EARTHQUAKE HAVOC.

Loss of Life Enormous in the Convulsion That Destroyed Kuchan.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—A dispatch to The Times from Teheran gives further details of the destructive earthquake at Kuchan. The town was in ruins in three minutes. The loss of life was enormous. Most of the victims were crushed to death by falling buildings, but many were burned to death, the ruins in which they were entangled having caught fire.

Six hundred were entombed in a mosque while engaged in prayer. Six hundred other persons perished in the various baths. The survivors could obtain neither food nor water for three days, the telegraph lines having been destroyed. Many who escaped before killed by the earthquake perished from hunger and exposure. The weather was very cold.

LAKE THEIR GRAVE

Twenty-Six Souls Lost with the Steamer Chicora.

TOMBED IN THE LAKE'S ICY WATERS

Capt. Graham Gives Up All Hope, and Says the Boat Is Lost with All on Board, While Others Cling to the Belief That the Hull Still Floats—Steamer Sighted Off the Town Yesterday Morning—No Boats Found.

SOUTH HAVEN, Jan. 24.—There is scant room for any difference of opinion as to whether pieces of wreckage brought ashore here last night are portions of the upper works of the steamer Chicora. Steamboat and vessel men have concluded that there is no doubt that she is broken to pieces. Friends of Captain Stine and his crew have given them up as lost. Several different parties came in last evening with pieces of lumber which are claimed to be portions of the steamer's upper decks, etc.

Her Fate Undoubtedly Sealed.

The fate of the Chicora is undoubtedly sealed. She has foundered in Lake Michigan and twenty-six men have gone down with her. The outer edge of the ice here for a distance of two miles is strewn with wreckage from the foundered vessel. Mr. Morton, of the Graham & Morton line, and Mr. Hancock, the clerk of the Chicora, who laid off the last trip, are here, and recognize the wreckage as that of the Chicora. A statement of a man living north of this place that he saw the hull of a steamer just for a moment in a lull of the storm yesterday afternoon, gives hopes that the hull may still be afloat.

Description of the Wreckage.

Captain John Bowen last night sent the following message to Captain Graham at Benton Harbor: "There is wreckage in the outer end of the ice at this place for about two miles. As near as we can tell it is all of the upper deck forward, but we do not find any of the cabin. The pieces have a thickness of one inch with a lap joint, black outside, lead color inside. There ought to be some one here that knows more about the build of the Chicora than we do. We have found a copper coping two inches long that was taken out of the upper deck."

Capt. Graham Says There Is No Hope.

After reading the dispatch Captain Graham replied as follows: "That means that it is all over. The descriptions you send fully tally with my knowledge of the pieces found. The identification is perfect. There can be no further question or doubt. I know my boat, every timber of her, and it means that the whole ship has been pounded to pieces. She's gone. There's no more hope."

Feel Somewhat Reassured.

Messrs. Morton & Hancock became more hopeful at midnight and sent the following telegram to Captain Graham at Benton Harbor: "Have talked with Napier, Bowen, and others. * * * They say there is considerable more wreckage about one mile out from the piers. No boats or anything aft of the pilot house. The man that reports seeing a steamboat this morning is a sailor and says he is not mistaken. It looks to us from all we can learn as if the sea had carried away something forward and that the ship is all right."

List of Those Probably Lost.

If the Chicora has gone down she has carried with her the following as near as is now known: James R. Clarke, clerk, St. Joseph; Jesse Davis, porter, Benton Harbor; Grant A. Downey, oiler, Detroit; John Hodges, watchman, Baltimore; Nate Lynch, cook, St. Joseph; Robert McClure, chief engineer, Detroit; James Malone, pantryman, Chicago; Joseph Marks, wheelman, Benton Harbor; M. W. Morgan, head waiter, Benton Harbor; Joseph Pearl, passenger, St. Joseph; Thomas Robertson, watchman: C. D. Simons, first mate, Benton Harbor; Ed Stines, captain, St. Joseph; Ben Stines, second mate, St. Joseph, son of the captain; A. Wirtz, second engineer, Detroit; eight deckhands, names unknown; two firemen, names unknown; one coal passer, name unknown.

Captain Stines, Mate C. D. Simons, Engineer McClure, Nate Lynch, the cook, and Clerk James R. Clarke have families. The rest of the men are single.

MORE CHICORA WRECKAGE FOUND.

One of the Lost Vessel's Boats and Much More of the Cabin.

GRAND HAVEN, Mich., Jan. 26.—The finding of more wreckage of the Chicora is reported. The clerk's office door and one of the Chicora's boats, also much more wreckage of her cabin, are reported found. President Graham now believes that she foundered Monday afternoon and that she was torn to pieces by the floating ice and huge waves.

Reports that the steamer Petoskey had gone in search of the Chicora were false, as the Petoskey is at St. Joseph with miles of solid ice before her. Relatives of the lost crew have given up all hopes and searching parties have been sent to look for the bodies of the unfortunate men.

BENTON HARBOR, Mich., Jan. 28.—One living thing escaped from the wreck of the Chicora. It was a Skye terrier called "Rough," which came ashore last Tuesday night to a farmer's house eight miles north of this place.

ON TRIAL FOR CONSPIRACY.

Eugene V. Debs with His Comrades to Go Before a Jury.

CHICAGO, Jan. 25.—Eugene V. Debs and his associates in the American Railway Union were called for trial before a jury of peers for the first time, though they had just been released on bail from serving sentences of six and three months in the Woodstock jail. The first of the conspiracy indictments was taken up and the work of impaneling a jury was begun before Judge Grosscup in the United States district court. When the court adjourned nine men had been placed in the custody of a United States marshal. They were accepted as jurors by counsel for the government, but not by counsel for defendants, who will pass upon them today.

Debs said Woodstock was a model jail. Said he: "Sheriff Eckert, Mrs. Eckert, and their daughter treated us as if we were members of their own family. Our food, while plain, was substantial, well cooked, and abundant; we had the same that supplied the sheriff's table. Last evening we had a farewell reception and entertainment, in which Mrs. Eckert and Miss Eckert took part. We had music and recitations and a good time generally. Howard sang 'The Girl I Left Behind Me,' and wound up with 'Home, Sweet Home,' I recited, and every one contributed to the entertainment. When the time came for leave-taking this morning everybody expressed regret at our departure Mrs. Eckert and her daughter said it seemed like the breaking up of the family, and there were tears in some eyes. We have nothing but words of praise for our hosts at Woodstock jail."

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—After two days' work a jury in the Debs' conspiracy case has been obtained and today the taking of testimony will probably begin.

LULL IN THE STRIKE.

Brooklyn's First Quiet Day for About Two Weeks.

BROOKLYN, Jan. 28.—Master Workman Connelly has sent the following letter to President Lewis, of the Brooklyn Heights Railway company:

"SIR:—As master workman of district assembly 75, K. of L., of which organization the men in your employ on Jan. 13, 1892, are members, I offer you the services of these men upon the terms offered to you for signature by the executive board of district assembly No. 75, K. of L., on Dec. 26, 1894, or upon the terms of the agreement which existed between the Brooklyn Heights Railroad company and district assembly 75, K. of L., during the year 1894, as the terms of agreement which you shall accept, to govern the relations between employe and employer during the year 1895."

BROOKLYN, Jan. 28.—Were it not for the scarcity of cars yesterday one would not have thought that one of the biggest strikes in the history of Brooklyn was in progress. Church-goers had to walk to church in many instances, or take chances in the enormous crowds which took possession of the cars. Otherwise there was perfect calm. Large crowds assembled around the stations, where military guards are stationed, but there was no violence there, and the bantering the troops received was of a good-natured kind. Those in position to draw conclusions from facts, and without prejudice, say that the strike is about ended. The companies seem to be in a position to run their cars. They are not skilfully operated, and throughout the day there were many collisions and there was much bumping together, but there was no accident of a serious nature.

The railway officials declare that the strike has practically ceased to exist. Many of the strikers are said to be applying for work. All the officials declare they have more applications than places and yesterday for the first time no wires were being cut. Master Workman Connelly does not agree with this. He says the railways are crippled for want of hands, and that he has no intention of calling off the strike.

FARM FIELD AND GARDEN

Mending Grain Sacks.

Mending the holes in grain sacks is a task that the farmer's wife dislikes; hence the holes gnawed by mice and rats are often stopped with a corncob or the sacks are thrown away. But here is a plan suggested by American Agriculturist that proves to be what every farmer needs. The articles needed for mending grain sacks are an old sack that may be cut up for pieces, a batter made of flour and cold water, a hot flatiron and an ironing board to fit inside the sacks. Place the board in a sack, with the hole to be mended on the upper side. Trim away the raveled edges with the shears or a sharp knife. Cut out a patch having at least an inch margin larger than the hole. On this margin apply a coat of the flour paste, place the patch in position and press it thoroughly with the hot flatiron. The batter penetrates both patch and sack and very firmly unites them. Pieces of denim, ducking or other stout material may be used where bagging is not available. The process is so rapid that 100 sacks may soon be repaired. Carpets may be neatly mended in the same manner without removing them from the floor.

Rules of Rotation.

As laid down by the Florida Times-Union the best rules are, first, crops of the same species and even of the same natural order should not succeed each other; second, plants with perpendicular roots should succeed those with spreading and superficial roots, and vice versa; third, crops which occupy the soil for several years, like asparagus, rhubarb, etc., should be followed by those of short duration; fourth, two crops alike favorable to the growth of weeds should not occupy the soil in succession; fifth, crops abstracting largely from the soil the sulphates, phosphates and nitrogen principles should not follow each other immediately, but be succeeded by those which draw less from the soil and more from the atmosphere—these exhausting crops should follow and be followed by those which bear and will profit by heavy manuring; sixth, plants grown for their roots or bulbs should not follow those grown for the same purpose, and still less should plants grown for their seeds follow each other directly in succession.

A Good Word For the Houdans.

Houdans stand at the head of the French varieties of poultry, and while their success here when first imported was not so triumphant as had been expected they were proved a great acquisition, being good layers and exceptionally fine for all table purposes. Their popularity, however, has increased very rapidly in the last few years, and they now bid fair to become one of the most popular and extensively bred varieties.

The Houdans mature very early—earlier, in fact, than almost any variety except the Hamburgs, and resemble the latter in the rapidity with which the chicks feather and the very common occurrence of nonsitters. Their flesh is very fine, a characteristic of all French breeds, and its delicacy is frequently thought greater than that of any of the Asiatics or heavier breeds, approaching in the 4-months-old broilers very near perfection.

"Five years ago," says Anga A. Lewis, Ricard, N. Y., "I had a constant cough, night sweats, was greatly reduced in flesh, and had been given up by my physicians. I began to take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and after using two bottles was completely cured.

Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers is a popular preparation in one bottle, and colors evenly a brown or black. Any person can easily apply it at home.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE JESUITS, with supplement containing speeches of M. Paul Bert in the Chambers of Deputies, in Paris, France, at the debate (1879) on the Law Relative to the Liberty of Higher Teaching: "M. Paul Bert, who translated Gury's works from the Latin into the French (from which French this translation has in turn been made), was a statesman of great ability, having the courage of his convictions. He saw the harm done to society by allowing the Jesuits to become educators of the French youth, and struggled successfully to have them disqualified by law from management of such education. This book is a terrible exposure of the principles of these would-be teachers of religion. Their religious principles are simply statutable crimes, unnatural and repugnant to all good men; and how we Americans can let them train our children, when the great French nation across the water have decided that they are unfit to control the instruction of its youth, it is not easy to tell. Surely, we should have as much concern that our future citizens be not indoctrinated in crime, as the French.' 612 pages, paper, 60 cents, but now sent postpaid for 40 cents.

MISS FLAGG'S LATEST NEW BOOK!

"A Prisoner of Hope."

COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.

Price, $1.25.

We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident, In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy, postage prepaid.

Can the secret societies stand up under this ordeal? "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil."—Bible. Will they then develop enough of their boasted goodness to survive the trial?

Rev. W. B. Stoddard wrote from Ohio, January 30: "I preached for Rev. Mr. Wilson, of the Second U. P. church, at Columbus, last Sabbath morning and evening. The previous Sabbath I ministered to the congregation of which Rev. Dr. Robb is pastor at Jamestown, Ohio. Both of these congregations gave substantial evidence of their sympathy." Bro. Stoddard is obeying the Master's injunction—"As ye go, preach."

Appreciation is what all reformers desire; not flattery—just simple appreciation of their work and its quality. Hence we are glad to have our neighbor of the St. Louis Vanguard kindly say: "The Christian Cynosure is one of the soundest sheets in the nation. It is very well named." We are also glad for this testimony from Rev. Dr. Wm. Wishart, of Monmouth, Ill.: "I am greatly delighted with the Lodge Lamp. It is strictly special, as a document of its size ought to be, and it is a complete example of the multum in parvo."

That stalwart reformer, Dr. Parkhurst, is credited with saying that the people should demand improvement in the character of their newspapers. "The papers," he said, "that daily serve up a mass of undigested matter, without discrimination, to their readers, are rapidly becoming a public nuisance." They are not earnest nor sincere. Self-interest governs them. "Any item that will sell ten copies of an issue is good enough to print" is their principle, no matter who is hurt. The secular paper is not a good reformer, except in secular or political affairs. When it comes to progressive Christianity, which puts secular affairs in the background, they are not to be depended upon for support.

President Blanchard and Secretary Phillips are, as we go to press Tuesday morning, in attendance at the Nebraska State Anti-secrecy Convention at Humboldt. The sessions practically began on the Sabbath, and Sec'y Phillips telegraphed on Monday morning that they had large audiences, the manifest presence of the Holy Spirit, a deepening conviction of the truth, and also the testimony of seceding lodgemen, confirming the truth. A report of the proceedings is expected for our next issue.

Attention is called to the advertisement of the New York Weekly Tribune on another page of this paper. In offering it at a very low price, in connection with the Cynosure, to new subscribers, we only commend the Tribune as an intelligent news-gatherer—an able recorder of the events of the day, and, as such, probably as clean a family paper of its class as any in the country. We do not indorse its politics, although, no doubt, many of our readers will find it satisfactory in most respects, especially its market reports.

The recent rebellion of the adherents of the deposed Queen of Hawaii, at Honolulu, was promptly suppressed by the military forces of the republic. A letter from Gen. J. C. Smith, a prominent Freemason of Illinois, to the editor of the Masonic Chronicle, Columbus, Ohio, dated just after his visit to Honolulu, in December last, seems to indicate that the new government of Hawaii is largely composed of Masons. He refers to a banquet given by "Star in the East Lodge, No. 640." Note the number. The island must be full of Masons.

Expositions of the profane rites practiced in European Masonic lodges, their alleged "travesties on the Christian sacraments, and the worship of Satan," having recently appeared in a prominent Roman Catholic paper, the New York Independent is led to say: "We put no faith in these horrible stories." In the course of its skeptical comments, it confesses that its incredulity is not founded on knowledge, or facts, or testimony, or assertion, and acknowledges that it does not know that Freemasonry is atheistic in Italy. A few years ago the Independent refused to print letters in opposition to secret societies, written by an intelligent correspondent of the Cynosure —making the same plea of "don't know," and "don't believe." Our opinion is that it might have truthfully added, "We don't care."

There is a movement, partly incited by the managers of the Grand Army of the Republic, to introduce military drill and tactics into the schools of the country, arming the pupils, as we understand, with muskets from the national armories. If this is permitted, can we blame the Jesuits if they encourage military drill and the use of fire-arms in their parochial schools, and use the basements of their churches (as has been alleged) for arsenals? In the words of a valued contemporary, referring to the foregoing movement: "The United States have about 13,500,000 enrolled school children. The suggestion of military education is immense in possibilities when one considers these figures. At the least, it should be considered before it begins. The results may be far-reaching."

Have we ever heard an adherent of Freemasonry intimate that it was "good enough religion" for him? Most of us know, from the best Masonic authorities, as well as from the confessions of seceding Masons, that "Freemasonry is not Christianity," and we know that only Christianity offers salvation to mankind. Therefore, as Paul says (Galatians 1:8): "But though we or an angel from heaven should preach unto you any Gospel other than that which we preached unto you, let him be anathema"—that is, accursed. The outlook for the followers of Masonic religion is not encouraging.

A Washington paper states, on the authority of a gentleman who held a high position in the office of the Secretary of State during President Lincoln's administration, that Secretary Seward and the President seriously contemplated the organization of an order, with several classes, closely resembling that of the Legion of Honor in France. An act for the consideration of Congress was drawn in behalf of the measure, and designs for the decorations of the various classes were prepared. Its object was to reward personal valor and integrity in the Union cause; but after due consideration the scheme was abandoned, it is said, because the administration feared the attacks of the Democratic party. The Legion of Honor in France conferred little less than nobility on its members, making its badge a symbol of aristocracy as well as of merit, and its adoption in this country of republican principles would have encountered sharp criticism.

"What's the use of fighting windmills? What's the use of opposing secret societies, while they are continually gaining in strength and numbers? They may be hurtful institutions, but what can YOU do, Mr. Cynosure, to prevent or extinguish them?" There is too much of this sort of effeminate talk. Suppose it is all as you have said; are we to give up the fight on that account? Not at all. What said William Lloyd Garrison when slavery was increasing while he fought it—increasing in the number of its victims, increasing its territory in this free country, increasing in its virulence and aggressiveness? This is what he said, and his prophecies have been fulfilled: "Henceforth, through all coming time, advocates of justice and friends of reform, be not discouraged. For you will and you must succeed if you have a righteous cause. No matter at the outset how few may be disposed to rally round the standard you have raised, if you battle unflinchingly and without compromising, if yours is the faith that cannot be shaken, because it is linked to the eternal throne, it is only a question of time when victory shall come to reward your toils. So it has been, so it is, so it ever will be throughout the earth, in any conflict for the right." "Lord, increase our faith."

RUINING A LODGE—A PARABLE.

I was initiated in a Kentucky lodge of Freemasons. I decided to unite with the fraternity on the representations of friends in whom I had the utmost confidence, and who assured me that important personal benefits would be secured by my doing so. I took them at their word.

I was a young man, unmarried, possessing a liberal fortune, and engaged in an honorable and lucrative business. I had many friends, whose society I enjoyed and cherished, most of whom belonged to the local lodge and were loud in their praises of the fraternity and the advantages derived from their membership.

In my youth I had been converted and joined the church. As a Christian, free from entangling vices, I greatly enjoyed my religion and loved my church. Inquiring whether Freemasonry would interfere with my religious affiliations, I was assured that the fraternity interposed no obstacles to the full performance of my duty to God, my church or my social and moral relations; that Masonry is "the handmaiden of religion;" and so many other inducements were added that I applied for membership in the lodge, was accepted, and initiated as an Entered Apprentice. Having, of course, known nothing of the fraternity previous to that ceremony, and having always heard it exalted by my associates as something most desirable and satisfying to the spirit, I confess that I was greatly disappointed at the meager benefits that flowed from my initiation. Thinking it all over, after returning from the lodge, I carefully compared what I had passed through with the delights of my conversion and Christian life, and was confounded by the purility, folly and weighty obligations which distinguished the initiatory degree; and I began seriously to doubt whether I had not made a terrible mistake—innocently, it is true, for I knew not what was before me when I entered the portals of the lodge. I was very angry with myself for having been duped into any society, scheme, or obligation with which I had no previous acquaintance, and greatly incensed at those who had persuaded me to participate in so great a folly.

Reading my Bible while in this frame of mind, old texts with which I had been familiar from my youth put on new truth in the light of the Holy Spirit that now fell upon them, and the more I read, the more was I convinced that between the kingdom of God and its purity and righteousness and the principles and performances of the Masonic fraternity is a great gulf fixed, over which no specious sophistry can build a bridge on which a sinner saved by grace can safely trust himself. Passage after passage in the Old Testament and the Pauline Epistles did I find that morning that bitterly condemned me—a Christian!—for the folly and danger that I had wrought in uniting with the lodge. See Lev. 5:4,5; Lev. 19:12; 2 Cor. 6:14; Rom. 13:12; Eph. 5:11. These and other texts lay heavily upon my soul that morning.

While I read and pondered these things, the devil, who is never idle, was at my elbow, in his character as a commentator and adviser: "Never mind, brother; these passages have no reference to your case; just go right on through the Fellow Craft and Master's degrees, and you will understand better that which now troubles you. You are as yet only in the vestibule of the fraternity, somewhat exhausted and excited by the ceremonies through which you have passed. Wait until your nerves have become stronger; then follow the light you have already received, and as you proceed upward in the fraternity its light will gradually develop itself to your mind, until you come into its full effulgence in the Master's seat."

And the very first half-dozen Masons whom I afterwards met on that day said precisely the same thing!

Naturally, I possess a large amount of what the phrenologists call "secretiveness"—the talent of the raven and some of the other lower animals—the faculty of hiding my inner thoughts, my intentions, my chagrin and disappointments. So, when rallied by my brother Masons—I had not half-liked it when the devil accosted me as a "brother"—I merely smiled in answer, and made no complaints of vexation or disappointment. They all urged me to take the other Blue Lodge degrees as soon as possible, and I would then see what a glorious thing Masonry is for intelligent Masons.

I know now that I was to be blamed for my subsequent course. I know that at this point I should have left the fraternity forever, renouncing it, and ever afterward denouncing it as a dangerous fraud. The struggle was not long but sharp. I should have gone to the throne of grace for mercy and peace and advice; but I was too angry to be wise, and the longer I cherished my animosity against the lodge the harder did I find it to pray, to take delight in my religion, or to forego my vengeful purpose. In this condition the devil found and helped me. I decided to go on with my plan to the end, and if the lodge continued to frustrate my hopes and expectations of better things than I had yet encountered, I determined to turn upon it and seek revenge, in my own way, for my disappointment. But I saw that with the knowledge thus gained in the lodge, I would be better able to expose its perfidy and become, as did Paul to the Pharisees, an apostle against their wickedness.

So I continued to smile acquiescence whenever the fraternity was praised in my hearing, applied for admission to the other two Blue Lodge degrees, and received them in due form.

The last night's work—the tragedy of "Hiram Abiff" and his resurrection by "the grip of the lion's paw"—settled me in my determination to oppose Freemasonry as long as I should live. I had prayed for help to undergo the ordeals of "passing" and "raising" for that very purpose, and the help had come. I would ruin that lodge; but I would do it in my own way. It would take time to effect my purpose. It would require patience, hypocrisy and suavity; but the object was worthy of the trouble it would give me. But, as a full-fledged Master Mason—after taking those terrible oaths that made me one—I felt that I was indignant and revengeful enough to go through with my undertaking. A Master Mason, and not smart and mean enough to be one, in spirit and in deed!

That point settled, I began my secret work to ruin the lodge. I made no confidant of any one. I pretended to be delighted with the order, its importance, its influence, its benefits, its beauties, and with all the details of its inner work. I always praised it in the hearing of Masons. In the presence of all others I never extolled it. My obligations required me not to urge others to join it, but when asked in relation to it, I merely commended it in the fewest and simplest phrases. Otherwise, "secrecy and silence" were dutifully observed on my part in my communications with the uninitiated.

In the lodge I assiduously studied every part of Freemasonry connected with the three Blue Lodge degrees. I soon became a "bright" Mason, and, being blessed with a capital memory, in a short time I had the rituals at my tongue's end. I made myself familiar with every detail of lodge work. I became very popular in the lodge for my geniality and helpfulness to members. I never refused to serve on any committee, or to engage in any labor to advance "the good of the order." I "went through all the chairs," except the Master's seat under the big golden "G." It was freely offered to me, but I declined it in favor of older members, saying that I could better aid the fraternity as a subordinate than as a ruler; that in due time I would gladly accept it. My zeal was commended, and no Master, in his position, enjoyed such wholesale popularity as I did in mine.

In the meantime I was having my revenge upon the fraternity. I was prosperously carrying out my intention to ruin the lodge. Months passed after I had been "raised" by the Master's mysterious word, and yet there had not been a single initiation in the lodge within all that time. Applications for membership from outsiders—men of undoubted influence, good character and marked eligibility—had been numerous. These applications had in every instance been hailed by the lodge as grand accessions to the fraternity. I had served on many of the committees of investigation into the worthiness of applicants, and I had never failed personally to recommend them to the lodge. Many of them were dear and intimate friends of mine. Yet, strange to say, their applications, when submitted to the usual and systematic ballot by roll-call in the lodge, had always been defeated by black-balling.

In our State the applicant required a unanimous white ballot to secure admission, and only one black-ball was sufficient to reject him. For two years I never voted a white ball for the admission of a candidate for the Entered Apprentice degree. Consequently, there were no initiations of Entered Apprentices—no initiation fees—no "fun for the boys" in the performance of the initiation rites. It was becoming "awfully" stupid in the lodge-room. All the Entered Apprentices and Fellow Crafts had become Master Masons. As a "degree lodge" we were "immense." But our finances were altogether dependent upon degree fees, the admission of members from other lodges, and our regular weekly dues. In the meantime members of our lodge were dying, or demitting, or moving away to other sections of the country, and the lodge was fast becoming a Masonic ruin!

The worst of it was, that nobody but myself knew who was to blame for the condition that confronted us. In a little while, it seemed evident, we must dwindle and "peter out" to a degree that would require us to surrender our charter, and go out of existence. This was the object at which I had aimed from the first—my indomitable design, sleeping or waking—and my revenge was triumphant. The formation of a new lodge in the town and the general withdrawal of our members to unite with it, brought on the crisis I had desired. Our lodge was killed.

I will add that, although repeatedly urged to unite with the new lodge, I framed sufficient excuses to decline the invitation without suspicion. I was satisfied.

Masons will tell the reader that my course was impracticable and impossible. I deny it, on the strength of the laws regarding the lodge ballot, its sacredness and its secrecy.

The following are decisions of Grand Lodges and other authorities in Freemasonry:

"It is a well-settled principle in Masonic law, that every brother should be allowed perfect freedom in the choice of his ballot. He cannot be dictated to, or in any way influenced, or called to account for the vote he may give. It is his sacred right, for the abuse of which he is only accountable to his conscience and to his God."—Chase's Digest of Masonic Law (1864,) page 280.

"A member may cast a black ball at any ballot without assigning any reason for so doing; neither have (has) the lodge, or Master, any right to ask, or even try to ascertain, who cast it."—Grand Master Smith, of Arkansas, 1856.

"No Mason can be called to account for the vote which he has deposited. The very secrecy of the ballot is intended to secure the independence and irresponsibility to the lodge of the voter."—Mackey, P. M. L, p. 193.

"No restriction of any sort shall be placed upon a brother in the matter of voting, nor shall he be questioned how or why he exercised that right."—Standard By-laws of Maine, 1857.

"No subordinate lodge, nor the Grand Lodge, can inquire into the cause of the rejection of a candidate for initiation."—Grand Lodge of Georgia, 1854 "This is law."—C. F. C., Kentucky, 1855.

I might go on and quote hundreds of decisions touching Masonic balloting, but the foregoing completely justified my course. If I was ever suspected, the lodge was too wise to let me know it, since it was none of its business to interfere with my right of franchise. Otherwise I was always prompt, true to my obligations, friendly and thoroughly trusted.

But I ruined the lodge.

Were I to stop here, I should not fulfill my duty. I not only ruined the lodge, but nearly lost my soul in doing it.

Had I forsaken the fraternity as soon as my initiation was over, and then publicly denounced it as a diabolical fraud, it would have been better for me. But the spirit of revenge—always un-Christian—was in my heart, and in giving way to it and pursuing its object, I sacrificed my salvation. I lost all interest in the church and Sabbath-school and all other Christian work. I neglected prayer. Christian duty no longer prompted my actions. I was a hypocrite—outwardly a Mason, a zealous Mason. The benefits of Masonry were felt in my business, and I was greatly prospered in worldly affairs. Then, when the end came; the lodge gone, salvation gone—hope gone—there was nothing left for me but bitter repentance and supplications for mercy on my misguided soul. In due time I found it, for God is merciful, and my peace was restored. Now I am not working, in my own strength, nor in my own secret way, to ruin the lodge, but laboring openly to keep men from joining it, and pulling them out of it.

SELECTIONS.

SCOTTISH RITE MASONRY.

There are ten different rites recognized in Masonry. Of these the Herodom pretends to represent ancient Masonry. It includes less than ten per centum of the Masons in the world, according to the figures of Leo Taxil in his work "Les Freres Trois Points." The York Rite is the most numerous, having more than seventy-one per centum of the order. It is largely confined to English-speaking people, but is closely interwoven with the Ancient Accepted Scotch Rite, which has between fifteen and sixteen per centum of the craftsmen who have been struggling for light since the creation of the world. All the rites differ in the number of degrees they confer. To belong to the Masonic organization they must all have the first three degrees: Apprentice, Fellow-Craft Mason, and Master Mason. The other degrees may be called honorary and are conferred as a reward of merit.

To show the intimate relations existing between the different rites, the following statement will be sufficient:

The Grand Lodge of England belongs to the York Rite. Grand Master: Albert Edward, Prince of Wales; who is of the 25th degree Herodom Rite. This 25th is the highest, and corresponds with the 33rd Scottish Rite.

The Supreme Council of England: Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite: Grand Protector, Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, 25th.

The Grand Lodge Saint John of Scotland: Scotch Herodom Rite: Grand Protector, Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, 25th degree.

Supreme Council of Scotland: Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite: Sovereign Commander, Grand Master Sir J. Whyte Melville, 32nd.

Grand Lodge of Ireland: York Rite: Grand Protector, Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, 25th Herodom.

The Supreme Council of the United States, Southern Jurisdiction, was organized in Charleston in 1787. It belongs to the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite.

The Supreme Council of the United States, Northern Jurisdiction, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite.

All the States, except Louisiana, belong to the York Rite.

The Grand Lodge of Canada belongs to the York Rite.

The Supreme Council of Canada accepts the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, while all the other Provinces are under the direction of the York Rite.

The Grand Orient of France belongs to the York Rite, while the Supreme Council recognizes the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, as do nearly all the countries of Europe, of Central and South America, the West Indian Islands, Asia and Africa.

Mackey, in his "Lexicon of Freemasonry," says: "The Ancient and Accepted Scotch Rite is, next to the York Rite, the most extensively diffused throughout the Masonic world. Supreme councils, or lodges, of this rite exist in England, Scotland, Ireland, France, Belgium, the United States, and many other countries. The administrative power of the rite is deposited in Supreme Councils of Sovereign Grand Inspectors-General." Italy also belongs to the Scotch Rite.

It has already been shown that, at the installation of his Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, as Grand Master of the English Freemasons: "Italian Masonry rejoiced at this new lustre shed upon our world-wide institution, and sincerely prayed that between the two Masonic communities may be drawn even more closely those fraternal ties which, through want of that official recognition which we venture to hope will soon be effected, have always bound us to our English brethren."

The "official recognition" soon followed, as announced in the London Times, of July 14th, 1875: "Italian and English Freemasons. — The announcement was made on Saturday, at the consecration of a new lodge named after the Princess of Wales, at the Alexandra Palace, that His Royal Highness, the Grand Master of English Freemasons, had given official recognition to the Grand Orient of Italy, and the announcement was received with warm applause by the large body of eminent Freemasons assembled on the occasion."

As a further and most conclusive proof that English and Continental Masons are one, the following list from the "Cosmopolitan Masonic Calendar" may be given:

"Sovereign Grand Inspectors General," who act as representatives in England for the Supreme Councils of other countries, from

"The Supreme Council of France, J. W. Melleville, 33rd. M. P.

"The Supreme Council of Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, J. W. Melleville, 33rd. M. P.

"The Supreme Council of Northern Jurisdiction of the United States, located in Boston, the Earl of Rosslyn, 33rd.

"The Supreme Council Belgium, Ill. Bro. S. E. MacKitchie, 33rd.

"The Supreme Council of Brazil, Ill. Bro. William Man.

"The Supreme Council of Italy, Ill. Bro. L. Mackersey, 33rd.

"The Supreme Council Switzerland, Ill. Bro. L. Mackersey, 33rd.

"The Supreme Council of Greece, Ill. Bro. Col. A. C. Campbell, 33rd.

"The Supreme Council of Canada, Ill. Bro. D. Mackersey, 33rd."

England, on her part, has a representative at each of the Supreme Grand Councils named above: at

"The Supreme Council of France, Ill., Bro. Jean Adolphe Vittecog, Paris, 33rd.

"The Supreme Council, Southern Jurisdiction, United States, Ill. Bro. Luke E. Barber, 33rd.

"The Supreme Council, Northern Jurisdiction, U. S. A., Ill. Bro. C. L. Woodbury, 33rd.

"The Supreme Council, Belgium, Ill. Bro. Louis Riche, 33rd.

"The Supreme Council of Brazil, Ill. Bro. Antonio Gomes de Mattos, Jr., 33rd.

"The Supreme Council, Italy, Ill. Bro. M. Zacharia, 33rd.

"The Supreme Council, Switzerland, Ill. Bro. L. Rouchonnett, 33rd.

"The Supreme Council, Greece, V. P. N. Damaskinos, 33rd.

THE POPE ON LABOR UNIONS.

The Pope last week issued a message to Roman Catholics in America, in which he thus refers to the secret labor unions:

"Now, with regard to entering societies, extreme care should be taken not to be ensnared by error. And we wish to be understood as referring in a special manner to the working classes, who assuredly have the right to unite in associations for the promotion of their interests, a right acknowledged by the church and unopposed by nature.

"But it is very important to those with whom they are to associate; else while seeking aims for the improvement of their condition they may be impairing far weightier interests. The most effectual precaution against this peril is to determine with themselves at no time or in any matter to be parties to the violation of justice. Any society, therefore, which is ruled by and servilely obeys persons who are not steadfastly for the right and friendly to religion is capable of being extremely prejudicial to the interests as well of individuals as of the community; beneficial it cannot be.

"Let this conclusion, therefore, remain firm—to shun not only those associations which have been openly condemned by the judgment of the church, but those also which, in the opinion of intelligent men, and especially of the bishops, are regarded as suspicious and dangerous.

"Nay, rather, unless forced by necessity to do otherwise, Catholics ought to prefer to associate with Catholics, a course which will be very conducive to the safeguarding of their faith. As presidents of societies thus formed among themselves, it would be well to appoint either priests or upright laymen of weight and character, guided by whose counsel they should endeavor peacefully to adopt and carry into effect such measures as may seem most advantageous to their interests, keeping in view the rules laid down by us in our encyclical, Rerum Novarum. Let them, however, never allow this to escape their memory: that while it is proper and desirable to assert and secure the rights of the many, yet this is not to be done by a violation of duty; and that these are very important duties: Not to touch what belongs to another; to allow every one to be free in the management of his own affairs; not to hinder any one to dispose of his services when he pleases and where he pleases.

"The scenes of violence and riot which you witnessed last year in your own country sufficiently admonish you that America, too, is threatened with the audacity and ferocity of the enemies of public order. The state of the times, therefore, bids Catholics to labor for the tranquillity of the commonwealth, and for this purpose to obey the laws, abhor violence and seek no more than equity or justice permits."

ROME'S CONDEMNATION OF SECRET SOCIETIES.

From the N. Y. Daily Sun, Protestant: We are asked by a "Roman Catholic Odd-fellow" whether he is compelled to leave the order of Odd-fellows under the recent decree of the Pope against it. As an American citizen he can take his choice between the order and the church; but, as a Roman Catholic, he has not any choice. The decree of the holy office is of supreme authority, and he must cease to be an Odd-fellow if he would remain in the church. It is his imperative duty to withdraw from that order, under penalty of being denied the sacraments. He cannot conceal his membership or escape the judgment pronounced against it, or offer any plea in favor of retaining it. Rome has spoken in words that are irrevocable, and the voice of Rome is the fundamental law of Catholicity, the world over.

There are three societies condemned in the new decree—the Odd-fellows, the Knights of Pythias, and the Sons of Temperance—as other secret societies had been condemned in previous decrees.

This does not involve any limitation of the political, civil or natural rights of our Roman Catholic Odd-fellow correspondent. It is purely a matter of religion, and of ecclesiastical discipline. The church establishes the terms of church membership, and these terms are inflexible.

Our correspondent's rights of American citizenship are in no way interfered with by the papal decree. As a citizen, he may join any society he pleases, but not as a Roman Catholic.

From the American Tyler (Masonic), Detroit, Mich.: "Possibly it is none of our business how far this Romo-fobia may extend. As Freemasons, we are damned beyond redemption, and now the other fellers are going to catch it. But possibly the old gentleman enthroned in the dungeon cell in the palace of the Vatican may bite off more than he can masticate if he proposes to taboo all secret societies save the Mafia, Clan-na-Gael, Molly Maguires, Fenians, Hibernians and sich. We can stand it, if the others can."

INCREASE OF CRIME.

Crime is on the increase throughout the civilized world. The same figures which prove this statement also prove that fewer crimes are punished. This latter fact stands largely as the cause of the former. As an illustration of the utterly corrupt and abortive efforts of officers we have seen nothing more utterly shameful than the confessions and testimonies before a committee of the Supervisors of Onondaga county, N. Y., concerning the mismanagement of the penitentiary. One of the superintendents is declared to have been drunk in the presence of inmates, keepers and others; keepers are charged with taking female inmates from their cells at night; an open way was declared to exist between the male and female deparment; and as if it were not enough the inmates are fed on decayed meat, while the officials are charged with profiting personally from the county in the purchase of supplies. One superintendent complacently confesses that he was in the habit of discharging convicts whenever he thought they should go. The police justice had cross days and sometimes gave too heavy fines, which the superintendent took upon himself to remit. One young man was sent away before his time expired because he had only been on a "toot," and was a Mason. We do not suppose Onondaga county penitentiary is any worse than other penitentiaries and prisons, The student of crime will find these "pens" are festering sources of much criminality.—Wesleyan Methodist.

Prohibition in Maine.—A unique example of "squatter sovereignty."—How Dr. Edward Everett Hale reads the papers.—Lodge bank officials —Appealing against the variety shows.—A wave of barbarism —Resolutions of Connecticut liquor sellers.

The joy which the license people feel over the alleged failure of the Maine law to prohibit, is simply ghoulish. Of course it is desirable that the truth should be known, but let it be the whole truth, and not of only half. The Boston Herald, which claims that it is receiving many compliments from both Republican and Democratic leaders for its enterprise in publishing these so-called "facts," but denies that it is accepting pay therefore from the liquor-dealers, has found a contemporary to take up the gauntlet in Zion's Herald. This paper has sent out inquiries to a list of Maine's most reputable citizens, selected from all political parties and all religious denominations, which has brought in a large amount of testimony, the mass of which goes to prove that while there may be places in Maine where liquor can be obtained without very much difficulty, the State, as a whole, is staunchly prohibition, and has not lost confidence in that law which has done so much for the morals and financial prosperity of the Pine Tree State. "Wherever the law is enforced with the results," says Dr. Henry Reynolds; "and it is enforced in most of our rural districts, which make three-fourths of the whole State. The trouble in our cities is that political demagogues are trying to hold the rum vote by allowing the prohibitory vote to be trampled upon." Judge L. W. Goodspeed writes that as regards his own town of Randolph, "any one who desires can get about all the liquor he wants without much difficulty." But the secret of the matter is that they have a regular liquor agency, which sells for the profit it will bring the town. Lawyer C. E. Littleton writes emphatically that the Maine law is a success wherever it is faithfully enforced. The experience of Maine, by the way, as regards liquor agencies, demonstrates that the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. were right when they set their faces as a flint against this plausible form of license. Once allow a wrong principle, and we have a wrong result every time.

THE PEOPLE ARE WELL PLEASED

Few people realize how many

have had their birthplace—or are at least adopted daughters in—"hundred-harbored Maine." At a banquet given by the Pine Tree State Club, the other evening, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, and Mrs. Elizabeth Akers Allen, author of "Rock me to Sleep, Mother," were among those present; while Sarah Orne Jewett, and Harriet Prescott Spofford sent letters of regret. From the latter I cull a sentence or two which may touch a responsive chord in the heart of some son or daughter of Maine, who has exchanged her pine forests for the prairies of Illinois or the grandeur of the far Sierras: "Although the greater part of my life has been passed elsewhere, yet my native State always seems like home. There is for me a poetry about her hills that does not belong to hills of greater height; her forests are darker and sweeter than other woods, and I shall sail the unreturning voyage before I forget the seas that girt her coasts with their flashing barriers."

A SQUATTER SOVEREIGN.

Occasionally the two or three centuries which lie behind us and Plymouth Rock rise up out of the dust of ancient records, and confront us in a very unexpected way. New Hampshire, as we all know, did not belong to any but bears and Indians until 1623, when Mason and Gorges got their royal grant from James II. Five years after, they had a quarrel with the Bay State Colony, in which neither side won the victory. So the matter was allowed to rest for a hundred years, when it was revived again, and submitted to George I. for arbitrament, when Mason got New Hampshire, Gorges the northern half of Maine, and Massachusetts the territory extending to the Merrimac. By virtue of a quit-claim deed, given by Sir John Mason, and which now stands recorded in the probate court of Concord, N. H., Richard Fowler, the sixth of his name and generation, owns, by hereditary descent, a little kingdom on the New Hampshire coast, which the towns abutting have tried to seize at one time and another, but the courts have always decided that the town charters give them no authority over Richard the Sixth. The South could hardly furnish us a more unique example of "squatter sovereignty." He is a fisherman, who has reached his three-score years and ten, and lives in a quaint little brown nutshell of a house, set high above the dash of the breakers. Richard I., the ancestor of the Fowler dynasty, lived in an overturned whale-boat, sodded around the sides to keep out the cold and storms, like Dickens' old fisherman, Mr. Peggotty. And this was in 1740.

READING THE NEWS.

People often wonder how Dr. Edward Everett Hale, who is already past his seventy-second year, manages to accomplish so much in the line of literary work, aside from his pulpit duties and the numerous lines of Christian philanthropy in which he is interested. Perhaps his answer to a reporter's question, "How much time ought people to give to reading the papers, Dr. Hale?" will shed some light on the subject of saving time: "I read most of the news after it has been sifted and confirmed, and partly digested by such weekly journals as the Outlook, and some weekly editions of daily papers." It was Dr. Hale's father, by the way, who started the first daily paper in Boston, a very modest affair that would be lost in one corner of the big blanket sheets of to-day.

The mystery surrounding

THE DEFAULTING SUICIDE,

Abbott, of the Dover bank, seems to thicken. Was he the tool of others? It looks so at present writing. New Hampshire is having a severe lesson with Masonic bank defaulters. When will the people learn that it is not safe to put their money into the keeping of Masonic bank officials?

THE OPPONENTS OF THE NUDE AND INDECENT

in public entertainments are still fighting for the cause of purity and good morals. Twelve organizations, all of which are well known in the world of religion and reform, and representing ten thousand women, have recently appealed to the city aldermen not to license the objectionable variety shows. But the dense stolidity of these gentlemen where such questions are concerned can only be described by Dominie Sampson's word, "Prodigious!"

THE BARBARIC TASTES

of to-day? I am not just now speaking of wearing dead birds or their plumage, on which it would seem that enough has been said to shame any woman who did not wish to be set down among the demi monde, with whom the fashion originated. I allude to another whim of fashion that partakes of the horrible, the grotesque and the barbaric, all in one. I never see a woman wearing fur, ornamented (?) with the heads of the animals from which the fur was taken, without a vision of a painted Indian with scalp-locks at his belt. The very thought of making such ghastly trophies a part of her wearing apparel ought to be repugnant to every woman with the least refined feeling in her make-up.

THIS SAME SPIRIT OF BARBARISM

showed itself lately when the chief attraction at one of the city's most crowded places of amusement was the spectacle of a man just recovered from the nearly fatal attack of a lion who had already killed two or three of his keepers, entering again the cage of the savage beast. If his life had not been in real and terrible peril, the show would not have been a drawing card. People thronged to see him with not a whit higher motive than that which in ancient days filled the Roman amphitheatres to overflowing. It is time that this wave of barbarity was rebuked, if we are to keep our standing as a civilized people.

THE LIQUOR SELLERS OF CONNECTICUT

have been passing some resolutions, denouncing temperance fanatics in the name of personal liberty; also monopolies, ignoring the fact that they are themselves the most oppressive monopoly in existence; favoring a non-partisan political campaign, and appointing a committee to drive out all disreputable characters from the trade. Should they succeed in this latter point, Connecticut may be congratulated. She will be as destitute of liquor-sellers as Ireland is of snakes.

TALKING FINANCE.

WASHINGTON, January 30, 1895.

The President's special financial message has resulted in increasing the talk about financial matters in both branches of Congress, but if it has otherwise changed the situation that fact is not yet apparent. It may be possible—many consider it very probable—that the House will pass the bill embodying the President's recommendations, in a somewhat modified form; but it is not considered possible for any such bill to pass the Senate in the short time remaining of the present session, owing to positive public declarations which have been made by Senators who will oppose it.

MORE BONDS EXPECTED.

Those who are usually well-informed as to the intention of the administration think that President Cleveland is contemplating another issue of bonds, under the act of 1875, if he has not already fully determined upon it, and that it will be a much larger issue than the two which have already been made. The two issues that have been made were 5 per cent ten year bonds, but the same law also gives authority for the issue of 4 per cent thirty year bonds—that is, bonds which cannot be redeemed until the expiration of thirty years—and it is known that representatives of some of the largest American and European capitalists have assured President Cleveland of their willingness to subscribe for any amount of these bonds he may wish to issue at a price that will make the interest 3 per cent. According to the opinion of some, Congress will either have to provide some relief for the Treasury, or see the President exercise his authority under the old law and issue those 4 per cent bonds—it may be $500,000,000 of them.

SUGAR.

The House has passed the bill for the repeal of the differential duty on sugar from countries which allow an export bounty on sugar, but it seems doubtful whether the Senate will pass it, not so much because of opposition as because of the lack of time and the number of other measures struggling for precedence.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

Because President Cleveland has failed in some of the efforts he has made to mediate between foreign nations is no reason why he should be criticised for having made those efforts. On the contrary, he should be commended for having made the efforts. As the head of a great Christian nation which has declared its belief in arbitration as a method of settling international disputes, it is his bounden duty to lose no opportunity of offering to mediate between wrangling nations, to prevent war. When he fails it is a matter for regret, not for adverse criticism.

A DESERVED TRIBUTE.

In the course of a sermon preached on the twenty-fourth anniversary of the Woman's Christian Association, which maintains a very deserving charity—a home for women—Rev. Howard Wilber Ennis, pastor of the Western Presbyterian church, paid a high tribute to the work of women. He said: "Women have been valuable assistants to man at all times since the coming of Christ in the spread of his kingdom. Without them the world would be far behind where it stands to-day. Their sweet faces, shining with the light of the Gospel, and their gentle, persuasive ways often have a greater influence upon men than masterly sermons or the appeals of preachers of the sterner sex. Hundreds of thousands of men have been saved from lives of degradation and misery by Christian women. But their principal work along this line, it seems to me, is among members of their own sex. In that field they have by far more influence than their brothers, and I believe it will be almost entirely by the means that they use that the women of this world will become true, earnest daughters of God."

Last Sunday evening, instead of the regular services at the First Congregational church, the choir, which consists of sixty voices, gave Sir Arthur S. Sullivan's Oratorio of under the direction of Prof. Bischoff, the organist of the church, before a congregation filling every seat and encroaching upon the aisle spaces. The service was opened with prayer by Dr. Newman, the pastor, who also read the story of the prodigal son from the Bible, which was afterwards rendered to music. I have heard the substitution of this oratorio in place of the regular Sunday evening sermon criticised, but I am of the mind of the aged minister of another denomination who was asked his opinion of the innovation, and who replied: "I like it. It was but the substitution of a sermon delivered in song to the accompaniment of music, in place of that usually delivered by the minister alone. From the standpoint of a Christian I can see no difference. It is simply two ways of doing the same thing."

LECTURES.

The first of a series of lectures on the Bible, under the auspices of the American Society of Regious Education, was delivered this evening by Rev. Dr. Hamlin. Bishop Hurst, Rev. Dr. Muir, Hon. W. T. Harris and Rev. Dr. McKim will in the order named deliver similar lectures, the idea being to stimulate public interest in the Bible.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

The Brooklyn street car strike.—Cold weather and suffering.—The Sunday saloon problem.—Dr. Talmage's sermons.—Thorough street cleaning.

NEW YORK CITY, Jan. 29, 1895.

The great strike of motor-men and conductors on the surface roads of Brooklyn, which has been in progress for the past two weeks, has come to an end.

THE STRIKERS ARE BEATEN, and are applying for work on the old terms. About 6,000 men went out, and a large number of their places have been already filled by applicants from other cities. The strike has cost the city, county and State about $2,000,000. The loss of life and damage to property has been exceedingly small, considering the amount of rioting that was done. The press and the pulpit have, with a few exceptions, warmly espoused the cause of the strikers. One clergyman, last Sabbath, characterized the militia as a "parcel of boys with a passion to shoot somebody, only too ready to pull the trigger." It is significant that the utterance was applauded. The trolley managers have alienated popular sympathy by an utter disregard of the demand to provide life-saving fenders for their cars and by habitually running the cars at a higher rate of speed than that prescribed by law. Accidents have been so numerous, and seemingly so needless, that, in popular parlance, the cars are called "juggernauts."

THE SADDEST RESULTS OF THE STRIKE

are yet to come. Much cold winter-weather remains. Only a small proportion of those who quit work will succeed in getting back their old positions. Meanwhile their families must eat and drink, and have clothing and fuel. How these wants are to be met is a problem which the charitable societies can only go a little way in solving.

A RIPPLE OF EXCITEMENT,

not to say apprehension, has been aroused in temperance circles by recent utterances of Mayor Strong on the liquor question. The City Hall has been visited of late by many delegations of ladies and clergymen who have declaimed and expostulated to their hearts' content. The occasion of all this was an alleged remark of the mayor to a company of liquor-sellers, which has been construed as approving a scheme allowing saloons to be open for business a portion of the Sabbath. As a matter of fact there are but few saloons in New York that do not have a rushing business all day Sunday, through the side doors and "family entrances," in direct defiance of the excise laws. His honor, the mayor, professes to be deeply concerned over this violation of law, but his project of remedying the matter of legally sanctioning the sale of liquor on the Sabbath, and thus removing temptation from the liquor-sellers, does not seem to commend itself to the temperance people.

A STIRRING CAMPAIGN

is, meanwhile, going on in various churches and missions, with the avowed object to memorialize the Assembly at Albany to defeat any bill that may be presented legalizing the Sunday opening of saloons.

DR. TALMAGE

is preaching at the Academy of Music every Sabbath afternoon. Long before the doors are opened, crowds begin to gather in the street, and within five minutes after the doors are opened there is not standing room inside. These are not all New Yorkers, by any means. Strangers visiting in town think it as much their duty to hear Dr. Talmage as to visit the Statue of Liberty. It is expected that the services will be self-supporting, through contributions which are taken; but the good doctor has no need to worry about his support while he draws a salary of $1,000 a month as the nominal editor of the Christian Herald.

THE WHEELS OF THE NEW CITY GOVERNMENT are running smoothly and effectively. The street-cleaning commissioner, Col. Waring, is wrestling manfully with the difficult problem of clean streets. The police department is co-operating. Every house, hotel and tenement has been given a printed card containing the ordinance against throwing anything upon the streets. Some arrests have been made in the tenement-house district for violations of the law. The new law gives the commissioner carte blanche on the snow and ice fund. At the last snow storm, two and a half inches fell. A force of 2,500 extra men was enrolled and set at work, and within a reasonable time the 380 miles of streets had been fairly cleared.

REFORM NEWS.

LETTER FROM REV. WILLIAM FENTON.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Feb. 2, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The following letter asks for a correction of my report published in the Christian Cynosure of Jan. 3, 1895:

PASTOR'S STUDY, Central Presbyterian Church, St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 31, 1895.—Rev. Wm. Fenton, St. Paul, Minn.: Dear Sir—I take it that you are sincere in your personal attacks made upon me for now more than two years, and hence I have no quarrel with you in regard to them at all. But I take it, also, that you are a Christian gentleman, and that when you have overstepped the truth in any way, you will correct it as publicly as you have overstepped it.

In the Christian Cynosure, Jan. 3, I find the following: "Rev. Alexander N. Carson, D. D, pastor of the Central Presbyterian church of this city, at a salary of $4,000 a year, told me that he had been a teacher of Masonry six years and that he sees nothing wrong in it, nor nothing in it contrary to Christianity. Since he told me that, a young man, an evangelist (!), who is a Master Mason, told me that he was influenced by this same man Carson to complete his initiation into Masonry by taking the third degree, and the Methodists initiated him into Masonry."

Now in this statement there are three false statements. First, my salary is $3,000. Second, I did not tell you that I had been a teacher of Masonry for six years, but I did tell you that I had been the Grand Lecturer in the Scottish Rite in Ohio for six years—who is not by any means a teacher in Masonry. Third, that man is not living to whom I ever spoke, asking him to take a single degree; so that the statement of the young man is false, and I kindly ask you for his name. The moment I should begin to solicit or plead with any one to become a Mason, that moment I would violate one of the cardinal principles of Masonry.

Believing what I have said in regard to you, is the reason I have written you, correcting these mistakes. Respectfully, ALEX N. CARSON.

The writer of that letter says that his salary is $3 000 a year, and not $4,000 as stated in my report. I am glad to be corrected in that thing.

In regard to the third thing referred to by Dr. Carson. The young man did not say to me that Dr. Carson had asked him to take another degree of Masonry, nor does my report so state; therefore the young man has not, by what he said to me, laid Dr. Carson liable to the censure of his Masonic brethren by violating a principle of Masonry. The young man's statement came about in this way: He had informed me that he had been made a Master Mason, which led to a long conversation upon Masonry; during that conversation we walked past Dr. Carson's church, when, alluding to it, he said that its pastor's influence had inclined him to complete his initiation and take the remaining obligations so as to become a Master Mason. Perhaps this is not the language used by the young man, but it is the idea which he conveyed to me. What that influence was he did not state. It might have been what the doctor himself told me, namely, that he saw "nothing wrong nor nothing contrary to Christianity in Masonry;" considering the doctor's position, that would be a mighty influence in the estimation, for instance, of the young men under his pastoral charge and ambitious to have the influence of Masonry in getting on in this life.

It is not surprising that the author of Masonry should protect his victims by a rule or principle forbidding them to ask, outright, others to join them, esteeming himself quite competent to prepare the hearts of men to be made Masons in the lodge.

In regard to the doctor's second item. See the definition of the Orator's duty under the heading Orator in Mackey's Encyclopedia of Freemasonry. It is: "Orator—An officer in a lodge whose duty it is to explain to a candidate, after his initiation, the mysteries of the degree into which he has just been admitted. The office is therefore in many respects similar to that of a lecturer. . . "

Under the heading "Lecturer, Grand,"—same Encyclopedia: "An officer known only in the United States. . . . His duty is to visit the

CORRESPONDENCE.

LETTER FROM AN EARNEST REFORMER.

EAST LYNN, Ill., Jan. 26, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The various orders all over the country have much to do in dulling the public conscience, much as slavery had before the war; and thus we see reforms move slowly. Quick as the apple of the eye to repel a foreign substance, so should the public conscience repel the wrong. But for this the temperance movement would have long since been settled.

Public conscience being dulled, people have oaths to accomplish everything—taking such oaths to do those things even before they know what they are.

Men are drilled in the "sacredness" of these "cut-throat" oaths, when they rest on the same foundation for "sacredness" that the oath of Herod did in a recent Sunday-school lesson which resulted in beheading John the Baptist. His oath, like all Masonic oaths, was rash and wicked—swearing to do anything before he knew what it was. Even if it was a proper thing to do we ought to know it beforetime.

I have known and observed that men of the world who are lodgemen, laymen and ministers of the Gospel (?) will all, as a rule, lie generally to defend lodge practices and oaths. No exceptions need to be made, as I have shown well-authenticated expositions of the Masonic lodge to two Masonic presiding elders, both of whom said things that were false to cover up the lodge and to defend themselves. One of these presiding elders wore the "key-stone" with the first letters of "Hiram, Tyrian, Widow's Son, Sent to King Solomon" on it.

Philosophically, no one can defend a lie or falsehood, knowing it to be such, without lying.

The particular point we wish to make, or bring out, in this letter, is this, viz: That the lodge is not only a place where liars are manufactured at retail, but is a wholesale establishment for their production.

To the arguments of those who oppose the lodge, lodgemen have one phrase that they should get patented, or adopt it as a "trade-mark;" it is this: "You are talking about something of which you know nothing;" when most of the Cynosure readers are often better posted on the principles and practices of the lodge than even half of the order-men.

The facts are: Lodgemen want to hide, and, in addition, want to convey the idea that their secrets are not out to the world. Their arguments in this case put them in the position of falsifiers. We are sick at heart, and sorrow to make such charges, but the truth compels us to, or else we would be falsifiers and liars ourselves. But not only are lodg-men falsifiers, but idolaters as well.

They have altars, An altar presupposes a worship. That worship is either the true or the false; and as these lodges are Christless, they are necessarily false and idolatrous. Mr. Churchman and Lodgeman, don't you see where you are? Why not leave them at once? Do as Lovejoy said to Singleton (quoting Shakspeare) in a controversy: "Stand not on the order of your going, but go at once."

Hoopeston (Ill.) is a live little city of 3,000 or 3,500 inhabitants, and is mainly a lodge-ridden city. The priests and people seem to be running after Baal-worship, with lodge displays and lodge installations. If we could have a series of lectures here, it would be just the thing. The Free Methodists occasionally have services, and the Friends once or twice a week. The United Presbyterians are quite strong here, but we have yet to hear of their saying very much against the lodge, though personally we have heard them, in a private way, speak strongly against it. But the Bible way, I think, is to "cry aloud."

We have a few strong friends here, and a few Cynosure readers, and we hope some of our lecturers will drop in on the town and give it a general warning and a "shaking-up."

Hoopeston is destined to be quite a place, with a good farming country all around, and I am safe in saying that a lecturer at this place would be out no money for traveling or other expenses. A. Honeywell, son of our noble Enoch Honeywell, lives here, and has large landed interests, and, I think, would entertain lecturers. Mr. Honeywell has a fine residence and a very pleasant family.

This town, like thousands of others, is lodge-ridden because lodgmen are very "cheeky," and other people are not as outspoken as they should be. Send them a lecturer.

Hoping that these few lines may be the means of getting even one poor chained, cable-towed, hoodwinked and benighted sinner out of Satan's meshes, I remain one who ever wishes that the right may succeed. I also hope that these lines may keep some poor wanderer from tumbling into Satan's trap—the lodge.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Inclosed you will find two clippings from the New York Press—both ostensibly telegraphic dispatches—one from Newark, N. J., Dec. 17. 1894, and the other from Nashua, N. H., Dec. 16, 1894. The latter you may have seen in other papers, but the former, entitled "Horsewhipped by a Doctor," you may not encounter elsewhere. The first is a strong circumstantial proof, or exposure, of trespasses in Masonic families, and the second is a fine example of Masonic double life.

That many Masons do not trespass against one another is not to be believed, if circumstantial and other evidence is to be credited; for the institution is to protect in degradation as well as in crime; but in the first case the mistake of the party punished was in not procuring the assent of the party who inflicted the punishment. In befogging the moral atmosphere, they dull their own sensibilities. Moral laws (and some made by Masons), like game laws in certain localities, are only enforced in cases where enmity prevails, and otherwise become effete or "dead letter" statutes. The fear of mere divisions and lodge "squalls" (as in another Masonic quarrel of which the writer is cognizant) will perhaps explain why the case alluded to in the Press' report was not taken before the brethren.

A READER.

The first clipping referred to by our correspondent:

"Horsewhipped by a Doctor.—Newark, Dec. 17.—As Austin McGregor turned the key of his clothing store at 850 ——— St., late Saturday night and started for home, he was called by Dr. William H. Dobbins, who had been waiting in a carriage beside the curb. McGregor approached within a few feet of the carriage, when Dr. Dobbins suddenly rained a series of blows about his head and neck with a lash. McGregor jumped back and, without attempting to resist the assault, walked quietly down Broad street. Dr. Dobbins turned his horse and followed, and at the corner of Fair street made another wicked cut at McGregor.

"Patrolman Corrigan rushed up and said, 'What is the meaning of this?'

"'I am Dr. William H. Dobbins and that man is Austin McGregor,' said Dobbins. 'Ask him if he wants to make a complaint.' McGregor said nothing and was led away. Dr. Dobbins left his horse in a side street, and whip in hand ran down Broad street after McGregor, but the latter had disappeared.

"For weeks rumors have been afloat regarding the men, both of whom are prominent in Masonic circles. McGregor is one of the chief executive Masonic officers of the State. Dr. Dobbins charges McGregor with violating one of the oaths imposed upon its members and with disturbing his domestic peace. A week ago the case assumed a legal phase, and Dr. Dobbins intrusted his interests to J. Frank Fort. The case was adjusted, however.

"Mr. McGregor to-day declined to speak about the horsewhipping or of trouble with Dr. Dobbins."

The second clipping bears the heading: "Frank McKean's Fall.—People of Nashua, N. H., Shocked by his Flight in Disgrace.—Over $100,000 are Embezzled.—At Home Trusted and Popular; in Boston a Debauchee." The event has been given considerable publicity in the secular press. The dispatch begins: "Nashua, N. H., Dec. 16.—Ex-Mayor Frank A. McKean, the youngest man in the State ever a gubernatorial candidate, for years the most popular man in Nashua, never defeated here for any of numerous offices, although of the minority party, is a fugitive from the United States government. He is $100,000 short as cashier of the Indian Head National Bank, and as custodian of friends' funds. To-night the bank directors are busy endeavoring to untangle the financial mess he left after his hurried flight of Monday. All the week they and United States Bank Commissioner Dorr have been at work on it. It has continuously grown worse."

Omitting many details of the alleged embezzlement that have been published, we find in the Press' dispatch the following sketch of McKean's character, as referred to in the letter of our correspondent:

"There is intense excitement here, as McKean was regarded as the leading financier. In the crisis last year his bank was the only one not caught with Western securities, McKean's shrewdness saving it. He had the confidence of the public as no other man. The revelations came as a thunderbolt, especially in opening up his immoral private life. In Nashua he was the man of business, high in social and political life, the warm, personal friend of Frank Jones, the State's richest man, and the dispenser of Democratic patronage for the second largest city in the State. As a model home man, a pillar of the Unitarian church, a Mason of the highest degree in the State, who had passed the highest chairs within Nashua's gift in the Odd-fellows and Red Men, he was universally popular.

"In Boston he was the spendthrift, the associate of sports, the supporter of an illicit home, where a woman and three children, not his lawful family, called him their own. He had wild debauches, from which he came out hundreds of dollars behind, and was afterward blackmailed for silence. He was a man about town, prey of all, who absolutely threw away tens of thousands of dollars."

There is much more quite as condemnatory in the dispatch; but the foregoing will suffice to illustrate the position taken by our correspondent.

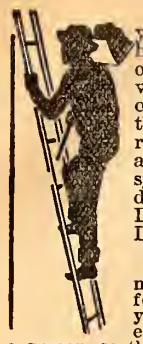
LITERATURE.

PAMPHLETS.

"On the Importance of Good Manners" is an excellent tract published for general distribution by H. B. Hastings, Box 250, Boston, Mass. It is an address delivered on Founder's Day, Vassar college, 1894, by Edward S. Morse. The subject, in itself, without note or comment, but based on every-day observation, is worthy of close consideration by every right-minded citizen. Referring to the multitudinous essays on socialism, labor problems, etc., with their proposed remedies for the present unrest, the author says: "I look in vain for what might be said in behalf of good manners. The subject in its widest sense is not recognized as one of the prime factors in ameliorating the condition of mankind." We have not space to follow the author in his analysis, but can heartily commend a perusal of his pamphlet as a wholesome study. Particularly does he condemn the needless vandalism practiced in the defilement and defacement of works of art and beauty in public places within the reach of mischievous boys and men—the mutilation of fences, the breaking of windows in vacant buildings and the many similar attempts to lay waste the sightly products of wealth and taste, without the shadow of a reasonable excuse. Good manners in the home and elsewhere, as the basis for a life of courtesy and accommodation, are familiarly commended. We bespeak for this pamphlet the widest circulation. It can be obtained for distribution, in quantities, at cost; single copies, 5 cents.



"Specimen Bricks from the Babel of the Higher Critics," by H. L. Hastings, is a sharp review of the preposterous criticisms of the Bible originated and perpetuated by Briggs, Smith, et al., and forms an appropriate addition to Mr. Hastings' Anti Infidel Library. Of the "Higher Criticism" department of this valuable series it is the fifth installment. Of course, it is not designed to treat of the thousand and one alleged "errors" discovered in the Scriptures by these unbelievers, but to exhibit the looseness which is manifested in their wonderful "researches" in Biblical literature. "Specimen bricks" only are reproduced and refuted, to show unlearned readers how difficult it is for unregenerated hearts and minds to understand the true meaning of the Word of God. "Great learning," surely, hath made these higher critics mad; and every misleading word they have uttered in derogation of God's Book will follow them to the judgment. Copies of Hastings' Anti-Infidel series of tracts should be circulated freely in every neighborhood where the virus of infidelity and higher criticism has entered. God's Book and work will stand, whoever opposes them, but wo to those by whom such an offense shall come. Published by H. L Hastings, 47 Cornhill, Boston, Mass, Price 10 cents.

PERIODICALS.

The Preacher's Magazine for February is full of very choice and strong articles, and holds its place as one of the best of its class. The sermon entitled The Capernaum Mission, by Prof. Alex. B. Bruce, D. D., deals with a subject of general attention concerning the caste feeling in religion, and teaches that as far as that spirit prevails in the church it is an anti-Christian society. A vigorous sermon is by Rev. W. L. Watkinson, entitled The Within and the Without. The Rev. Mark Guy Pearse continues his articles on Esther the Queen, under the title, Hoist with his Own Petard. An article by the distinguished Bishop, Charles B. Galloway, D. D., on Ministerial Ethics, is of value to clergymen. The Homiletics for the issue are of great variety and interest. Our Father's House, by Rev. Frederick Harper, A.M., and No Room for Jesus, by Rev. E. B Burroughs, with others, are given in this department. The Short Sermon for Busy Men, by Dr. Joseph Parker, and The Children's Sermon, by Rev. J. Reid Howitt, are bright. Notes and Illustrations as a department contain much of interest. The brief but appropriate Notes of the Sunday-school Lessons, by Dr. Ketcham, are welcome, as also his Outline Addresses on the Golden Texts. The Improved Teacher, by Mrs. Merrill E. Gates, is of great worth. The Prayer Meeting Talks, by the late Dr. Charles H. Deems, are continued. Wilbur B. Ketcham, publisher, 2 Cooper Union, N. Y.; 15 cents.

St. Nicholas for February has several papers of interest and historic value, including The Last Voyage of the Old Frigate "Constitution," by S. G W. Benjamin; How the Cabin-boy (English Admiral Sir Cloudesley Shovel) Saved the Fleet," by Emma E Brown, and new chapters in A Boy of the First Empire. The number is strong in entertaining natural-history sketches. Bruin's Boxing Match, by Charles G. D. Roberts, and Jim, a Tame Crow, by Malcolm Frazer, tell of the pranks of two of Dame Nature's children. Naturalist Hornaday's papers, which have been interrupted for several months, are resumed again with a story of The Doings of a Mole. Mr. Hornaday tells of one industrious mole that tunneled no less than 104 feet in twenty-five hours. Chris and the Wonderful Lamp, by Albert Stearns, tells of the building of a greater palace than Aladdin's by the slave of the lamp. Jack Ballister, Howard Pyle's hero, helps the heroine to escape from the clutches of the pirate. The Three Fishermen: Ruth, Fran. and Nathalie, are received by the Sophomores, as related by Jessie M. Anderson, and so are "fairly in college." The number abounds in pictures, poems, and jingles, many of them for the very little ones. New York: The Century Co; 25 cents.

General Lord Wolseley makes a most important contribution to the literature of the China Japan war. In an article for the February Cosmopolitan, he discusses the situation and does not mince matters in saying what China must do in this emergency. Two other noted foreign authors contribute interesting articles to this number. Rosita Mauri, the famous Parisian danseuse, gives the history of the ballet, and Emile Ollivier tells the story of the fall of Louis Philippe. From every part of the world, drawings and photographs have been obtained of the instruments used to torture poor humanity, and appear as illustrations for a clever article, by Julian Hawthorne, entitled Salvation via the Rack. Mrs. Reginald de Koven, Anatole France, W. Clark Russell, Albion W. Tourgee and William Dean Howells are among the story-tellers for the February number of The Cosmopolitan. Price, 15 cents.

How to Sugar Chestnuts.

Take off the outer brown shell of the chestnuts and put them, when peeled, into boiling water, allowing them to boil quickly for a few minutes. Take them out, drain and skim them. Have ready a number of small wooden splints about the thickness of lucifer matches and about twice as long. Sharpen the points well and stick one into each chestnut. Boil the sugar to the crack, and when this is ready dip each chestnut into the sugar and turn it round and round by means of the splint, so that as the sugar cools it may be spread evenly over the nut. When the sugar begins to set, lay the chestnuts on a buttered slab and remove the splints. Wrap waxed paper around each, and they will keep well for some time. Sometimes it is advisable to dip the chestnuts a second time into the sugar, which should be kept warm, but not boiling, while the dipping is going on. Another plan of sugaring chestnuts is to prepare them as before, or roast them without burning or scorching them, then dip them in white of egg and roll in powdered white sugar. Lay them on a baking sheet and put them in a slow oven to set.

How to Clean Soiled White Shoes.

Put a dime's worth of pipe clay in a dish, dry, and with an old tooth or nail brush which is stiff brush the shoes hard, but always the same way as the grain of the leather, or it will make them rough. Another way is to rub with deodorized benzine first, and then put on a coat of pipe clay, and let it remain on overnight.

How to Remove Moth Patches.

A common prescription is one large pill of taraxacum four nights in the week, sometimes for a period of months. The diet must be regulated to secure good digestion. Then apply a prescription made up of elder flower ointment, an ounce, and sulphate of zinc, 20 grains. This should be mixed well, rubbed in at night and washed off in the morning with plenty of soap and water. When the moth patches are removed, a wash should be used regularly to prevent their return. A good lotion for this purpose contains 2 drams iodine of potassium, an ounce of glycerin and a pint of rainwater. It should be applied with a soft sponge.

How to Make Tough Chicken Tender.

An invariable rule for making beef or poultry tender is to put a spoonful of good cider vinegar in the pot in which it is boiling or in the juices with which the same are basted when roasting. It will not injure the flavor in the least.

How to Line the Collar of a Dress.

Proper stiff lining cannot be bought everywhere for the collar of a gown. In such a case a new linen collar that has never been laundered will be found an excellent substitute.

How to Clean Velvet.

Velvet which has become badly soiled from wear may be renovated to look like new if it is washed in naphtha. Use plenty and work as if you were using water on a bit of calico.

The thousands of cures of scrofula, salt rheum, etc., by Hood's Sarsaparilla constitute absolutely conclusive evidence of its superior merit as a blood purifier. Be sure to get Hood's.

A SECRET LYNCHING SOCIETY.

A mysterious case of mob violence, in which one Barrett Scott was lynched, recently aroused public excitement in Nebraska. The perpetrators of this outrage were at first unknown; but a dispatch from Oneill, Neb., Jan. 26, reports the discovery of a secret society organized for that inhuman work.

All the names of the fifty or more conspirators are known, and the organization is so powerful as to "startle all Nebraska." The murder of Scott, and the abuse of his family, have been clearly traced to this alleged "vigilance committee," who hold sway throughout the whole northern half of Holt county. Twelve years ago a similar society was formed to rid the county of the Middleton and Wade bands of outlaws, but as soon as these marauders were dispersed, the organization became extinct. In a later year it was re organized and became the present unauthorized Nemesis of alleged law-breakers. Last summer they began operations by unlawfully hanging two men —Ralph and John Hills. When they decided to hang Barrett Scott, in secret session, the details of the outrage were entrusted to twelve members of the committee. Some of Scott's friends were in the committee and knew of the decision to lynch him, but time and place were not revealed to them.

Among the fifty or more of the vigilantes who have been recognized are two members of the Nebraska Legislature. This and other facts relating to them were recently disclosed by men who are actually members of the "vigilance committee" and had taken its iron-clad oath of secrecy. These men did not participate in the lynching of Scott, although they knew that it had been determined upon. After Scott's body had been found, finding that his murderers would be pursued to the bitter end, they voluntarily exposed the whole transaction. By their testimony the Attorney-General has been able to ascertain the names of the twelve executioners of Scott, as well as of the other conspirators, together with the passwords and oaths of the organization. Friends of law and order will steadily pursue the vigilantes, supported by the aid and influence of popular anger.

In Noble county, Indiana, we are assured that secret society men are banded together to protect criminals and to persecute all who object to their lawless methods. This information is derived from a former subscriber of the Cynosure, who has lived in the county sixty years, and has felt their cruel vengeance for opposing them.

subordinate lodges, and instruct them in the ritual of the order as practiced in his jurisdiction." Therefore both Orator and Lecturer are, practically, teachers of Masonry; the one of its mysteries, and the other of its ritual.

This being the case, I see nothing to correct in the report except the statement in regard to the doctor's salary. It is unnecessary for the doctor to know the name of the young man referred to, because the doctor is not made amenable to his fraternity by what the young man has said to me.

The estimation in which the doctor is held makes his commendation of Masonry a mighty influence in inducing people to become Masons. But if Gabriel should come to me from Heaven and say, "I am a Master Mason, and I see nothing in Masonry wrong nor contrary to Christianity," I could confront him with an open Bible, and in "love, out of a pure heart and a good conscience and an unfeigned faith," say to him: "Gabriel, you are a fallen angel: you have embraced a cunningly-devised fable by turning the truth of God into a lie. You have insulted the Lord of glory, Jesus Christ, by mocking his resurrection and casting contempt upon his atonement. You have, by the Masonic identification of Hiram, the Tyrian Architect, with the names whereby the devil and his works are described in the Bible, personated a lie and identified yourself with the father of liars. Therefore you, Gabriel, I know to be a fallen angel."

I am to speak upon the claims of Freemasonry as a religious system, as compared with the Bible, at the Lutheran church, corner of Sims street and Waide ave., on Friday evening next, February 8. Dr. Carson and all Freemasons are invited to attend. W. FENTON.

THE PACIFIC COAST AGENT RESTING.

ROSEBURG, Ore., Jan. 23, 1895.

January 9th I landed at Roseburg, Oregon, on my return trip from California.

Taking the advice of Bro. Phillips, of Chicago, I thought I would take a little rest. There had been an announcement for several weeks that the Pacific Coast agent would be in Roseburg to conduct a meeting for a few nights. The meetings are being held on the straight line of separation from the world. All the preaching and work has been on that line.

We delivered one sermon to the church. Then we started in to get sinners saved. We first took the language of Moses: "Who is on the Lord's side?" We sought to show that to be on the Lord's side meant an abandonment of the worship of the "golden calf." Sinners began to tremble under the plain truth, and were soon inquiring the way of life and salvation. A few "Daughters of Rebekah" had threatened to fire me out of Roseburg if I came again, they having heard my address here on the lodge; but they changed their minds. They concluded to try some other plan of antagonism. They got up an opposition meeting.

The Protestant churches of the city united in a meeting three days before ours began. They had all the advantage from the human side; but up to date we have had seven conversions and ten accessions to the church. They have had two conversions. We have seven more seekers at the altar.

This is a signal victory for our "moral reform principles." It is what the people need. Any minister who fears to declare the whole counsel of God for fear of offending his hearers, makes a wonderful mistake.

These are the doctrines that must regenerate the world.

We have here a very faithful young pastor, in the person of Rev. Walter Reynolds. He gives the Gospel no uncertain sound, and is destined to make his mark in the ministry. Rev. E. M. Marsters resides on this field, and is always on hand to assist in the good work. He is an ex-pastor and presiding elder.

This is a week spent to a good purpose—and shall always be remembered by us.

We go to-night to Salem, to speak on the lodge question at the Friends' Polytechnic Institute; then to Oakville again; then Canby and Portland, Puget Sound, etc., etc. P. B. WILLIAMS.

OHIO STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

EVERYTHING MOVED STEADILY, SMOOTHLY AND STRONGLY TO A SUCCESSFUL CLOSE.—WELL ATTENDED FROM ABROAD AND MOST HEARTILY SUSTAINED BY CITIZENS OF XENIA.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

MINUTES OF THE CONVENTION OF THE OHIO STATE CHRISTIAN REFORM ASSOCIATION, HELD AT XENIA, OHIO, JAN. 28 AND 29, 1895.

FIRST SESSION.

The State Christian Reform Association of Ohio, opposed to secret orders, met in convention at Xenia, O., in the Second U. P. church, J. G. Carson, D. D., pastor, Jan. 28, 1895, at 2:20 P. M.

The meeting was called to order by Rev. W. B. Stoddard, Secretary of the Eastern District of the National Christian Association.

The convention was opened with prayer by Rev. T. C. Sproul, of Cedarville, O.; after which a temporary organization was effected by the election of Rev. W. J. Buchanan, of Xenia, Ohio, as President, and Rev. A. Dietrich, of West Carrollton, Ohio, as Secretary.

An eloquent and weighty address of welcome was delivered by Rev. J. G. Carson, D. D.

Rev. J. W. Martin, who was to have responded to this address of welcome, was not present at this session.

After the appointment of these committees, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, of Boston, Mass., in the place of Rev. W. G. Hubbard, who had not arrived, favored the convention with an address on "Some Reasons for not Joining."

The Committee on Correspondence made its report. Letters of sympathy and encouragement were read from the following persons: Rev. H. H. Hinman, of Oberlin, O; Rev. J. P. Robb, of Sidney, O.; Rev. E. Pfeiffer, of Fremont, O.; Rev. R. J. Gault, of Mansfield, O; and Rev. P. H. Wylie. These, with thirty-nine others of a purely business character, were, by the suggestion of the committee, placed in the hands of Rev. W. B. Stoddard, the organizer of the convention.

The Committee on Finance reported that the funds of the Association were well-sustained, yet recommended that collections be taken at the evening sessions of this convention. The report was adopted.

The session was closed with prayer by Rev J. A. Kennedy, of New Concord, O.

EVENING SESSION—FIRST DAY.

At 7.00 P. M. the convention was called to order by the temporary chairman, Rev. W. J. Buchanan.

Rev. I. Frantz opened the session by reading Ephesians 5, and leading the convention in prayer.

The Gordon Quartette of the U. P. Seminary favored the convention with a song: "Rock of Ages."

Rev. S. P. Long, of the Evangelical Lutheran church, of Columbus, O., spoke on "Idolatry," basing his discourse on Isaiah 45 : 20–22.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard, of Boston, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of this convention are due, and are hereby tendered, to the pastor and session, and members of the Second U. P. church for the use of their house of worship in which to hold the first and second sessions of this our gathering.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Rev. H. J. Becker, D. D., of Dayton, O., delivered an address on "The Limitations of the Lodge upon the Immunities of the Citizen."

Rev. J. P. Stoddard read an extract from the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Missouri, showing that Masonry recognizes no authority or government but that of the lodge.

The session was closed with prayer by Rev. H. A. Thompson, D. D.

THIRD SESSION—TUESDAY MORNING.

In the Opera House, at 9.00 A. M., the session was opened with devotional services, led by Rev. C. H. Kiracofe, of Dayton, O., who read Ezekiel 8, and offered prayer; followed by Rev. Mr. Coy, Rev. J. M. Faris, and Rev. J. P. Stoddard.

The presence of Mr. T. C. Spear, of Northwood, and of Mr. Stephen Rife, of Clifton, was announced. These gentlemen addressed the convention on the lodge system, their experience with lodges, etc.

Rev. T. C. Sproul was chosen chairman pro tem., in the place of temporary chairman Rev W. J. Buchanan, who could not be present.

The minutes of the former sessions were read, corrected and adopted.

The Committee on State Officers reported. Their report was considered seriatim, with the following result:—Rev. H. J. Becker, D. D., of Dayton, Ohio, was chosen President for the ensuing year; Rev. J. M. Faris, of New Concord O., Vice President; Rev. A. Dietrich, of West Carrollton, O., Secretary; Rev. W. R. Sterrett, of Cedarville, O., Treasurer.

The item of the committee's report recommending the election of a State Executive Committee was adopted. The members of the Executive Committee for the ensuing year are Revs. J. H. Schneider, J. B. Wilson and S. P. Long, all of Columbus, O.

A resolution was adopted empowering the Executive Committee to fill vacancies that might occur among themselves.

The speakers for the morning were all present, and their addresses were listened to with attention and profit. These were H. A. Thompson, D. D., Field Secretary of the Ohio State Association, of Dayton, O., who addressed the convention on "The Lodge and the Sabbath;" Rev. I. J. Rosenberger, on "Lessons from the Killing of Rev. J. W. Johnston, at Huntington, W. Va., Jan. 10, 1890;" and Rev. J. M. Faris, of the R. P. church, New Concord, O., on "Secret Societies and the Laboring Man."

The presence of Bishop Milton Wright, of Dayton, of the U. B. church, was announced.

The session was closed with prayer by Bishop Wright.

FOURTH SESSION—TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

At 2.00 P. M., in the Opera House, the session was opened with prayer by Rev. J. F. Morton, of Cedarville, O.

Vice President Rev. J. M. Faris presided.

The minutes of the third session were read and approved.

The address by Rev. C. H. Kiracofe, editor of the Christian Conservator, Dayton, O., on "Lodge Charity," and that by Rev. J. S. Thompson, pastor of the R. P. church, Utica, O., were heard; after which the convention was favored with a vocal duet, entitled "Dream-Faces," by Mr. W. P. Cooley and Miss Clara Moore.

The report of the Committee on Finance was then read by Rev. M. L. Baum, of Dayton, O. The report was adopted. It showed that cash to the amount of $120.75 had been gathered, with subscriptions of about $40.00, to be paid within the next three months to the Treasurer, Mr. W. R. Sterrett, Cedarville, Ohio. These subscriptions were secured for the furtherance of the work of the State Association, by Mr. J. W. Collins and Rev. M. L. Baum.

The report of the Committee on Resolutions was heard, then considered item by item, and, after a few slight changes, was adopted as follows:

RESOLUTIONS.

WHEREAS, Christianity is uncompromising in its opposition to all systems of false worship and unscriptural authority over the consciences and conduct of men; and,

WHEREAS, The system of secret lodges has been proved to be both anti-Christian in character and despotic in government; therefore,

Resolved (1), That it is a duty incumbent upon all Christians, and especially upon ministers of the Gospel, not only to refrain from connection with secret societies, but also to bear a faithful testimony against them.

Resolved (2), That the lodge, in imposing upon its members restrictions on individual rights and the liberty of free speech, is a menace to good government and destructive of the principles of virtue and true manhood.

Resolved (3), That the Christian church, so far as she is chargeable with a tacit or virtual approval of these associations, is responsible for encouraging the dangerous and fatal delusion that men can be saved by a religion which ignores Christ and his work.

Resolved (4), That the secret lodges are diverting from the church of Christ members, money, time and influence which the church greatly needs in carrying out her great commission of evangelizing the world.

Resolved (5), That we arraign the lodge system because among its other evils it sets up a religion in direct opposition to Christianity, and therefore to the Christian Sabbath; it deadens the spiritual sensibilities of many of its members who are also communicants in the Christian church; it hinders the securing of efficient Sabbath laws; it perverts the judgment in a proper interpretation of them, and tends to a lax enforcement if not indeed to an ignoring of them; and, finally, it lessens the sanctity of the Sabbath by its noisy parades and unnecessary displays in connection with Sabbath funerals.

Resolved (6), That the folly of the lodge system appears in its claims to be possessed of valuable secrets which can be known only by the initiated; in its claims to antiquity; in it method of initiation; in its regalia; in its claims to be a charitable institution; in its high-sounding titles; in its funeral rites, and, above all, in its pretensions to prepare men for another life in another way than through our Lord Jesus Christ.

After considering and adopting these resolutions one by one, the entire set, with the preamble, was adopted as a whole.

On motion of Rev. J. P. Stoddard, it was resolved that we hereby express to the citizens of Xenia and vicinity our appreciation of and gratitude for the hospitality and cordial welcome extended to us in their homes and at the sessions of our convention; and we pray that they may receive rich blessings from the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

The privileges of the Open Parliament were not utilized by any not in sympathy with our cause. Bishop Wright, of Dayton, in a short address, characterized the system of secrecy as deistic, tyrannical, clannish, conspiring against society for special advantages, corrupting in its influence morally, and as contravening the precepts of the Holy Bible by her principles and practices.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard, at the request of several brethren who could not be present at the evening session, spoke a few moments, illustrating by charts the teachings and practices of Masonry and Odd-fellowship in particular, and of lodges generally.

The session was closed with prayer by Rev. M. L. Baum, of Dayton.

FIFTH AND LAST SESSION—TUESDAY EVENING.

In the Opera House, at 7.00 P. M., the fifth session was preceded by a devotional service. Rev. W. B. Stoddard read the sixth chapter of 2 Corinthians, accompanying the reading with appropriate remarks. Mr. T. R. Aiken, of the Theological Seminary of the U. P. church at Xenia, led in prayer. Psalm 121 was then sung; after which the devotional exercises closed with prayer by Rev. J. Beck, of Richmond, Ind.

The testimony of Rev. W. G. Hubbard, President of the American Peace Association, of Columbus, O., and a member of the Society of Friends, gave his reasons for not joining secret orders. These reasons, summed up in few words, are: 1, we have no time to waste; 2, such orders sap personal religion, and substitute themselves for the church; 3, Jesus forbids us to be unequally yoked together with unbelievers.

A quartet of the Seminary favored the convention with a song.

Rev. W. B. Stoddard hereupon appointed a committee to take a collection to cover the balance of the expense of this convention.

The minutes of the afternoon session were then read and approved.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard then continued his lecture, illustrating by chart the teachings and practices of secrecy.

The minutes of the evening session were then read and adopted, and the convention adjourned with prayer by the Rev. J. A. Kennedy.

A. DIETRICH, State Sec'y.

ON THE WING.

OHIO, Jan. 30, 1895.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Our train speeds on toward the river dividing this from Eastern States. I shall (D. V.) take supper in Pittsburgh, Pa., and breakfast in that dearest of all places on earth—home. I am enjoying the company of father and youngest brother. Brethren Thompson and Faris accompanied us as far as Newark and Concord on their homeward return from the convention. If there are any of the reform army who deserve pensions, they are the wives who keep the altar fires burning at home while their husbands are battling with Satanic elements and eating chickens with their friends.

THE OHIO STATE CONVENTION

for 1895 is a thing of the past. One who has realized his fondest expectations may, in the enthusiasm of the moment, reach wrong conclusions. I should, therefore, be glad if some of the Ohio friends in attendance would write of their impressions. In my judgment this was the best gathering of the kind I have ever attended in the State.

A FEW REASONS

may be given for this conclusion:

1. It thrived though encountering adversities. The weather was very unfavorable for attendance the first day. A blowing snow-storm was to be encountered by those who ventured on the icy road or pavement. Other meetings, uncontemplated, were urging the attendance of friends.

2. Notwithstanding adversities, the attendance was large and representative. While some faces of friends of former years were not to be seen, as expected, there was an exceptionally large attendance of those of whose coming I had no knowledge. The Ohio Synod of Lutheran brethren worked with a will for the success of this gathering. Some fifteen of their staunch young men, pastors in the western part of the State, were there to be counted on the right side.

Brethren Hoover and Rosenberger had evidently been at work and secured the attendance of many German Baptist pastors. The United and Reformed Presbyterian churches of the section were, of course, represented by pastors and people. Bro. Hubbard was the only one of the Friends' ministers that I recognized. The two wings of the United Brethren church were represented on the program, Dr. Thompson being from the Liberals, and Bishop Milton Wright, Dr. Becker, and Rev. C. H. Kiracofe from the Conservatives. The United Presbyterian Theological Seminary dismissed its sessions, so that the forty-five young men there receiving instruction for their chosen work might attend. These gentlemen contributed much, with music and otherwise, to the success of the sessions. The Enrollment Committee handed me papers containing names and addresses of one hundred and fifty of the friends in attendance. There were doubtless some friends who failed to enroll, and of course those opposed would not.

3. All speakers on the program were present, excepting the State president, he being detained by sickness. The addresses were well prepared, and comprehensive; not a repetition of arguments well known to all anti-secrecy reformers, but, as a rule, suggestive, unique, and to the point.

4. For a convention in hard times, the collections were large, about $160, in cash and pledges, being raised. After meeting the convention expense a "nest-egg" of funds was placed in the State treasurer's hands, to be used, under the direction of the State committee, in the furtherance of the work.

I have in mind some who promised to come, or contribute in aid of this convention, who were not there. They, together with any others, who can aid in pushing the State work, will please send their money to W. R. Sterrett, Cedarville, Ohio, the treasurer-elect. Let Mr. Sterrett feel that he is a treasurer indeed. Some have been treasurers only in name. I know it will not be thus in Ohio. An efficient State committee will push the State work if friends place means within their reach.

5. Were there no other evidences of the interest throughout the State, the large number of letters from friends who were unable to attend, presented by the Committee on Correspondence, would be enough. I regret that pressure of work has prevented a personal reply to many of the letters which I read with much interest. For a State that has been without a field-agent for so long, Ohio is to be congratulated that she has so much interest in reform. The friends there say: Let us carry our banner to the front in the name of our King, whom the lodge rejects.

WE HAVE CROSSED THE OHIO RIVER.

The Washington county (Pa.) hills loom up from either side of the track of our iron horse. The curtains of night are fast falling, and I must close.

After a brief rest at home, I go to Philadelphia (D. V.) to prepare to give the devil another set-back as the Pennsylvania friends meet in convention.

W. B. STODDARD.

XENIA, Ohio, Jan. 30, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Before taking a train for my home, permit me to say to the Cynosure readers that the convention, which closed last evening, was—all things considered—well-attended from abroad, and most heartily sustained by the citizens of this city and contiguous region. Speakers came well-prepared to give as well as receive, and all who remained to the close, with whom I spoke, were going back to their homes with renewed courage and inspiration for the work. It was evidently the Master's chosen time and place for a rally against the enemies of his bride; and under his guidance everything moved steadily, smoothly and strongly to a successful close, as the secretary's report will show.

The Morning Breaketh.

Awake, O ye who sleepeth!
Arouse, be on thy guard.
Hear the voice of Him who speaketh.
Be watch and ward.
Prayers from million hearts ascending
He is answering swift and clear,
Mid strife and turmoil lending
Strength and loving cheer.

Know ye not that He is calling
For workers more and more,
Consecrated for the harvest
About our very door?
Souls a-hungered, drifting
Mid darkness, strife and ruin,
Hearts He now is sifting
To let the sunlight in.

Behold, the morning breaketh!
Crimson the east has grown.
The Lord is swiftly coming
To claim once more His own.
Let us, then, put on our armor,
Work for Him while we may,
Gather jewels for His kingdom
And the glad eternal day.

PLAGUE IN THE HOUSE

REV MADISON C. PETERS ON THE VICE OF FRETTING.

Nothing Except Drunkenness Will Destroy Home Happiness So Utterly as Grumbling—Cultivate Good Temper; It Is an Estimable Trait—A Plea For Pure Air.

It seemeth to me there is, as it were, a plague in the house.—Leviticus xiv, 35.

This plague appeared in a little green or reddish spot on the wall of the house. Then the house was locked up for a week. If at the end of that time the spot had not grown any larger, it was simply cut out, and the house was declared safe; but, if the spot had increased, then they knew it was the plague, and all the stones were taken out, and new ones put in their places, and the old ones carried away to a distance. But if after this care had been taken the spot appeared again the house was ordered to be pulled down and a new house to be built with entirely new stones. This plague was called the "fretting leprosy." We have plagues in our houses now something like the "fretting leprosy."

Many very excellent persons whose lives are honorable, and whose characters are noble, pass numberless hours of sadness and weariness of heart. They are miserable because they have failed to adopt the true philosophy of life. They wait for happiness, instead of going to work to make it, and while they wait they torment themselves with borrowed troubles, with fears, forebodings, morbid fancies and moody spirits till they are all unfitted for happiness under any circumstances. They cherish ambitions which they don't deserve and could not enjoy if they were within their grasp; long for wealth they have not earned, sigh for honors they have not won and demand attentions they have not merited. Sometimes they undervalue the good they possess, shade the present with every cloud of the past and revel in sad memories with a sort of morbid relish for the stimulus of their miseries. The best people have their days of being generally out of sorts, but there are people who are habitual grumblers, and who are never happy unless they are miserable.

There is no vice, except drunkenness, which can so utterly destroy the peace and happiness of a home as fretting. Fretters are always in hot water and forever in trouble, and if one might believe them society would be found in a shocking state. They rail at everything lofty or lowly, and when they have no grumbling to do they grumble because there is nothing further to grumble about.

Bad Temper.

Then there is another plague—bad temper. No trait of character is more valuable than good temper. Home can never be made happy without it. A man may fight duels all his life, if he be so disposed. Life takes its hues in a great degree from the color of our own mind. If we are kind, the world will treat us kindly. If we are suspicious, men will learn to be cold and cautious to us. All that you expect to be in heaven you ought to try to be from day to day with your family

A plague spreads, and if it goes on the whole house may need to be pulled down This teaches us not to despise the beginnings of evil. Take care of your little bad habits. Little ones are only great ones condensed, as the serpent in the egg, the explosion in the cold powder.

Plea For Pure Air.

The houses in the land and time of our text were not aired very well, and so the "dry rot" often attacked the timber, rotting it away. The "dry rot" has attacked many of our houses. Ventilation is something we know little and care less about. Your morbid sensitiveness to cold is the result of the bad habit of breathing impure atmosphere. Most people live in rooms almost hermetically sealed, breathing again and again the carbonic acid given out from their bodies, and in addition to this also inhaling the same poisonous gas given off from their fires, which must remain to vitiate the atmosphere of the room, because everything is so tightly closed that it cannot escape.

Let the Sun In.

The plague always breaks out where the sun never comes. Man in just like a plant. It is only in the sunlight he can live. If you let the sun shine into your houses, the carpets may lose some of their rich, deep color, but this lost color will pass into the cheeks and lips of your children. An Italian proverb says, "Where the sun does not come the doctor does."

The real sunshine of the house is cheerfulness Every one knows what it is to get on the south side of a building when the wind is blowing raw and cold from the north. Such is the influence of a sunny disposition. The times may be hard, but it will make them no easier to wear a sad countenance. It is the sunshine and not the cloud that makes the flower The sky is blue ten times where it is black once. You have troubles, but so have others. None are free from them, and perhaps it is well that none should be. The sailor never acquires skill on a dull sea. It is your duty as Christians to extract all the happiness and enjoyment you can without and within you, and, above all, you should please God by looking on the bright side of things. Cultivate Christian cheerfulness. Let its inspiring influence be felt in every heart. Let cheerful words fall from every tongue and bright smiles play on every face.

Don't.

Don't tell everything you hear. Don't blister your tongue with backbiting. Don't be the devil's bellows to blow up the fire of strife in the community. Either cut off a bit of your tongue or season it with the salt of grace. Be quick at work and slow at talk. Think of your own faults ere other people's faults you tell. "People who live in glass houses should never throw stones."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 10. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Becoming as little children.—Luke xviii, 15-17; Math. xi, 25, 26. (Union meeting with the Juniors suggested, led by Junior superintendent.)

In each of the topical references there is a different sense in which we are to become as little children and each for a different purpose. In Luke it is asserted that we are to become as little children that we may enter the kingdom of heaven, while in the reference in Matthew in a different sense we are to become as children that we may understand the mysteries of God's plan of redemption.

1. Becoming as little children that we may enter the kingdom of heaven (Luke xviii, 15-18). "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in nowise enter therein." These are the words of Christ to the disciples when they rebuked the people for bringing their infants to Him that He might bless them. The meaning is that to enter the kingdom of heaven one must become possessed of such a disposition as a child possesses. There are many characteristics of the natural child life disposition that could with profit be possessed by the Christian, but only the two most prominent need be referred to—one positive, the other negative—humility and confidence. To enter the kingdom of heaven we are to return to these natural dispositions of child life. Humbleness is a characteristic of children, and is also one of the necessary requirements to admission to God's kingdom. God hates pride and arrogancy and turns from them, but He is ever ready to receive the contrite and humble spirit. Confidence is another element of child life and of the true child of God. The child trusts his parents implicitly and with the heart, simply because they are his parents. So we are to trust God absolutely because he is God.

2. Becoming as little children that we may understand the great truths of the gospel (Math. xi, 25, 26). "I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes" (Math. xi, 25). These are words taken from a prayer of Christ probably offered to God after the return of the 12 from a missionary tour with cheering reports. It alludes to the fact that God had revealed the things of Christ's kingdom to unlearned and uncultured men, such as the Galilean fisherman rather than to the wise and intelligent, such as the scribes and Pharisees. This fact is still prominent today. The world by human wisdom knows not God. The greatest scholars, the greatest statesmen, have often been the greatest strangers to the gospel mysteries. We often wonder why it is so. It was God's will. "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in Thy sight." This fact teaches us that, whether ignorant or learned, to understand God's secrets we must come as children, as if we had no earthly wisdom and learning, and believe in God not because of our education or wisdom, but with the same confidence and childlike trust as if we had none of these things.

Bible Readings.—Ps. cxlviii, 12, 13; Prov. xv, 33; Isa. xi, 1-6; Eccl. xii, 1; Math. xviii, 1-4; xxi, 15, 16; Mark x, 13-15; Luke ix, 46-48; John iii, 1-5; I Cor. xiv, 20; Eph. iv, 1, 2.

English Endeavorers Enthusiastic.

Dr. Clark, who has recently returned from abroad, reports the enthusiasm for the society in Great Britain as quite equal to that which he finds in America. The Baptists are the leaders numerically in Christian Endeavor in England, although other evangelical denominations are coming well to the fore. England took the famous badge banner for the greatest number of societies formed during the last year, and our English friends are evidently inclined to keep it on their side of the water. Dr. Clark says that much interest in the great international convention in Boston next July is already manifested among the societies of Great Britain, and an excursion is even talked of from Ireland to attend that meeting. Altogether he feels that the prospect was never so encouraging for the Endeavor movement as today in all denominations and in all parts of the world. Like the Sunday school, it is rapidly becoming a worldwide movement.

Technical Training.

Writing in The North American Review, Miss Elizabeth Bisland pleads for giving women more technical training in the work to which they have for the most part to devote their lives. She says:

"The old practical rule of thumb apprenticeship of the household having passed away, something should replace it. Why should not schools for girls give courses of instruction in housewifery, not the mere cooking of chops or dusting of chairs, but instruction as to how houses should be made and furnished and their sanitation assured; in the chemistry of cooking, of foods and of assimilation; in the laws of physiology and hygiene and something about fundamental economics, of which the average woman is totally ignorant, though she is the spender and distributer of the money the men accumulate?"

Life's Sweets.

There are two sweet things in human life—to be happy oneself and to make another so. When the first is gone, the next, thank God, is always left.

Do not look yourself in your room too soon, too often or too long. Dash away the tears. Play the waltzes for the children. Put away your crape. Wear a white dress and a high mien and the smile of those who conquer the selfishness of pain on Christmas day.

The best friends of the tempted, of the young, of the erring and the overlooked are those who have known the sorest anguish and have achieved the sweetest peace.

Such, too, are the most sacred flowers of our festivals and the dearest angels of our happy homes.—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

A Coffee Hint.

A delightful woman of the present—a dear girl who asks if her hat is on straight just as you and I do—and one of the most delightful hostesses in New York, gave a little dinner the other night and introduced a wrinkle with the after dinner coffee, which was new to me and too good to keep, I think. It comes from the Lotus club, where I believe many good things are originated. It is this: Before you put your square of sugar in the cup rub it briskly on the outside of a lemon. Get the six sides of the lump in contact with the lemon peel. When it dissolves in your coffee (the sugar, not the lemon), you will find that an almost imperceptible fragrance lingers about the liquid that will carry you into a land of flowers and fruit and perpetual sunshine.—New York Recorder.

Woman's Influence.

The Earl of Shaftesbury once said in a public address, which he gave on the subject of woman's influence: "The character of the women of a country is of greater importance to that country's nobility than the character of the men. Direct all the power you have to touch the hearts of women."

The Modern Woman.

The woman of today, as we hear of her, belongs to a class for each day in the week and has every afternoon and evening filled up with gay functions. She is eager to know all about politics, to understand the great poets and writers of the day, especially those that are counted the most difficult to comprehend. She wants to belong to societies that will make the world better and that will permit her to talk about them in public, and yet she desires as well to keep the position in life to which she was born. Speak to her suddenly and see her start. That means overtaxed nerves. Get her to talking to you about one of her plans and see how she flushes, notice the unnatural brilliancy of her eyes and watch the quivering of her lips and her hands. That woman is on the verge of nervous prostration. And why? Because she is permitting herself to be worn out to interest people who do not care in the least for her.—Ladies' Home Journal.

The Cross of Sacrifice.

To hide the cross of sacrifice and self surrender behind the flowers of æstheticism, or to overlay the pleading of that sacrifice with the gratification of artistic tastes or the indulgence of sentimental emotions, is to God a dishonor, not a praise.—Churchman.

Christian Endeavor Gossip.

A blue jacket of Uncle Sam's navy, a Floating Christian Endeavorer, has been laying aside a tenth of his income recently, which he has given through the American board for missions in Turkey, in which he is interested.

Every one of the 1,200 convicts in the Kentucky penitentiary received a letter from the Christian Endeavorers of Louisville Christmas.

At the recent South Australian Christian Endeavor convention this remedy for long winded speakers was proposed, "Sing them down."

There are 514 societies of Christian Endeavor in Connecticut, with a membership of 35,000, and 180 junior societies, with more than 7,000 members.

A Cumberland Presbyterian social committee recently sent out an invitation to a social that contained the following line: "Admission fee—a pleasant smile and a hearty handshake."

An Australian senior society is taking a course of Bible studies, each member in turn writing a paper on an appointed subject, which becomes the basis of discussion at the meetings of the society.

The treasurer of the Texas Christian Endeavor union says, "To use a Texas term, we hope to come in 'droves' to Boston in 1895."

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

THE PICKANINNIES.

The Happy Little Darky Children of the Sunny South.

The cheerfulest—tho very cheerfulest—thing on earth is a well fed but not over clad pickaninny.

What is a pickaninny? Why, it's a rolly poly black baby. Pickaninny is the name that Americans have given to the children of their dear, faithful black folk.

I verily believe that half the sunshine in the southern part of the United States—and where is sunshine brighter?—is made by the darkies.

Five things are necessary to the entire happiness of a darky child, and five only—food, any amount of good food, warmth, ample leisure, fellowship and an adequate escape valve for its superlative and ineradicable emotionalness. The darky children are naturally fat, and it seems their strongest instinct is to increase that natural plumpness.

In the south they will lie in the sun all day and suck sugar cane. And three times a day they will pause to eat a square meal of possum potpie, of fried chicken, of sweet potato pie and of doughnuts.

Next to being fed a pickaninny likes to be warm. Of all warmths he most likes the warmth of sunshine. Failing that, he likes to roll himself in thick possum skins or coonskins and crouch in front of a huge log fire.

The only baths of which he is madly fond are sun baths and mud baths. Into a bath which combines both he plunges with ecstasy.

But, oh, how his mother scrubs him—at least once a day!—if he has had the rare luck to be born on an old Virginia plantation. And how his face shines after it! His gleaming black face reflects the sunshine from without and perspires sunshine from within. And where the sun of heaven strikes most directly on his fat face it makes dazzling white high lights on his black, black skin.

The pickaninnies are industrious in nothing but happiness. What better industry could children exercise? They do no voluntary overwork.

They roll among the sugar cane and corn, they wallow in the yellow sunshine, and they are as happy as the mocking birds, whose music they echo. The darkies are all musical. If their music is rather primitive, it is vastly sweet. Every darky boy and girl can whistle wonderfully. They mock the blackbirds, the robins, the thrushes and whippoorwills and a score of other wild birds with the perfection of imitation. They sing, too—like the full throated black angels that they are. If those who are American born hear them singing in faroff Australia or in gray London, their eyes fill and their throats choke. But when they sing at home—when they gather about their vine covered huts—ah, then their songs come rich with all the plaintive majesty of primitive melody and of genuine feeling.—American Cor. Pall Mall Budget.

Catching the Mouse.

Nine players lay their hands one on the top of the other. The lowest draws out his hand, saying "One." The next lowest draws out his, puts it at the top and cries "Two," and so on till "Nine" is cried. This last player seizes one of the hands which lie beneath his own (or more if he can), saying, "I have caught the mouse," and then the hand caught pays the forfeit. But it is not easy to catch one. At the word "Nine" all snatch away their hands as quickly as possible. This game must be played very fast to be funny.—New York Advertiser.

Why She Did Not Laugh.

A little 3-year-old girl went to a children's party. On her return she said to her parents:

"At the party a little girl fell of a chair. All the other girls laughed, but I didn't."

"Well, why didn't you laugh?"

"'Cause I was the one that fell off."—London Tit-Bits.

The Boy Who Dares.

Show me the boy who dares to do right,
Though his comrades may laugh and sneer,
I'll show you a boy who, with all his might,
Will stand his ground without fear.

Show me the boy who dares to say no
When his honor is put to the test,
I'll show you a boy that's going to row
His canoe ahead of the rest.

Show me a boy that's good to the old,
To his mother is tender and kind,
I'll show you a boy with a heart of gold,
And his equal hard to find.

Show me a boy that loves the truth
And cares for his books and school,
I'll show you a boy—a boy forsooth—
That a nation may some day rule.

Dare to do right! Dare to say no!
And against all wrong raise your hand.
In manhood you reap what in youth you sow
And be honored by all the land.

—Frances Mallette Hawley.

SAVED BY KINDNESS.

After Twenty Years of Tippling a Drunkard's Heart Was Touched.

The following recital was recently made by a stalwart temperance man:

"I had been a drinking man for 20 years, had ruined my chances in life and made my family wretched. I did not believe in God or humanity. A whisky soaked brain is not adapted to any noble form of faith either for this world or that which is to come. One day about 17 years ago, when I returned from the shop to my little home, which was bare of almost every comfort, to say nothing of luxuries, my wife told me that a lady had been to see us and left an orange apiece for the three children and some pretty cards, with a 'Merry Christmas' for us all.

"Nobody ever came to our house those days, and I was surprised, for this lady was the wife of one of the trustees in the great university, a business man who stood very high, and she had plenty of money, position, education and occupation. Indeed she had everything that we had not. So I sat myself down to try to reason out some bad motive for her coming, as it was my custom then to look for bad motives in people rather than good ones.

"But as her husband was not in politics and could not desire my vote, and as he was not in any business where I could by any means be of service to him, and as neither he nor she could gain anything from us, although I racked my brain to find something that they could gain, I was obliged to say to myself, 'It must have been what Christians call the "love of God,"' and when I had come to this conclusion my heart melted a little, and I said to myself, 'If it is true that there is such a thing as the love of God, I shall reform,' and from that day I have never tasted intoxicating liquors."—Union Signal.

The Perdition of Living Men.

There is an American desert more bleak and desolate and famished than ever western wind or ravening wolf howled over. Across its arid ridges capital puffs its flabby jowls in deadly peril and gibbers like an idiot about the scenery and the sunset, and labor gasps and yelps and staggers, and with dry tongue protruding snaps at friend and foe like a mad dog. It reeks with the blood of millions who would else have been stars in the crown of Jesus Christ. It whitens the bones of innocent women and little children, dragged thither from our very altars by the greedy, red mouthed pack of 250,000 saloons. It is drunkenness—the mauvaise terre, the scourge, the pestilence, the perdition of living men, the wrath of God for violated harvests and mercenary public virtue. And we have been fleeing from it or dancing about ridiculous incantation fires or drinking wine and praising the gods of license gold. The hand of Jehovah writes upon the wall of the world in burning letters, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord!" The whisky demon ought to die, and any religion that postpones or ignores that ought to die, too, and be buried with it in the middle of the king's highway. And it will.—John G. Wooley at Cleveland.

Pity the Inebriate.

I desire to enlist your Christian charity and sympathy toward every poor human being who has contracted the horrible disease of alcoholism. I have always pitied the poor, confirmed inebriate more than any other human being, for I have seen him in the asylums and in the hospitals and prisons and reformatories. I have seen the victim of strong drink strapped to the bed which he imagined full of scorpions and reptiles.

I have seen him crouching, trembling, shrieking, weeping, yelling, moaning and also demoniacally grinning and supplicating or holding piteous, pleading, agonizing converse with the horrible, fantastic demons and monsters of his own diseased, inflamed brain. Oh, the horrors of delirium tremens, which rack and torture and rend the miserable body of the victim! The sufferings in the last stages are so intense that with a supreme convulsion the soul flees, appalled, trembling, and stands cowering and stained with guilt before the Almighty Judge.—Father Abbott.

Increase In Rum Exports.

The returns of exports for the fiscal year ending June 30 being complete it is interesting to note how sadly eloquent figures can speak. The aggregate value of exports is $869,207,941, or $38,177,156 more than for the previous year. Wheat and wheat flour exported brought $40,350,516 less than the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893. But the exports of New England rum for 1894 were valued at $1,081,716, against $778,006 for preceding year. Wheat loses, while rum gains proportionally. Whisky to the amount of 4,105,639 gallons, valued at $3,105,639, was sent in 1894, against 1,550,452 gallons, valued at $1,461,013, in 1893.—New York Voice.

Sink Like a Man.

A clergyman complained to the late Sir Andrew Clark of feeling low and depressed, unable to face his work and tempted to rely on stimulants. Sir Andrew saw the position was a perilous one and that it was a crisis in the man's life. He dealt with the case and forbade resort to stimulants, when the patient declared he would be unequal to his work and ready to sink. "Then," said Sir Andrew, "sink like a man."—London Christian Age.

ALE AND BEER.

Before Their Advent Drunkenness Was Not So General as Now.

Heretofore the fight against intemperance has been made on moral and social lines mainly. Is it not about time to turn it on to physiological lines and begin warning the public against danger to health?

There is no greater disease producer and aggravator of disease than alcohol in any or all of its forms, and the simpler and more sedative the form the more destructive it is.

Before the advent of beer and ale as popular and so called harmless beverages there was comparatively little mischief done by liquor. This answers that ever ready question: Why was drunkenness not more general when whisky was cheap and free? It also explains why so many are deeply and fatally diseased before they have drunk nearly as much as some of their ancestors.

Beer and whisky form a very bad combination. At least those who begin a spree on beer and end it on whisky say it is simply awful.

The same is true in regard to the drinking habit. If it is begun by drinking beer for health, or for fun, or for no particular reason, and is followed by drinking whisky for its effect, the result is most disastrous. Nearly every confirmed drunkard or sot of the present time began as a beer drinker. The small amount of alcohol in this beverage is sufficient to produce a change in the tone or sensibility of the nerves, which if continued establishes an abnormal condition, and this condition causes the desire or appetite for alcohol. Where beer fails to satisfy the demands, stronger liquor is resorted to.

When sensible, reasoning men and women have become satisfied that beer is a most dangerous beverage, and that its continued use tends to lower the vitality of the body by paralyzing delicate and highly sensitive nerve filaments, and to eventually impair the health of body and mind, they will take special pains to so instruct and so guide their children as to keep them from becoming beer drinkers.—Erasmus Wilson.

The Rum Drinkers Were All Dead.

Chauncey Depew, against whom no one could think of charging a Puritanic spirit, speaks as follows on the temperance question: "Twenty-five years ago I knew every man, woman and child in Peekskill, and it has been a study with me to mark boys who started in every grade of life with myself to see what had become of them. I was up last fall and began to count them over, and it was an instructive exhibit. Some of them became clerks, merchants, manufacturers, lawyers, doctors. It is remarkable that every one of those who drank is dead. Not one living of my age. Barring a few who were taken off by sickness, every one who proved a wreck and wrecked his family did it from rum and no other cause. Of those who were churchgoing people, who were steady, industrious, hardworking men, who were frugal and thrifty, every one of them, without exception, owns the house in which he lives and has something laid by, the interest of which, with the house, would carry him through many a rainy day."—Irish World.

A Good Servant, but a Bad Master.

I believe all alcoholic liquors and beverages of any and every kind containing alcohol to be inevitably injurious to all persons who are in perfect health and well nourished. The evil effects produced upon the liver, stomach and kidneys by habitual use of alcohol beverages are too well known to the medical pathologist to render it necessary to dwell upon them. Alcohol is a good servant in the hands of an intelligent physician, but a bad master for the foolish man who uses it as a beverage. It follows, therefore, as a natural and logical sequence that alcoholic liquor of any kind, description or character whatsoever should never be used except when prescribed by an able and conscientious physician in cases where sickness makes it absolutely necessary that it should be given as medicine.—Dr. Austin Flint.

The Devil's Best Friend.

Alcoholic liquor of any kind, even at its best and purest, cannot fail to be injurious to any one in health. It destroys the brightest intellect; it degrades the purest woman; it corrupts the judicial ermine; it undermines the very foundations of government; it is the devil's best friend and instrument.—Selected.

The Gothenburg System.

The Westminster Gazette, whose figures are indisputable, gives the proportion of drunkenness as 1 to every 26 of population in Gothenburg compared to 1 to every 206 and 1 to every 406 in Cardiff and Southampton. Surely not a convincing argument in favor of the Gothenburg system.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VII, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, FEB. 17.

Text of the Lesson, Luke x, 25-37—Memory Verses, 25-27 — Golden Text, Lev. xix, 18—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

25. "And behold, a certain lawyer stood up and tempted Him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" After the discourse of the last lesson on humility Jesus rebuked James and John for their uncharitableness and zeal, which was not of God, after which He sent out the 70 to heal the sick and preach the kingdom (Luke ix, 49, to x, 16). Then follow probably the events and teaching of John vii, 2, to x, 21, after which the 70 return and report as in Luke x, 17-24, after which comes the lesson of today, in which the lawyer, one of the wise and prudent of verse 21, is instructed concerning eternal life. The lawyer was not so anxious to obtain eternal life as he was to try Jesus, and like those of chapter xi, 54, get Him to say something whereby they might accuse Him.

26. "He said unto him: What is written in the law? How readest thou?" This lawyer was supposed to be well versed in the law of Moses, and therefore to that the Lord directed him. Many questions are asked today which should be answered by: What is written? How readest thou? instead of by argument or words of ours.

27. "And he, answering, said, Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself." He quoted promptly and correctly from Deut. vi, 5, and Lev. xix, 18. He did not lack knowledge. He could quote from the Scriptures better than many among us, but mere knowledge of the truth does not save any one. It is the reception and application of the truth, or rather of Him who is the truth, that gives eternal life.

28. "And He said unto him: Thou hast answered right. This do, and thou shalt live." If any one could perfectly keep the law of God from his youth up, as summarized in the quotations of this lawyer, he would have life and need no Saviour, or, as it is written in Gal. iii, 21, "If there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law." There is nothing wrong with or lacking in the law. The failure is in guilty man, who cannot keep God's holy law and whose mouth is shut by it (Rom. viii, 3; iii, 19).

29. "But he, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbor?" He could not say he had kept the law, it condemned him and proved him guilty, but he was not willing to own it and plead guilty. He would rather, if possible, establish his own righteousness, thus proving himself ignorant of God's righteousness, even the Christ with whom he was talking, who is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth" (Rom. x, 3, 4; II Cor. v, 21).

30. "And Jesus, answering, said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment and wounded him and departed, leaving him half dead." By a clear and simple illustration Jesus would patiently show this one who tempted Him the meaning of the word "neighbor." The poor robbed and wounded and helpless man is suggestive of the forlorn and helpless condition of the sinner whom satan has cast down, but the sinner is wholly and not half dead (Eph. ii, 5).

31. "And by chance there came down a certain priest that way, and when he saw him he passed by on the other side." The priest's lips should keep knowledge (Mal. ii, 7), but Jesus said to the lawyers that they had taken away the key of knowledge, not entering themselves and hindering those who would enter (Luke xi, 52). He also pronounced a woe upon the lawyers because they loaded people with burdens which they themselves would not touch with one of their fingers (xi, 46).

32. "And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him and passed by on the other side." Levi is the third person of whom it is said in Scripture that he walked with God (Gen. v, 24; vi, 9; Mal. ii, 6), but not all of his posterity walked with God, or there would not be this record of this one. The Levites were joined with the priests in the ministry of the temple (Num. viii, 19).

33. "But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was, and when he saw him he had compassion upon him." Let us remember that Jesus is talking to a Jewish lawyer; that priests and Levites were the highest and supposed to be the holiest of religious dignitaries among the Jews, and that Samaritans were a class with whom the Jews had no dealings (John iv, 9). Therefore Jesus is finding something good in a despised outsider, as we might say, in speaking thus of this Samaritan.

34. "And went to him and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast and brought him to an inn and took care of him." Here is a wonderful man surely, an outcast in Jewish eyes, a worse than a nobody in the eyes of priests and Levites, but see his conduct and observe that it is the Lord Jesus who is telling us all this and learn at least one thing—that it is not outward name or fame that the Lord looks upon, but actions and motives.

35. "And on the morrow, when he departed, he took out twopence and gave them to the host and said unto him, Take care of him, and whatsoever thou spendest more when I come again I will repay thee." If the poor, helpless one is suggestive of the sinner, who can the good Samaritan be but Jesus Himself, an outcast and despised by the Jews, a nobody in the eyes of priests and Levites, scribes and Pharisees, yet see His heart full of compassion as He goes about doing good.

36. "Which now of those three, thinkest thou, was neighbor unto him that fell among the thieves?" Jesus has not directly answered the question, "Who is my neighbor?" but He has told His story. He has shown the picture, and now He would have the lawyer answer his own question. Do not fail to notice in the last verse the words, "When I come again, I will repay thee," and compare Luke xiv, 14; Rev. xxii, 12.

37. "And he said, He that shewed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, Go and do thou likewise." All commands to do good things addressed to unsaved people are to convince them of their inability to do the same, that so they may confess their sinfulness and helplessness and receive Jesus as their salvation. This is the work of God that ye believe on Him, and to believe on Him is to receive Him (John vi, 29; i, 12). Until we receive Him we are still in the flesh and therefore cannot please God (Rom. viii, 8, 9). The remaining verses of Luke x show us that He Himself is the one thing needful for saints as well as sinners.

CLEVELAND'S SPECIAL MESSAGE.

Its Burden Is Retire the Greenbacks to Save the Gold Reserve.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—The president has sent a brief message to congress on the financial situation. He admits the practical failure of the two recent bond issues, and shows why they failed—because the man who could send gold to Europe at a profit and the other man who was doubtful in these days of silver agitation of getting the equivalent of gold for the greenback when he wanted it, were both presenting the greenbacks for redemption and thereby drawing the gold from the treasury.

As long as the greenbacks and other redeemable paper were in circulation this process would go on, and he therefore advises the issue of 3 per cent. bonds to retire and cancel the greenbacks and keep the reserve up to its limit. The reissue of greenbacks is the trouble, mostly, in his view. The bonds are to be used by national banks as security for their issues of currency.

The plan is received by silver men with strong opposition, by anti-silver (at 16-to-1) Democrats with approval, and Republicans who say anything—except, of course, silver Republicans—also approve it.

MISS FLAGG'S LATEST NEW BOOK!

"A Prisoner of Hope."

COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.

Price, $1.25.

We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident, In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy, postage prepaid.

HUNDREDS DROWN.

Most Terrible Ocean Disaster Since the Victoria Sank.

VICTIMS AROUSED FROM SLUMBER

Only to Meet the Inrushing Flood and Be Swept Back to Die—No Time to Do Anything—Only Three Boats Launched and One of Them Founders Almost Immediately—Heartrending Account Given by One of the Survivors—List of the Saved as Far as Known.

LONDON, Jan. 31.—The sinking of the steamer Elbe, of the North German Lloyd, the most terrible ocean disaster for years except that of the Victoria battleship in the Mediterranean in 1893, took place off Lowestoft about 5:30 a. m. yesterday. She was steaming along at an ordinary speed when through the mist she sighted off her port bow the Crathie, bound from Rotterdam to Aberdeen. Before the collision could be averted the Crathie had run into the Elbe. The North German Lloyd steamer was struck above the engine room and began to fill so rapidly that there was only time to lower three of her boats and one of these was swamped shortly after getting away from the steamer.

Sole Survivors of the Disaster.

The first boat contained the third officer, chief engineer, the purser and about twenty passengers. The occupants of the boat were picked up by a couple of fishing smacks and were taken to Lowestoft, where they have been landed. It has been found difficult to get the officers of the steamship to make any statement until they have communicated with the agents of the Elbe, and the passengers who have been rescued are as yet too excited to tell anything but rambling stories. But from what can be gathered but a very short time must have elapsed between the collision and the sinking of the Elbe.

Like Drowning in a Box.

Nothing is known as to the fate of the occupants of the third boat which was loaded from the Elbe, but it is hoped that they will either be picked up by some passing vessel or else succeed in making a landing on the coast. From what one of the rescued men says the disaster must have been one of the most terrible in the history of such catastrophes. All passengers are understood to have been below and asleep at the time the collision occured, and nearly all of them must have been either drowned below or have met death while seeking to rush upon the deck. The man who furnishes this information was in such an excited state that little more could be gathered from him than exclamations of horror.

No Time to Utter a Prayer.

He repeated time and again: "It was terrible. It was terrible. The poor women and children went down without hardly being able to utter a prayer. It was terrible. The steamship must be full of dead bodies. They were caught like rats in a trap. I can't tell you any more about it. All I know is that I heard a terrible crash, and it was followed by an awful sound of rushing water and escaping steam. It was very dark down below where I was. But somehow I managed to push my way on deck. The ship resounded with heartrending cries from all quarters, although the officers seemed to be doing all they could to calm the people. I saw a lot of sailors making a rush for a boat, and I joined in with them.

Fighting for a Chance for Life.

"Somehow the boat was lowered and I managed to scramble into it, although it seemed to me as if about 100 people were trying to do the same. We pushed some of them away, for it was utterly impossible to load the boat any more and we could see that the Elbe was doomed. She was rolling terribly aud settling down on one side in a manner which seemed to threaten turning her over entirely. Somehow or other we got away and a number of people were drowned as they jumped into the sea and swam after us. Of course we could not put back for anybody or we should have been pulled under.

Goes Down, the Tomb of Hundreds.

"Some time later—I can't say how long, for I was too horrified to think—the Elbe gave a fearful lurch sideways and sank with a bursting sound. It seemed to me as if something blew up on board of her as she weut down. I don't know what became of the vessel that ran into us. I had a brother on board who was from Germany, like myself. We were on our way to the United States where we have relatives."

OTHER DETAILS OF THE HORROR.

Lists of the Saved and of the Cabin Passengers—Rescue of the Saved.

There is some disagreement among the survivors as to the number of boats that were launched. One survivor, Karl A. Hoffmann, declares that only two boats were launched. One of these was swamped instantly and the only one of its occupants, a girl named Anna Boecker, who was bound for Southampton, was rescued. She clung to a piece of wreckage, which she grasped so tightly that it was only with difficulty that she was dragged into the second boat. She was just returning from the deathbed of her father aud mother,

Meanwhile the cry was raised on the doomed vessel for the women and children to go over to the other side of the steamer, away from the port side, in which was the great gaping hole, caused by the Crathie. The half fainting women and terror-stricken children hurried to the starboard side, but they had scarcely reached the boats when the huge vessel lifted her bows high in the air and then slowly and silently sank, stern foremost, beneath the waves, taking with her her human freight.

Barely twenty minutes elapsed between the collision and the sinking of the steamer. A heavy sea was running and the wind, which was from the east southeast, was bitterly cold. The small boat containing the survivors tossed about until 11 o'clock in the morning. The survivors were nearly frozen, having hardly any clothing, and their sufferings were intense. Eventually the fishing smack Wild Flower saw the signals and bore down on the boat. In a short time the survivors were taken aboard of her, where everything possible was done for their comfort.

Following is a correct list of the survivors—Cabin passengers: Karl Hoffman, Eugene Schlegel, John Verera, Anna Boecker, Betweeu Deck Passenger Bothen, Chief Engineer A. Neusfell, Third Officer Stollberg, Purser Wester, Herr Dehart (a Bremerhaven pilot), Robert Grenuham (an English pilot), and ten of the crew.

The total uumber of persons on board, as obtained at this writing was as follows: Officers, 19; crew, 149; passengers, 240; cattlemen returniug to the United States, possibly, 20. It is still claimed that two boat loads got safely away, but only one has been accounted for. If there were twenty cattlemen the total on board aggregates 425. Allowing that both the boats are safe—containing about 40 persons—the loss of life is 385. If only one boat is safe the loss is 405. Tho Crathie, which sank the Elbe, arrived safely at Amsterdam, leaking badly.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

Proceedings of the National Lawmakers in Both Houses.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—The session of the senate was unusually eventful in giving expression to the feeling which has been aroused by the financial question. Sherman of Ohio spoke for the first time since the new phases of the financial situation were presented. Vest declared that the president was seeking to make congress accessory to the welding of the single gold standard on the people. The senate spent the rest of the day in executive session on the Japanese treaty, which was ratified.

The house entered upon the consideration of the bill to fund the debt due the government from the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific railroads with 3 per cent. fifty-year bonds. Reilly, the chairman of the Pacific road committee, consumed most of the day with the opening argument in favor of the measure. Harris of Kansas made the only other speech. He was bitterly opposed to the bill.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—The senate adopted comprehensive resolutions calling for information of all sorts as to the financial condition of the country. Peffer offered a resolution to refer to a special election in October next the question of what to do financially. The balance of the day was devoted to the District appropriation bill. During the debate the Republicans declared that the appropriations this session would run over $1,000,000,000.

The house passed the bills to regulate navigation on inland waters and for the relief of the First State bank, of Mound City, Ills. The Pacific railways refunding bill was then debated in committee of the whole.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—The financial question again came before the senate and Teller made a speech to give the suggestive warning that he would see to it that so far as the present session of congress was concerned there should be no "hasty or weak" legislation ou the plan of the "rider." The most of the day was devoted to the District appropriation bill without completing it. The conference report on the navy bill was agreed to.

The personal encounter between Breckinridge of Kentucky and Heard of Missouri overshadowed in importance all else that occurred in the house. Heard called Breckinridge a liar and it was with difficulty that the two were kept apart. Before adjournment peace was made and they shook hands. An hour was devoted to debate on the Pacific railroad bill, a resolution was adopted calling on the president for all information regarding the alleged aid furnished Hawaiian natives by representatives of the British government and the remainder of the day was consumed by the District of Columbia committee.

WHAT IS YOUR ROTATION?

Is It Adapted to Your Soil, Climate and Your Markets?

There is room for divergence of opinion as to what rotation is the most profitable, but in most sections good farmers have rotations especially adapted to their own farms. These may be short or long, and usually in any country or section the older the country the longer the rotation. Almost all farmers everywhere have a rotation such as this: Corn, and oats and then corn, or corn, oats and wheat, and then corn. Others again have corn, oats, wheat, meadow, pasture and then corn. In many sections of this country this is not a bad one, but a writer in the Iowa Homestead points out the fact that a rotation is not a good one unless it provides for the maintenance of soil fertility, and he knows of no country in which this has been done without the use of the legumes, such as clover, beans or peas. He says:

In sections where either fall or spring wheat grows well, and where stock growing and feeding is one of the main features of the farm, the rotation of corn on sod, oats, spring or fall wheat, clover and timothy for meadow, then pasture one to two years, and then back to corn, is a very desirable one. It provides in corn a hoed, or, we should rather say a cultivated, crop on land which has an abundance of vegetable matter in that state of decomposition in which the roots of corn luxuriate, and in the corn growing sections it is generally wise to follow corn with corn, thus securing two heavy crops from rich soil. Beyond this it is not wise to go, as the corn root worm will inevitably appear and decrease the crop in ordinary years from 10 to 25 per cent.

Oats can then be sown without plowing, and, as a rule, to better advantage without plowing than with it. Where wheat is a profitable crop in ordinary years, grass seed may then be sown, and if seed is not too high it will pay to sow it anyhow, even if it is to be plowed under in the fall for a crop of winter wheat. This, again, furnishes the best nurse crop for the grasses, insuring a stand in ordinary seasons, and the meadows treated in this way furnish an excellent crop of hay, and, if clover predominates, a crop of seed. Where timothy is not sown with clover it is best to go back to corn after a clover seed crop, thus making a short four years' rotation, but where there is no pasture except that furnished by fields in the rotation it is wise to sow timothy and pasture one or two years before going back to corn.

Feeding Low Priced Grains.

From the Kansas state board of agriculture comes an important summary of the methods of feeding wheat and low priced grains to animals. The report covers detailed experiences of farmers all over the country, and the conclusion is that farmers are justified in feeding their animals wheat when so cheap, and that despite some unfavorable reports the practice as a general thing is wise. In many localities it is the only profitable disposition of the low priced grain this year that can be made, and when wisely and intelligently fed it makes money for the farmer.

What to do with Milk Pails!

Clean them with Pearline. You can't get them so thoroughly sweet and pure in any other way. "The box and barrel churn are not hard to keep clean. A little hot water and a little Pearline will clean any churn or do away with any bad odor."—The Dairy World, Chicago.

Perhaps you think that some of the imitations of Pearline, that you'd be afraid to use in washing clothes, would do just as well in work like this. They wouldn't hurt tinware, certainly. But they wouldn't clean it, either, half as well as Pearline — besides, "don't play with the fire." 400

And Carried Off by the Chinese—A Force of Bluecoats from the Concord Landed with Instructions to Rescue the Captives at All Hazards.

LONDON, Feb. 4. — A dispatch from Shanghai says a telegram has been received there from Chin Kiang stating that a party of officers from the American warship Concord landed at Chin Kiang for the purpose of shooting game. They by accident shot a Chinaman.

The populace became infuriated and attacked, seized and carried off the whole party. The commander of the Concord sent an armed force of blue jackets and marines to rescue them at all hazards. Further news in regard to the affair is anxiously awaited.

Profound Sensation at Washington.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—The reported kidnaping of the officers of the United States ship Concord at Chin Kiang, in China reached Washington at too late an hour to permit it to be inquired into in naval or diplomatic circles. Up to 10 o'clock last night no news on the subject had been received by any of the government officials. The news created a profound sensation today, and unless later reports show that the captured officers are at liberty other vessels will probably be hurried to the scene. Knowing the condition of the Chinese at the present time, and the way in which they are likely to deal with prisoners, there will be great anxiety until the safety of the party is assured.

A court-martial will probably follow, as the policy of the United States government is to require unusual care in such cases. A few years ago a test torpedo from a United States warship was exploded by some Japanese who found it on the beach. One of them was killed and though the Japanese government declared it held the officer of the warship blameless there was a court-martial and the officer was severely reprimanded.

STRIKE AT BROOKLYN STILL ON.

Assaults Frequent on the New Men, Who Are Denied the Right to Arm.

BROOKLYN, Feb. 4.—So far as assaults on the new motormen and conductors of the trolley lines is concerned the strike is still very much "on." One motorman was fatally beaten by strikers and others are continuously attacked. This is made easier by the withdrawal of troops, the police finding it impossible to give protection to the workmen. Then when rioters are taken in the very act they are frequently discharged by the justices. President Norton asked, under these circumstances, permission to supply his men with arms that they might protect themselves, but this was refused by the chief of police.

A great many arrests were made yesterday of strike sympathizers who persisted in throwing stones and waylaying all the non-union men in sight. Allan Hoagland, a new hand employed by the Brooklyn Heights Railroad company, had the temerity to take his car out on the Green Point line without waiting for the two special policemen who were detailed to protect him and the company's property. When the car reached Franklin and Huron streets two men jumped on the front platform and pulled Hoagland off. They threw him to the ground and kicked him unmercifully. Hoagland drew his revolver and fired two shots, neither of which took effect. The men got away.

A number of strikers held up a car in South Brooklyn. The mob stoned the car and broke almost every window in it. A force of policemen arrested John Borland. He had a stone in his pocket when arrested. John Weston, of Buffalo, a conductor employed at the Franklin street depot, Green Point, was arrested on complaint of John Freudelle. Weston was on his way home on the car after having worked all day, when he met Freudelle near the car stables. Freudelle called him vile names. Weston drew a revolver and shot Freudelle in the neck. The wound is not considered serious.

At Third avenue and Fortieth street the track was encumbered with a great pile of boards, boxes and other material of a heavy nature. Every car that passed this way was held by the obstruction and while the conductor and motorman were engaged in removing the debris they were pelted unmercifully with bricks, mud and snow balls.

Master Workman Connelly issued a manifesto to the citizens of Brooklyn last evening on behalf of the striking motormen and conductors. He calls upon the citizens to arm themselves in self-defense, now that President Norton has, as Connelly alleges, proposed to arm his men in defiance of the police department.

JAPANESE CAPTURE WEI-HAI-WEI.

Ah Sin, as Usual, Bolts When the Tug of War Comes On.

CHEE FOO, Feb. 1.—Wei-Hai-Wei was captured Wednesday after two days' skirmishing. The Chinese bolted when the actual assault was made. It is stated that their loss was 2,000 men. Lui Lung Tau, an island near the city, on which are workshops and some forts, is still in the hands of the Chinese. All the Europeans in the city escaped unhurt. It is reported that during the fighting all the Chinese men-of-war and ships in the harbor sailed away uninjured.

Woman Suffragists Adjourn.

ATLANTA, Feb. 4.—The National American Woman Suffrage association has elected the following officers: President, Susan B. Anthony; vice president, Rev. Anna Howard Shaw; secretary, Lucy Stone Blackwell; treasurer, Harriet Taylor Upton. These are all re-elections, except in the case of recording secretary. Suffrage in the south was the subject of addresses at the closing meeting of the convention. During the day pickpockets reaped a harvest. Mrs. Robinson, of Kentucky, lost $500 worth of diamonds. The convention engaged in religious exercises yesterday, and its members left for their homes today.

Judge E. R. Hoar Dead.

CONCORD, Mass., Feb. 1.—Judge E. Rockwood Hoar died last evening at 7:20 o'clock.

Judge E. Rockwood Hoar was born Feb. 21, 1816, at Concord, Mass. He was a brother of United States Senator George F. Hoar, of Worcester, and a member of a family which has for years been prominently identified with public affairs. He was Grant's attorney general and held other important positions.

IS THE CHICORA AFLOAT?

A Question That Is Complicated by Reports at Chicago.

CHICAGO, Feb. 4.—The whole city was excited last evening by an extra gotten out by The Evening Mail which stated that the long-lost Chicora had been sighted at the foot of Ninety-sixth street, off Colehour, near South Chicago. It was judged by those who saw it that it was about one and one-half miles from shore, but further investigation proved that it was out in the lake at least five miles. The fire boat "Chicago," stationed at Calumet river and South Chicago avenue, at once went to the rescue. After a vain battle with the ice and having got to a point three-quarters of a mile from shore this boat was obliged to put back into port at South Chicago.

"Meanwhile tugs Protection and Calumet started from Chicago outside of the ice floe and passed South Chicago in pursuit of the hulk, which was then drifting toward Whiting, Ind. The life-saving crew at South Chicago made a fruitless effort to reach the hulk over the ice, but without avail. This effort being abandoned a special train was furnished to the life savers by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company to carry them to Whiting, Ind. The work of rescue was then attempted from that point."

Still later is was reported that the life saving crew got close enough to read the name "Chicora" on the vessel, but could see no signs of life. She was covered with ice and drifting helplessly with the wind.

The latest report at this writing is from the captain of the tug Protection which has arrived in harbor again. The captain says: "Saw nothing but seagulls and drift ice."

Nine Thousand for an Arm.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Feb. 4.—In the United States district court here William Meyers of Streator, Ills., was awarded $9,000 damages against the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway company for the loss of his right arm. Plaintiff was a switchman for the defendant, and while performing his duties lost his arm. He sued for $20,000.

Mrs. Smith a University Trustee.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Feb. 1.—The governor has accepted the resignation of John H. Bryant, of Princeton, as member of the board of trustees of Illinois university, and appointed Dr. Julia Holmes Smith, of Chicago, to fill the vacancy.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

CALL FOR THE ANNUAL MEETING.

The Pennsylvania Christian Anti-Secrecy Association will meet in annual session

FEBRUARY 25 AND 26, 1895, in the Second Reformed Presbyterian Church, Seventeenth street, near Race street, Philadelphia.

Some of the ablest speakers of the nation will be present.

Allegheny, Pa., Feb. 8, 1895.

The letter of President Blanchard, from Humboldt, Neb., in another column, confirms the previous reports of its great spirituality and interest. All in all, it was a pronounced success. An additional report is expected next week.

The Pennsylvania State Anti-Secrecy Convention is an assured fact. To-day we publish the official notice of the meeting at Philadelphia, which is called for the 25th and 26th inst. Rev. W. B. Stoddard's letter on the subject is filled with details and valuable suggestions.

The German Reichstag has not yet repealed the law forbidding the return of the Jesuits to the empire, and the nature of the opposition to the repeal is such as to render the success of the proposed measure very doubtful. The agitation is likely to involve some other important political legislation before it is settled.

The bill now pending in the Tennessee Legislature, to punish lynching parties in that State with death as murderers, is radical, but demanded by the growing iniquity which it is designed to suppress. The provisions of the proposed law include all persons who aid or abet a party of organized lynchers in their murderous designs. Incitement to mob violence of the proscribed kind, whether by harangues or printed or written methods, is to be punished by long terms of imprisonment. The measure is very severe, but the crime which it seeks to abate is very horrible.

In one of his latest characteristic lectures in New York—"Which Way?"—Ingersoll defined "two ways—one of reason and experience, the other of faith and credulity." This is the keynote of a mighty truth, the importance of which probably never entered his mind. Reason and the experiences of seceders from the secret lodges should serve to keep men from going blindly into them. It is faith in the misrepresentations of interested secret-society men, with curiosity, and the hope of gain, that draws the credulous into the lodges of which they will believe nothing evil until they have become ensnared.

Freemasonry is not honest, even with its own members. In "Cabala; or the Rites and Ceremonies of the Cabalist" (Chapter Degrees), "National Series, Revised and Arranged Strictly in Accordance with the Standard Formula," and published for the use of members only, by Redding & Co., New York, we have a cypher copy of the secret work of the four degrees of Mark Master, Past Master, Most Excellent Master and Royal Arch Mason. Comparing these degrees with those in Doesburg's expositions (the truth of which "Cabala" largely confirms), we find omitted one of the most important obligations in the Royal Arch Degree. Masonically speaking, we suppose this is considered honest, but morally there's a screw very loose. We do not wonder that the fraternity is ashamed to put it into print, even in cypher.

The Catholic Review for February 9, in overhauling the acts of the Masonic fraternity, reviews the part borne by Albert Pike in the revival and re-organization of Scottish Rite Masonry in the United States. Pike was born in 1809, and within the period of his long career he filled the following three offices in high Masonry: Sovereign Pontiff of Universal Masonry, Chief of the Supreme Luciferian Dogmatic Directory; Sovereign Director of the Grand Central Consistory of North America; and Grand Commander, Grand Master of the Supreme Council of the 33d degree of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite for the Southern district of the United States. The Catholic Review, giving "a full account of the man endowed with wonderful talents," proposes to unfold the "history of the corrupt and infamous works which Satan alone was capable of inspiring, and which constitute . . . . the treasures of the archives of Palladism, or Luciferianism." It promised to be an interesting revelation.

At a recent meeting of the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, at which General Miles and Admiral Gherardi were dined, one of the speakers remarked that between the military career of General Washington and that of General Miles there had been but one traitor (Arnold) among the officers of the national army. Of course, all allusion to the secession schemes of 1860-61, and the consequent defection of many army commanders, was omitted by courtesy. Commenting upon this reference to Benedict Arnold, a writer in the New York Sun recalls another act of treason as vile and infamous as Arnold's, and more successful, but on a lesser scale than his. The traitor was a high-commissioned officer—one William Demont—and by his act, it is alleged, Forts Washington and Lee were transferred to Howe's British army. The Sun gives the details of the transaction, for which we have not space. But it is known that Demont, like Arnold, was a Freemason. It is well to remember that.

The papal encyclical placing certain secret societies under ban is principally confirmatory, it is claimed, of an organic law of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States. The law in question is No. 246 of the Baltimore Council, and reads as follows: "A society, if it enjoins a secret to be so kept as not to allow that it be made manifest to the authority of the church, is to be numbered among the forbidden societies, and the members are to be deprived of sacramental absolution until they recede from it, or at least seriously promise to recede at once. And as the right and duty to inquire is incumbent on the bishops, every society which refuses its secrets to be made known to the ordinary (the bishop), lawfully inquiring therein, may be supposed to refuse such knowledge to the authority of the church." Any secret society, therefore, which refuses to yield to the authority of the Church of Rome is included in the papal prohibition. The effect is to strengthen the Jesuit and other lodges in the interest of the church, and repel the others which do not submit to the hierarchy.

Oscar Durante is the young, talented and good-looking editor of L'Italia, the Italian newspaper of Chicago. He is also a politician, with an ambition to be a leader of his countrymen, among whom he has acquired considerable influence by his position. But, like Haman of old, notwithstanding his prosperous calling, he is evidently feeling that all this availeth him nothing, so long as he knows that the dreaded Italian secret and bloody Mafia society is seeking his life. For several months some person, or persons, in Columbus, Ohio, have been endeavoring to decoy Mr. Durante to visit that place, through the mails, by means of one business letter, and two love-epistles. Fortunately circumstances attending these efforts were such that suspicions of their falsity were aroused, and his journey to Columbus has been indefinitely postponed. The police have the case in hand; but the press accounts conclude as follows: "This business," said Durante, "is not a matter of a moment. Four months now this plot has been making. If I have an enemy, his is not an anger that can be washed away." "Is it the Mafia?" Durante shrugged his shoulders and looked heavenward. "I cannot say," he answered. It is with him as it is with all Italians. Mafia is not a word that they speak willingly. Like Durante, they go far around it, saying instead, "a secret organization with criminal purposes." We await further developments.

"WHOSE GLORY IS THEIR SHAME."

BY PHILIP BACON.

This passage from God's Word was brought very vividly to my mind when reading the following notice in the Hartford Daily Times of January 18, 1895:

"Now a Master Mason.—The Rev. C. G. Bristol, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd in this city, took his third degree in Masonry in Moriah Lodge at Danielsonville, Thursday night. Mr. Henry W. Green, Past Grand Master, and Judge Shumway, Past Worshipful Master, were in charge of the ceremonies. A banquet and after-dinner speeches followed the work. The Rev. Mr. Bristol was accompanied from this city by ex-Lieutenant-Governor Ernest W. Cady, Senator J. H. Hall, Mr. James B. Moor, Rev. L. W. Saltonstall and Mr. R. H. Pascall, of Portland. Mr. Bristol took his first degree in Moriah Lodge while he was rector of the Danielsonville Episcopal church. He will now connect himself with St. John's Lodge of this city."

Rev. L. W. Saltonstall is the rector of Christ church, the oldest and largest Episcopal church in the city.

The Church of the Good Shepherd was built by Mrs. Colt, whose husband was the founder of the world-famous Colt Firearms Co. The Hon. J. H. Hall is now the president of that company, and was recently elected State Senator as a Democrat (which party was 396 in the minority on the State ticket) over the Republican nominee, who was not a Freemason. Ex-Lieutenant-Governor Cady is secretary and treasurer of a large manufacturing concern in this city and the late candidate of the Democratic party for governor. He has recently identified himself quite prominently with the temperance work in the city.

What can be expected when the shepherds of the flock are setting such an example before the people? Is it not very natural that the "good man" argument should be made to do service for the devil and all his works of darkness? I can remember the time when no one in good standing would have allowed his name to be publicly associated with Freemasonry, and now it is apparently thought necessary, to be of reputation, that one must belong to several lodges or clubs.

This condition is no longer confined to the male sex. A short time ago I met a lady friend, the wife of the principal of the high school in a large village, who knew my position in regard to secret societies. When I asked her what the ladies of the place were doing, her reply was that they were forming secret orders, and that almost every one belonged to three or four. When I asked what she was doing, her reply was: All that she could do was to keep out of them.

I have, of late, been making quite an effort to find the "children of light," but have to confess that I have been somewhat disappointed.

A few weeks since, I attended a holiness convention, at which was given more excellent teaching on the all-important, and too much neglected, subject of holiness. The theory was scriptural, but the application was not intended to cover a very wide field of practical life. Those who favored saloons by sustaining the prominent political parties stood on an equality with those who oppose them. Those who belonged to the secret orders were not led to see that there was anything inconsistent with holiness in the false worship in the lodge.

Not feeling satisfied, I wrote to one who was brought forward as a witness to the blessed doctrine of full salvation, to know with which political party he gave his influence. His reply was that he felt that he should backslide if he voted other than the Prohibition ticket. I afterwards wrote to him as to his position on the secret lodge question, and after considerable delay I got a rather faint reply that he did not favor them; but it looked to me as though he felt that he was "telling tales out of school." As a result of the convention, a few were advised by the leaders of the general Holiness Association to hold meetings, but with the express understanding that all questions upon which holiness people differed, such as prohibition, tobacco, secret societies, divine healing, etc., must be locked out, according to the rules of the Holiness Association.

am acquainted with the views of two of the leading ones in this movement, and they are decidedly opposed to the evils mentioned. Does not this look a little like "putting light under a bushel?"

When I read Bro. S. C. Kimball's article in the Cynosure, stating the help the N. H. C. A. was receiving from holiness people, I asked myself: Can they be the same as those who have bound themselves by the cast-iron rules of an association? I wish that the article in the Cynosure of Jan. 17, by Editor Jennings of the Wesleyan Methodist, might be read by all the holiness people all over the world. I do not wish to be understood that I am not in favor of meetings for the promotion of holiness, because I am satisfied that it is the teaching of the Bible, and without it we cannot receive the approval of a holy God. It is the neglect of this teaching that has brought our country into the sad condition in which we now find ourselves. The heathen recognize the need of an atonement for sin; but if we cannot realize in Christ as our Redeemer one who is able to cleanse and keep us pure and holy unto the end, what better off are we than those who have never heard the name of Jesus? Has it not been the generally-accepted teaching, from most of the pulpits in our country, that we could not expect to be made holy in this life? and we can see how readily the pews have taken to this teaching and put it into practice.

I am not surprised when I see the great mass of the professed church members become almost indifferent about the salvation of their fellow-men, and the advancement of our Redeemer's kingdom.

I met a teacher in one of our leading seminaries, a few days since, who remarked, in substance, that the preacher would go before the people on the Sabbath and teach the doctrine of a new life, and all the balance of the week ignore it himself. His example was not a great incentive for people to lay hold of it. When I remarked to this teacher about Freemasonry, he recalled the fact that when he was in Paris, a friend told him that no one could belong to the French Senate unless he was a Freemason. The fact that we are opposed to oath-bound secret societies, as much as it implies, comes far short of that purity of heart which is the only condition in which we can "see God." Should we be surprised if the prince of this world should endeavor to substitute a counterfeit of holiness, as he has of everything else that is good? Who ever knew of an attempt to counterfeit a bill of a broken bank, or a forger to attempt to raise money by using the name of one who was known to be bankrupt? It is because there is so much implied in the term holiness, full salvation, heart purity, or sanctification, or simple, plain Christianity (which to my mind, all mean the same thing) that the devil should attempt to deceive the people with an imitation. Thank God, we need not be deceived; for he has told us if they "teach not according to his Word, there is no truth in them."

As a farmer I never knew of any better way for destroying obnoxious weeds than by keeping them exposed to the rays of the summer's sun. I never could do it in cloudy weather. So in spiritual things we must bring the evils under the influence of the Sun of Righteousness as revealed in the Word of God; and, as in the case of weeds, if they have become matured, they will need a good deal of shaking. To attempt to deal with them with human wisdom is like attempting to destroy weeds in a cloudy day. Apparently they will grow the faster.

Dear friends, let us work more in God's way, using the "sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Let us all do what we can for the advancement of righteousness and the overthrow of evil while we have opportunity.

SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE LABORING MAN.

ADDRESS OF REV. J. M FARIS, OF NEW CONCORD, OHIO, AT THE OHIO STATE ANTI SECRECY CONVENTION, AT XENIA, JAN. 28 AND 29, 1895.

This caption implies that there is a connection between secret societies and the laboring man. It suggests, also, that the connection is such as ought not to exist. The idea is that the laboring man ought not to belong to secret societies. Let us notice:

I. The importance of the laboring man. 1. He constitutes a large part of society. He is a majority. In the army there are more private soldiers than officers. In the Christian church there are more private members than office-bearers. In any lodge establishment there are more subordinates than proprietors and managers. So in society there are more laborers than capitalists and employers. As regards numbers, the laboring man owns a large part of society. Therefore he cannot be without importance.

2. To a greater or less extent we all depend upon the laboring man. We often think of the laboring man as dependent. But may we not say he is the most independent? How could we do without him? How could the capitalist do without the laboring man? How could the city do without the country? What could military officers accomplish without private soldiers? We all depend upon the laboring man for many things. We obtain through him our meat, clothing and fuel. The laboring man is of importance in society because there are so many dependent upon him.

3. The laboring man has great influence. He forms, as we have already seen, a large part of society. Hence, his influence is worth seeking. If the laboring man is opposed to us, his opposition is felt. If we have his influence, it is much in our favor. It is to the commendation of our Saviour that "the common people heard him gladly." The politician, the preacher, the ruler—all understand that the laboring man's favor is a great help. In any contest they are more likely to have success that win the influence of the laboring man. Hence, we see the laboring man is an important factor in society.

II. Why the laboring man should not belong to secret societies.

1. It at once creates suspicion. Generally speaking, when men pursue a secret course they excite suspicion against themselves. There must be a motive for the adoption of a secret method; sometimes it is because they wish to take an undue advantage of others. Sometimes it is because they are aware that their object does not commend itself to the public. There must be a reason why the secret societies impose a secret obligation upon their members. But whatever be the reason for secrecy, others cannot but feel that those who take the obligation must have a motive which does not commend them and their work to outsiders. The laboring man, when he enters a secret order, does create a measure of suspicion against himself. And surely the laboring man has enough to contend against without suspicion evoked by his connection with a secret lodge.

2. It is too costly. The laboring man is generally not the richest in society. Capitalists and employers are those who are supposed to have the greatest amount of wealth. The laboring man has more limited means. Laboring men are not heard complaining that they have more than their share of the good things of life. Hence, as the laboring man generally has but a moderate amount of means, he must count the cost before he engages in any undertaking. He cannot afford to live in the largest and grandest house, or sit at the fullest and richest table. He must decline to purchase some things because he is not able to afford them. Secret societies, as managed, are expensive. There is the initiation fee, or what must be paid for the right of membership. This, in some instances, must be no inconsiderable sum. Then there is the dress which is worn on certain occasions. This is often very gaudy and surely somewhat expensive. We have sometimes felt sad when we have seen the poor laboring man in a procession with his society dress on. We knew that neither he nor his family could well afford such attire. It reminds us of the drunkard, who spends his earnings for drink instead of the necessaries of life. No wonder the laboring man, if he is a church member, is not able to give more to the cause of Christ; his secret lodge requires so much.

3. It involves him in many a trouble. In the first place, he parts with his independence. He comes under obligation to obey the mandates of the secret society. He must work when, and as, and where, the lodge permits. No matter how well he may be doing, he must quit work when his superiors send out the order. In this way the laboring man is involved in trouble. And he is not the only sufferer. His wife and children, if he have any, must suffer too; and we have reason to fear that many are suffering at the present time from such cause. It may be said that it is those who belong to the unions that obtain employment. But would worthy men not get the work at any rate, if there were no secret unions? Would they not have employment with greater regularity, and with much less embarrassment? We verily believe the laboring man would be greatly benefited if he were free from the lodge power and influence.

LODGE CHARITY.

A PAPER READ BEFORE THE OHIO ANTI-SECRECY ASSOCIATION AT XENIA, OHIO, JAN. 29TH, 1895, BY REV. C. H. KIRACOFE, DAYTON, OHIO.

[From the Christian Conservator.]

An old teacher of mine once sent a young man to the black-board to solve a problem in algebra. The young man worked faithfully the entire period for the recitation, but failed to reach a solution. The next day he was assigned the same problem, with a like result. The third day the young man, having become discouraged, said: "Professor, I have tried every possible way of solving this problem and I can't solve it." Whereupon the professor suggested that he examine the conditions of the problem to see if it could be solved, and, to his chagrin, he found that for three days he had been trying to solve an impossible problem, but he had learned a lesson he never forgot, viz.: when asked to do a thing, first of all to decide whether it could be done; or when asked why a thing is so, first of all to determine whether or not it is so. So, in discussing a theme, it is well, first of all, to clearly and definitely define its content before attempting its explication. Men not unfrequently happen upon ideas which no word in the language will adequately express; but since ideas precede words, it is a rare thing to find a word or an expression in a language for which there can be found no corresponding idea or reality; and yet for the past two weeks, or ever since I was asked to speak upon it, I have sought in vain for the reality corresponding to my subject, but not, like the student, without a suspicion of there being anything wrong. I have found something corresponding to the word charity, and I have found something corresponding to the word lodge, but I can find nothing corresponding to the two terms linked together as in my subject. In other words, there is such a thing as charity, and there is such a thing as a lodge, but there is no such a thing as lodge charity. The two ideas are antagonistic, if not contradictory. You might about as well speak of a round square, of evil goodness or a good devil, as of lodge charity. The expression is a misnomer, unless, perchance, lodge charity, like Masonic worship and the Masonic heaven, is speculative or symbolic—that is to say, a mock charity. That the antagonism between the ideas expressed by the two terms lodge and charity may appear, it is necessary only to accurately define each. What, then, is charity? It is something distinct from mere alms-giving. Paul says: "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." Prof. Ely says: "We are beginning to hear of a science of charity, and it is sorely needed, for old-fashioned alms-giving is a curse." The term charity applies both to a feeling cherished in the heart and to the act or acts which result from that feeling, but the essential thing is the feeling, for without the feeling the act ceases to be charity. It is mere alms-giving, and, as Paul says, profiteth the giver nothing. Charity, as a feeling, is that principle in the Divine Being which prompts him to seek the well-being of all his creatures, from the highest to the lowest; that prompted him to arrange food for the body, knowledge for the mind and faith, hope and love for the soul. Conversely, it is that principle in all creatures, when in a normal state, that causes them to reciprocate the beneficence of their Creator—that causes the bird to sing, the cock to crow, the lamb to frisk, the horse to leap, the lowing herds to gallop over hills and plains, and redeemed men and angels to obey his word and shout his praise, and to have a like beneficent feeling toward fellow men and angels to that manifested toward them by the Creator himself. Its formulated fundamental law, as pertaining to man, is: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor," or thy fellow-being, "as thyself." It is the direct opposite of selfishness and is restricted in its exercise to no class, but is as wide in its range as the human family or even as created beings. To one possessed with this principle, men outside of the narrow circle of his own family or selfishly-limited fraternity are not strangers, or cowans, but brothers. Such a man, in the language of Shinn, "adores the beneficent hand which sends us rain from heaven; his soul adheres to God as the center of all his desires; he finds no pleasure in existence equal to that of doing good; he looks over the face of the earth with conscious friendship for every living creature; his enlarged and generous mind embraces the different nations of the earth with affection, and beseeches heaven to bless all his brethren of the human race."

This is charity in feeling. Charity, in action, is but the outflowing of this feeling in adoration and praise toward God, and in acts of beneficence to all his creatures within reach, who may be in need of such beneficence—not because of any temporal or mechanical relation they may sustain to us or of any self-imposed obligation, for the sake of advantage, which we have assumed toward them, but because they are God's creatures and therefore our brethren. The act flows from the feeling as the stream flows from the fountain, as blood from the heart, and breath from the lungs. The only condition of its exercise is need upon the part of the person toward whom it is exercised. Charity, as thus defined, is to the social and moral world what gravitation is to the material world or universe, the force that holds together and makes society among moral beings possible.

What now is a lodge? It is a limited and select association of men who, ignoring the ties and the corresponding obligations of the natural brotherhood of the human race, have formed themselves into an unnatural and mechanical brotherhood for the purpose of securing to each other certain real or supposed benefits not secured to those outside the brotherhood. For which purpose they severally bind themselves by solemn pledge or oath to befriend and aid each other, as against the outside world, upon the fulfillment by each of certain stipulated conditions. It is limited in that it is confined to one sex, one trade or one class of persons in some way distinctly defined. It is select in this that the most needy and most dependent, even of the special class out of which it is formed, are excluded, such as the poor, the seriously diseased, the blind, the maimed and the halt—anyone who is not able to pay his initiation and keep up the stipulated dues required by the association. This alone is sufficient to distinguish the association as wholly selfish and therefore antagonistic to the real spirit of charity. By the very nature of the organization, its benefits must largely accrue to those who are not in need of charity. Then its very object, to secure benefits to the select few composing the order, is wholly selfish, or, at least, not such as to characterize it as a benevolent or charitable, but as a business association, on the same basis as an ordinary joint stock or insurance association. It will thus be seen that the very nature and purpose of the association are selfish, and only selfish. But let us look for a while at its practical operations and especially at those transactions which are so frequently paraded before the world as charity.

Who ever heard of a lodge, as such, befriending or rendering aid to those outside its own limited brotherhood and their families? I once challenged two prominent lodgemen in our city to point out to me a single instance of this kind. After studying for awhile, they referred to a time when in their lodge several hundred dollars were raised for the benefit of the Widows' Home of that city, but subsequent inquiries brought out the fact that a subscription was circulated in the lodge-room after the adjournment of the lodge and that members of the lodge as individuals signed the amount, which they claimed to have been given by the lodge, simply because it was signed in the lodge-room and by persons who were members of the lodge. When I showed them that had the persons signing belonged to a half-dozen, or a dozen different lodges, each lodge could, with equal right, have claimed to make the donation, they had nothing further to say. That there are charitable men in the lodge who dispense real charity, we have no doubt, but they are charitable not because of their connection with the lodge, but in spite of it. There may be a few chance cases in which a lodge as such has administered charity to those outside the charmed circle, but if so, they are few and far between, and even then it has been done, not as a part of the legitimate work of the lodge, but as a special departure from its fundamental principles, and on the same principle that the devil is said sometimes to clothe himself as an angel of light. But how about charity toward those within the lodge? Do not lodges take care of their members in sickness, furnishing nurses or watchers and a weekly stipend and then pay their burial expenses, etc.?

Yes, they quite frequently do: but is it done as a matter of charity or in execution of a contract entered into when the person joined the lodge? And are there not three dollars paid into the lodge by its members for every one returned to them in charity, so called, in cases of sickness and death? And what is thus given, is it not given to the rich as well as to the poor, and only upon condition that all stipulated dues and assessments have been paid by the party up to date? As well call the money paid to me by the fire insurance company, when my house burns, or to my family by the life insurance company at my death, charity as this, for it is but the carrying out of a like business contract, and has not, when properly understood, even the semblance of charity.

We conclude this address by saying that we find neither in the nature, purpose or practices of of the lodge, anything, when properly viewed. which even resembles the spirit or the act of charity. On the contrary, we find in its character and purpose the very essence of selfishness, and its so-called charitable deeds we find to be but the execution of a business contract for which it has been fully and even generously remunerated. Having, therefore, examined the conditions of the problem given me, I pronounce it insoluble; or having considered the prior question as to whether there is such a thing as lodge charity and found that there is not, I ask to be excused from the black-board or the further consideration of my subject.

SELECTIONS.

THE RED CROSS SOCIETY.

The Red Cross society has a record extending over twenty-nine years in Europe and eleven in the United States. In this country the constitution of the society contains an article not to be found in any other of the thirty-nine nations in which it has life. This is a provision to supply aid in cases of great national calamities, such as floods, fires, cyclones, famines, pestilence and earthquake. Twelve times the Red Cross society has given its aid in such distresses. Miss Clara Barton's private fortune furnishes the means for headquarters and much of the necessary expense is borne by this self-sacrificing heroine.—Union Signal.

LESSONS OF THE OHIO STATE CONVENTION.

Among the facts most clearly brought out in the convention were: 1. That the secret lodge system is antagonistic to Christianity and the Christian church, in that it recognizes and worships a god, but not the true God, that it teaches a salvation without a Saviour, that it demands and takes the time, the money and the energy that ought to be given to the church, and that while it professes to teach and practice charity, it is in reality but a system of organized selfishness. 2. That it is antagonistic to government and society, in that it is adapted to, and is frequently guilty of, thwarting the administration of equal justice, and that it in various ways abridges the rights and immunities of its citizens. 3. That it is antagonistic to the best interests of the great mass of its own members, in that it exacts from them time, energy and money which they need for better purposes, and subjects them to a tyranny little less than despotic, while a few officers fatten upon their hard earnings and at the same time become their feudal lords. We can hardly see how an honest Christian man could have listened to these addresses without being convinced that the lodge system is a curse to the country and should be antagonized by every Christian and Christian organization; or how a minister of the Gospel after hearing them could excuse himself for not lifting his voice against this institution, which, like a vampire, is sucking the life-blood out of many of our churches.—Christian Conservator.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A prince and a great man fallen in Israel.—The fight for license in New Hampshire.—Connecticut dominated by rum and Masonry.—Another college for women.—A Jesuitic move on the part of the City Council.

Can we ever take the true measure of a man's life and work till he passes into the great Beyond, and the life and the work can be viewed as one grand whole? Dr. A. J. Gordon, who went from the scene of his earthly labors last week with the word "Victory" on his lips, while he missed the clap-trap popularity which has attended more sensational preachers, was, in every sense of the word, the most remarkable man in America's ministerial ranks. As a pulpit orator the very evenness of his eloquence gave one a sense of wonderful reserve power,—not that of the torrent or the cataract, but of the mighty river, which, wherever it flows, turns into a land of spring regions that would else be a desert, and makes it the granary of nations. The different channels of Christian work started by him, and into which he poured the overflowing sympathies of his great heart, were almost countless. The outcast, the needy and the desolate were always sure of his personal attention. Others might wait. Truth he always entertained with a royal hospitality, and for this reason every righteous reform, no matter how unpopular, had his hearty God-speed, and, if possible, his practical help.

He bore the name of New England's first foreign missionary, Adoniram Judson, and his was pre-eminently a missionary spirit, that could be satisfied with nothing less than the whole world for Christ. His sensitive, spiritual face was the meet outward expression of such a soul, of the intellectual strength, the religious fervor, the far-reaching insight into divine mysteries, where he trod with reverent fearlessness as a child in his Father's house. They who admired him most loved him most; and, as Dr. Mabie so eloquently and touchingly said in his funeral address:

How lonely will Boston be hereafter to the numberless pleaders in behalf of mission and philanthropic causes of all sorts, when they shall come here and find that royal and sympathetic personality gone! For he bore the world, not like Atlas, upon his shoulders, but—like the high priest who wrote upon his breastplate the names of the tribes of Israel—upon his heart.

It is most fitting that the earthly remains of Dr. Gordon should have their last resting-place, not in Forest Hills or Mt. Auburn, with sculptured monstrosities on every side,—not in a graveyard at all, but in the beautiful hill country of his native New Hampshire, near the spot where he was born, among the scenes that he loved as a boy, and which in his mature years inspired him to write one of the finest of his religious lyrics, "I have sighted the mountains of Beulah land."

THE FIGHT FOR LICENSE

is on in the New Hampshire Legislature. The bill which has been introduced is a combination of the Ohio and Connecticut laws, and worthy of its parentage. This measure, if passed, will establish license as the State policy, while allowing any city or town the right to prohibit within its own borders. With a fine consistency the bill provides that all revenue from this source shall go to the support of schools and paupers. The liquor men who are supporting this measure have placed their cause in the hands af leading Republicans and are sanguine of victory. And yet it poses as a temperance party. Such hypocrisy ought to make a statue of brass blush.

Speaking of Connecticut, Rev. J. C. Hyder, Secretary of the American Mission Association, gives an instance in the Golden Rule, showing in that State. Four gentlemen, finding that on the last election day in October the saloons were open and in full blast, in direct violation of the law that all saloons shall be closed when an election is in progress until 5 o'clock the next morning, went personally from town to town, so as to secure positive evidence, and then went to the chief of police with a complaint. When they begged him to execute the law, he weakly replied that he had a family to support and did not want to burn his fingers, but would make arrests if the mayor said so. While one of the party stood by the chief of police for fear he would run away, the others hunted up the mayor, who made the most positive protestations that he would see the chief of police and have the saloons closed at once. But to their disgust, instead of doing so, the mayor slunk away to some safe hiding-place, and not a single arrest was made, nor a single saloon closed. At Bridgeport, if press reports are to be believed, the Liquor-Dealers' Association and the officials of the Law and Order League have made by no means creditable to the latter, by which all prosecutions now pending against saloon-keepers will be withdrawn, while they on their part promise not to violate the law again, and to aid the league in prosecuting those who do. Violation of this singlar compromise by the liquor-dealers will be followed by taking up the evidence already secured against them, and the revoking of their licenses. Connecticut is dominated by

Masonry as well as the liquor power, and in all this quibbling and compromise, its hidden hand may be plainly seen.

Tufts College gets $70,000 from the will of a Miss Jackson, to erect an annex, to be known as "the Cornelia Maria Jackson College for Women." Though a strong advocate for

THE HIGHER EDUCATION OF WOMEN,

I sometimes wonder if the thing is not overdone. There are many college graduates in the ranks of the unemployed, and only the other day I heard of one working for starvation wages and living in an attic. If the money now spent in building and endowing female colleges could be spent in building convenient, comfortable homes for working-women it would be a better investment from every point of view.

The Boston City Council have received about as many and as broad hints that it is as the English House of Lords, and like that ancient and cumbersome body instead of taking the hint, it only grows more perniciously active. Their latest move is to abolish the school board in its elective capacity, and make it consist of nine persons selected by the mayor, with salaries attached. Given a Romanist mayor, and our public schools would be given right into the hands of Rome, while the salary attachment would make the office a mere political prize to be disposed of on the "spoils" system—a constant source of bribery and corruption. Never has a more thoroughly Jesuitical plan been put forward, and though there seems no chance of succeeding, that it could be even seriously suggested shows the boldness of this crafty power which is seeking to rule America. DEATH OF DR. A. J. GORDON.

BOSTON, Feb. 6, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Dr. A. J. Gordon, after a brief illness, passed to his reward, February 2, 1895.

The last word upon his lips tells the whole story of his life and death—"VICTORY!"

"All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," has seldom found more perfect expression than in the private life and public ministration of Dr. Gordon. Associated with either the rich or the poor, he was the faithful friend of all alike; for not one, however fallen, had so defaced the image of that One Type of a perfect manhood as to lose his sympathy and quench all hope of his recovery.

Honored as few men are while living, now that he has gone, the city that knew him best stands with bowed head at the threshold of that eternal city which he has entered, and with marvelous accord proclaims, "the memory of the just is BLESSED." The great heart that tenderly responded to every cry of suffering humanity is still. The sacred fire that came down from heaven, to glow for a season within this most holy place, has ascended to God who gave it; and what more fitting than that the temple in which he abode for more than half a century should rest among the quiet hills of his native New Hampshire, where neither men nor angels have built, but God himself has founded the most imperishable monument to mark the place where his own beloved disciple rests from his labors, while his works follow him?

Among the first to greet me when coming to this city to advocate a reform, then far more unpopular than it is now, was Dr. Gordon. Though an entire stranger, with no letter of introduction, he received me as a brother, and at once gave me his name in favor of meetings for the public discussion of the secret lodge system. With increasing knowledge of the system, his interest increased, and though pressed and burdened with responsibilities, he always took time to say an encouraging word, answer a question, or give counsel when asked. I cannot recall an instance when I sought his advice or co-operation in my work that it has not most heartily been given; and to his quiet co-operation and unwavering friendship the New England Christian Association is greatly indebted for its recognition and present standing among the Christian activities in this center of intellectual and religious progress.

He attended and spoke at several of our conventions, and encouraged others to do so. He was not on the program of our last annual meeting, but, referring to it a few days before it occurred, he said: "I want to be there, but I am very busy." Then, consulting his memorandum, he said: "I think I can attend the last evening." He was called to attend an important meeting in Park Street Church on that evening, and so failed to accomplish what he desired.

While in "labors abundant" at Northfield last summer he wrote for me, for publication, his views on the influence of the "secret lodges" upon the Christian life, which has in part appeared in your columns but which will repay re-reading and careful study. J. P. STODDARD.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Church attendance.—Special services.—Influence of secret societies in courts.—Masonry and occultism.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6, 1895.

NON-CHURCH-GOERS.

There are 522 churches of all denominations in New York City, with a seating capacity of 400,000. The Episcopalians have 103; the Roman Catholics, 84; the Presbyterians, 70; the Methodists, 65; the Baptists, 50; the Jews, 46, and the Congregationalists, 7. Only a small proportion of the inhabitants of the city attend church at all. The Sabbath-morning service is fairly well-attended in most Protestant churches, but the evening service is neglected. I have frequently counted less than fifty people, in churches seating from 800 to 1,200, at Sabbath evening services. On one pleasant Sabbath, last autumn, an enumeration of 85,000 was made in the various places of worship. Supposing every church filled to its utmost capacity, there would still be more than one million people who could not attend church services, even if they desired.

SPECIAL SERVICES

are continually being held by the various religious bodies. Rev. A. B. Simpson and associate workers have maintained evangelistic services, Sabbath afternoons and evenings, for four months, in the new American Theater, chiefly for non-church-goers, at which several hundred conversions are reported. The Paulist Fathers have sustained a month's mission for their own people at their Cathedral, Sixtieth Street and Ninth Avenue, and are now carrying on a nightly mission for non-Catholics.

Dr. L. W. Munhall is conducting a widespread work of grace in Jersey City.

DURING THE LATE LEXOW INVESTIGATION,

a certain witness testified to an interview with Sup't. Byrnes, head of the police department, at the latter's house, when the witness was grasped by the throat, thrown violently upon a sofa and further personal violence was threatened, as well as a term of imprisonment, unless he gave up certain information believed to be in his possession. The witness also affirmed that he escaped harsher treatment and secured immunity to himself by appealing to Masonic obligation, since both he and Sup't. Byrnes were fellow-Masons. It need not be wondered at if Masonry should receive large reinforcements from the ranks of crooks, if it is thus potent in assuaging a policeman's wrath and guaranteeing tender treatment. Such trifling and common incidents as these are the straws which determine the direction of the wind. It is beyond question a fact of shameful frequency, that justice is perverted, and many a rogue escapes punishment because of influence exerted through secret lodges.

In the last number of "Borderland," published by Mr. Stead in connection with the Review of Reviews, there is an article on

THE OCCULT SIDE OF FREEMASONRY.

The author attaches Masonry to the primitive caste rites of the Aryans and Hindus, and if his conclusions are trustworthy, we may trace it back to the Babylonian abominations of Semiramis and her son Nimrod, the source of all idolatrous and false religious worship, as exemplified to-day in Romanism, Theosophy, or Masonry.

REFORM NEWS.

NEBRASKA STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

HUMBOLDT, Neb., Feb. 5, 1895.

This convention was held at Humboldt, Nebraska, from Saturday, February 2, to Tuesday, February 5. Arrangements were made by our friend and brother, Mr. Wm. C. Bissell, who has long been a helper of our cause in this region. With him, in co-operation, was our friend, Mr. John Holman, in whose beautiful home Bro. Phillips and myself have been kindly and perfectly entertained. There are many other true hearts here, who also have co-operated, among whom should be particularly named the pastors of the churches.

At the first meeting, Saturday evening, there was a good audience and good attention; the little confusion caused by a few drunken lodgemen did not do any harm. We hope that they obtained some good.

On Sabbath we had three excellent meetings, God helping mightily by his Holy Spirit. At the afternoon meeting, testimony was borne by pastors of the Presbyterian and German Methodist churches and others. The Spirit attended their words and Jesus was magnified.

Monday morning, the meeting was not large, and a gentleman who is a trustee of the Methodist church objected to the holding of the meetings, on the ground that he and others had not been consulted. After conference it was decided that the afternoon meeting should also be held in that church; that the evening meeting should be held in the Opera House, and that the Tuesday meeting should be held in the German Methodist church, which was kindly opened to us.

The Opera House was well filled at 8 o'clock, and Bro. W. I. Phillips gave the principal address of the evening. His subject was historical, and his argument showed how secret societies have interfered with the administration of law in all ages and lands where they have existed. A drunken man undertook a defence of Masonry but his friends removed him. He is a recent graduate of the Keeley Cure, and has had desires for better things. We trust that he may be delivered from the bonds of Satan.

The friends from abroad for whom we had been looking came in to the evening meeting, and though we did not learn of their presence until the meeting had closed, we were glad to see them.

Our closing meeting is to be held this afternoon at 1:30, in the German Methodist church, as above indicated. We expect the presence of Jesus Christ, our Lord, and the Holy Spirit. On the whole, we feel that the blessing of God has been upon us in great measure, and we are thankful. CHARLES A. BLANCHARD.

THE CAUSE AT BLOOMINGTON.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., Feb. 7, 1895.

Our State Convention here has resulted in rousing much interest in the anti-secret reform. Earnest, thoughtful Christian people have commented frequently on the points made by the speakers, and admire their faith and courage in confronting such a popular evil. They express a desire to know more of the work of the National Christian Association. Those of us who took an active part in arranging for the convention, find that we have raised rather than lowered ourselves in the estimation of the people. Down in their hearts there is a respect for those who have the courage of their convictions and are willing to stand for them in the face of a frowning world. None of our local papers have published a disparaging word of the convention, and lodge-men have maintained the policy of silence.

Soon after the convention, the spirit of reform broke out in the city more than it has done for years. A Lexow Committee was organized, and before the mayor and prosecuting attorney, and another attorney who undertook the case, a searching examination of witnesses was held, which brought out the fact that at the last election thirty-five Negroes had been brought to the city and voted for the Republican candidates. The city marshal, it was proved in many instances, had taken bribes from criminals and allowed them to escape. The whole matter comes up for trial at the next term of court, and promises to shake up the city.

The women of our congregation have planned to hold monthly reform meetings in our church, where a platform will be free for the discussion of the most radical reform questions. The first meeting will be held this week, and will be in the interests of prohibition. It is proposed to attempt, sometime this winter, to secure a lecture on the anti-secret issue by Dr. W. H. French, of Rushville, President of the State Anti-secret Association. The other three officers of the Association all reside here, and are S. S. Smith, Secretary; myself, Corresponding Secretary, and John H. Hunter, Treasurer. Besides, we also have residing here the State Lecturer, Rev. A. Mayn. We expect to secure a meeting before long, and plan for an aggressive campaign against the orders of darkness. M. A. GAULT.

FROM A COLPORTEUR OF THE N. C. A. IN THE SOUTH.

MCNAIRY, Tenn., Feb. 6., 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Since my last report, I have spent two weeks in Memphis. I took part in revival meetings, and succeeded in securing opportunities to lecture at four different points in the city, including one address before the students of the Baptist Bible and Normal Institute. There were fair audiences at each place, and very good attention was manifested.

En route for Jackson I met with Dr. Key, who is at the head of the Female College or Institute, in Jackson. In conversation upon the subject of Anti-masonry, he demurred to the idea of "making war upon Masonry;" said he was a Mason, but thought he had not attended a lodge but once in fourteen years; yet he had a little to say in favor of Masonry at the beginning of our conversation. We boarded the train for Jackson together, and had more conversation, in which I cited the fact that one may repudiate the divine inspiration of the Scriptures and yet be a good Mason. He seemed to be of quite another opinion, and desired me to show him my authority for such a claim. I took from my pocket a book containing quotations from Masonic authors on that subject, and turning to a certain place, asked him to read two pages and as much more as he pleased. Knowing the man, I had confidence that on receiving more "light on Masonry," he would not refuse it. After a while he turned to me, saying: "That is along the line of what you said." At the close of our conversation, he remarked that he should never attend another lodge.

At Jackson I had a good Methodist brother with me, and we made an unsuccessful effort to obtain the use of the court-house for a lecture. This man—Mr. Long—is thoroughly convinced of the idolatrous character of Masonic religion. He offered to circulate our literature, and said he would try to secure the use of the church where he worships for a lecture. But his pastor is the man who, after conversing with me on Masonry, asked me to "come around" when I wished to "talk on any other subject than Masonry."

Still I am encouraged to make personal efforts with ministers of the Gospel, assured that in some cases the labor is not in vain. C. POWERS.

THE PENNSYLVANIA STATE CONVENTION.

LETTER FROM THE EASTERN AGENT.

457 N. 6TH ST., PHILADELPHIA, Pa., February 8, 1895.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Arrangements are being made for the Pennsylvania Annual Convention. It is thought by again gathering in this great historical city we may enlarge the influence and force exerted for the right by the convention of last year. All who attended that memorable assemblage, with whom I have conversed, express pleasure that another is purposed.

A cordial invitation is extended by the pastor and session of the Second R. P. (Covenanter) church to meet with them. This would seem appropriate, as last year's convention met in a U. P. church. We should not be partial to any denomination. This church is large and centrally located, and we are sure of a cordial welcome.

The time that seems most convenient is February 25th and 26th. The convention should assemble at 2 P. M., there being five sessions, as usual.

We are promised some new and able speakers, including Rev. W. J. Coleman, Allegheny, Pa.; Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Wheaton, Ill.; Rev. E. D. Bailey, Washington, D. C.; Rev. A. S. Shelly, Bally, Pa.; Rev. Wm. Lyon, Washington, D. C.; Rev. C. S. Cleland, Philadelphia, Pa. I have not heard from some to whom I have written. Letters thus far are very encouraging.

The time for arrangements is short. If each friend will act quickly and work with zeal much may be accomplished.

The President's call will likely reach you with this. Look for programs one week later.

The Ohio friends have shown a commendable spirit in contributing to their work. Surely the Keystone State friends will not wish to be be-

CORRESPONDENCE.

ECHOES OF THE OHIO ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

LETTERS FROM FRIENDS WHO WERE UNABLE TO ATTEND.

LONDONDERRY, Ohio, Jan. 3, 1895.—It is scarcely in my power to go to Xenia, to the convention. I have just returned from the National Reform Convention at New Castle (Pa.), and my age (73) admonishes me that I cannot undertake too much. . . . I have a deep interest in your cause, and my prayers shall be for you. Ever since the capture and murder of Morgan, I have had this interest. Yours very truly, (Rev.) P. H. WYLIE.

SIDNEY, Ohio, Jan. 4, 1895.—I shall not be able, consistently with other duties, to attend the convention. Hope you may have a successful meeting.

What will become of our country when all the women, as well as the men, go into secret orders? It is important that the women should be informed on this subject. An intelligent woman, a neighbor of mine, whose husband is a Mason, before they were married, prevented him from becoming a Knight Templar. She got copies of the Christian Cynosure and a copy of "Conference of Christians on the Secret Lodge System, in Chicago," from me, and she worked with her husband till he declined the earnest solicitations of his brother Masons. If Christian women were intelligently opposed to the lodge, they could do much to keep the men out of it. . . . Ought we not to rely more on "the expulsive power of a new affection," and get the churches to form mutual aid societies, and also others, without the objectionable features?

There are many good people in these lodges, who pay little attention to the matter. A good Methodist minister told me that he had not been in the Masonic lodge for fifteen years; he "had no time for such—foolery." Cordially yours, (Rev.) JOHN P. ROBB.

MANSFIELD, Ohio, Jan. 4, 1895.—I would be very much pleased to attend the convention at Xenia, if convenient. My heart is in that work. I believe secrecy, as manifested in lodgism, is the cloak of almost every form of wickedness extant.

I hope you will succeed in working up a good convention. Ohio and Indiana are lodge-ridden States. I would like so much to have a State convention at Mansfield, sometime; but the movement has not enough friends here to work it up. The lodge is all in all.

How do you find the public mind on the subject of your agitation? Are the editors of the country more tolerant toward anti-secret discussions in their columns? I sometimes think—at least hope—that the (lodge) craze will reach a head before long, and explode. Yours cordially, (Rev.) R. J. GAULT.

FREMONT, Ohio; Jan. 16, 1895. — The work in which you are engaged has my cordial sympathy. . . . I regret that it will be impossible for me to attend the convention at Xenia. . . . I am thankful to say that I have had no fight to wage against the lodge system here, like that which I encountered at Delaware; but we meet this monster system of unbelief and iniquity everywhere, and in all places it must be met with outspoken protest and courageous testimony on the part of those who have knowledge of the evil. Conferences and conventions are a valuable help in burnishing our armor and keeping each other wide-awake on the danger that slumbereth not.

May the Lord of hosts endue us all with wisdom and valor, and so bless this warfare upon the empire of darkness that his name may be glorified, and the interests of his kingdom advanced. Let it be our earnest concern to keep our motives and methods pure and unsullied. Yours for Christ and the truth, (Rev.) E. PFEIFFER.

OBERLIN, Ohio, Jan. 24, 1895.—Both physical infirmity and want of means prevent me from attending your meeting, but I wish to assure you that you have my warmest sympathy, as well as my prayers, in your arduous but beneficent undertaking. These unfruitful works of darkness are among the most prevalent, alluring and pernicious of the many obstacles to the progress of the kingdom of our Lord. There are, indeed, many Antichrists, all of which are to be "consumed by the spirit of His mouth, and destroyed by the brightness of His coming;" but none more clearly bears the marks of the arch-enemy than do these secret combinations. They are conspiracies against the kingdom of God, since they usurp its place in the affections of their members. They are conspiracies against society, because they oppose the interests of a clan to the general interests of the whole.

We cannot make peace with them—not even a truce—without disloyalty to Him "who was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil." Yet we must remember that our special faithful and continued appeal is to our brethren in the Lord. Truly, "blindness in part hath happened to Israel;" yet it is also true that "the Lord hath not cut off his people whom he foreknew;" for, while it is written that "none of the wicked shall understand," it is also written that "the wise shall understand." If, therefore, the progress of our reform seems sometimes disheartening—if it sometimes seems to us, as it did to the ancient prophet, that though Noah, Daniel and Job were among this people, they should "deliver only their own souls," we do well to remember that the cause is not ours, but His who "shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied."

(Rev.) H. H. HINMAN.

THE REASON WHY.

———, Neb., Feb. 1, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In your last issue you called attention to the ominous silence of nearly all your exchanges on the subject of secrecy. At the same time the paper had an excellent article by M. N. Butler, and I think that gives the answer. We have not, to-day, a single Protestant denomination of any importance that is in position to be outspoken on this subject.

I notice it in our own—the Evangelical Lutheran church. The Augustana Synod, composed of the Swedish-speaking members of our church, has maintained a strenuous opposition to the system. But we, also, are cowed into silence; and that is done mainly through the English Lutheran synods with whom we affiliate in the General Council. The question of submission to the secret empire is one of discipline, on which we disagree with the exclusive English synod. A new synod having the admission of fraternity members one of their cardinal doctrines (so to speak) intend to use that as a special means of proselytism from our synod.

I see no other possible outcome of the struggle but that we must yield. They have us by the throat. If we do not allow the secret empire to control us, they will kill us; and we have no desire to die, at least not yet, for a while.

Now, Mr. Editor, I do not think that you should complain. The Protestant clergy depend upon the good will of their members for their bread and butter. At a meeting of the General Council I had a conversation with a Masonic Lutheran. He showed, to my pure satisfaction, that we are slaves under the secret empire. He said that some foolish Lutheran ministers yet work against secrecy. But they are soon starved out. A minister, on the other hand, that tolerates lodges will always get along. "For," said the fellow naively, "the lodge will see to it that he gets his salary." That, of course, implies that the lodge also sees to it that the other fellow is starved out.

In all candor I ask you, Mr. Editor, not to judge us harshly. I read several Lutheran church papers, both English and Swedish. But you could not get an article like this in the Workman, the Lutheran or the Lutheran Observer, or the Young Lutheran—no, not even as a paid advertisement. The managers of the papers would not dare to print it; for in less than six months the secret empire would have killed them outright. In the official organ of the Augustana Synod, the utterances about the secret empire have to be very circumspect.

I ask you not to print my name as author of this article, for the congregation of which I am a member, and the work in which I am engaged, would suffer the consequences. Therefore I will sign myself what I am in reality, and with me nine-tenths of the Protestants of the United States. Yours, very timidly, A COWARD.

LITERATURE.

CHRISTIANITY AND OUR TIMES: By R. P. Brorup. One volume, in paper, pages 228. Chicago: The International Book Co., 427 West Madison street, Chicago. 1895. Price, 25 cents.

This little volume, by a staunch friend of the National Christian Association and the great reform in which it is engaged, may be briefly described as a collection of a thousand wholesome truths, the adoption and practice of which by professed Christians alone would make the world far better in these times than it now is. Written and published in an unpretentious style, it presents no outward attraction; but the soberness and spirituality of its contents appeal to the interest and earnest consideration of every lover of our Lord and Saviour.

"It may be stated"—writes the author in his opening paper, on Evolution in Religion—"that this and succeeding chapters are not concerned about definitions and interpretations of a denominational character. The religious discussion of to-day has passed beyond these. The question is now about the facts, or what have been regarded as such, rather than their interpretation. It is the foundation which God has laid that is assailed"—by skeptics and "liberals"—"rather than the superstructure which men have built upon it. Nice definitions and interpretations of the Bible arouse but little attention. The question is about the Bible itself, and the facts of which it is believed to be a record. It is not so much a battle of different creeds, as a battle about that which is the foundation of all creeds. . . . Outposts of a denominational character are little defended, and assaults upon them are carelessly regarded. There are no heretics of a denominational character; only as they attack that which is fundamental in all creeds do they gain attention."

In the excellent chapter on "The Church and the Lodge," our author says:

> The lodge may consist of respectable moral people, but they are not the church of God's regenerated children; they are what Christ calls "the world," and in spite of respectability the Bible declares them "dead in trespasses and sin," who "do not discern the things of the Spirit of God." When the professed Christian, therefore, allows them to determine for him what are his duties toward God and his fellow-men, he renounces his own claim to spiritual illumination, and allows those to be his teachers who according to his faith are wholly unable to judge of his duties toward God and his fellow-men. In acknowledging the "Worshipful Master" of the lodge he practically renounces Christ, who said one is your Master and no one can serve two. In joining a brotherhood of the children of this world he slights the brotherhood of God's children, for, according to his faith, the two are as distinct as light and darkness.—Page 142.

Other topics treated at large are: Moral Difficulties in the Old Testament; Relation of the Old Testament to the New; Christ and the Bible; Interpretation and the New Departure ("Higher Criticism"); Intepretation and Ritualism; Creed and Discipline; Future Punishment; Doctrine of Sanctification; Sunday and the Adventists; Sociology and Crime; Modesty; Woman's Suffrage, and the Impending Struggle of Races.

Providence permitting, we shall have occasion to refer to this truly Christian book again and soon.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The "Midwinter" (February) number of the Century Magazine presents important pages in Sloane's new Life of Napoleon Bonaparte, in which the hero appears as a Jacobin patriot, amid the stirring scenes terminating in the fall of Robespierre and its consequences. Portraits and illustrations add interest to the story. Mrs. Jas. T. Fields contributes her personal recollections and some unpublished letters of Oliver Wendell Holmes. New weapons of the U. S. Army, with numerous engravings; the death of Emin Pasha, with maps and pictures; Lincoln, Chase and Grant, by Noah Brooks, a valuable chapter in our national history, and A plan to save the forests (by several writers), are important papers, which will attract attention; while articles of a miscellaneous character, of more or less interest, by Sir Edwin Arnold, John Hay, Rebecca Harding Davis, Kenyon Cox, etc., aid in making up a collection every way characteristic of this excellent magazine. New York: The Century Co. 35 cents.

McClure's Magazine for February is strong in letterpress and engravings, and fully equals any previous number of this popular monthly. Ida M. Tarbell continues her work on Napoleon, with 23 portraits and views, including the death-mask of the warrior and the Trumbull portrait; The great express robbery on the Rock Island Railroad is a detective story with a sharp flavor of romance; Editor A. K. McClure, of Philadelphia, contributes a finely illustrated paper on Lincoln as commander-in-chief; four articles, with many portraits and other engravings, by several writers, are devoted to the lamented Robert Louis Stevenson and his island home in the South Sea; James W. Temple relates the illustrated Romance of Dulltown, and Ian Maclaren tells the story of A Doctor of the Old School. New York City; S. S. McClure (Ltd). 15 cents.

Our more thoughtful readers will find the February issue of the Social Economist particularly good reading, even if its conclusions do not in every case harmonize with their own ideas. The leading article, Why Northern Wealth Grows Faster than Southern, discusses an important topic. Other papers, of equal interest, include a French View of Socialism, Fallacies that Fool Fiatists, Judicial Ignorance of the Law, Spencer's Ethical system, and Social Conditions at the South. The editorial notes and comments, and special departments, are timely and suggestive. The price of this magazine (15 cents) places it within the reach of all. Published at 34 Union Square, New York city.

HOW TO STORE ICE.

An Inexpensive Plan For Building a Valuable Icehouse.

As ice is one-tenth less in weight than water, and as, when packed in an icehouse as close as possible, there is some space lost between the blocks, it is safe to estimate the measure of it as 50 cubic feet to the ton. Thus for 50 tons the house should have 2,500 cubic feet space for the ice, not counting the spaces around it for the sawdust or other protective covering needed.

Lining of wood underground will be quickly rotted by the continued moisture and the oxidizing effect of the porous earth. Brick or stone should be used if at all possible.

The bottom must be dry. If the soil is sandy or gravelly, no special drainage will be necessary, and unless surface water is apt to flow into the cellar the subsoil water will drain away through the soil with sufficient rapidity to avoid damage to the ice. Otherwise there should be a drain land under the wall all around the building to cut off the water. This should be of 3 inch tiles, and as well as cutting off the soil water it will carry off that which collects from the melting of the ice.

If the walls of an icehouse are of brick or stone, there should be a wooden lining inside, leaving an air space of six inches, or this may be filled in with sawdust, in which case no sawdust will be needed about the ice except on the top of it and under it, as the walls will be sufficiently nonconductive of heat to preserve the ice during the summer. Otherwise at least six inches of dry sawdust will be needed, or tan bark, or other porous matter, as dry leaves well packed down, or the chaff from the clover thrashing, which is excellent, or, as a last resort, cut straw or wheat or other chaff. A foot of either of these should be laid on the bottom under the ice. The air space is more efficient in proportion to its tightness. Hence, if lined inside with tarred paper and the wall tarred over or plastered and then tarred, the intervening dead air space will be about as good as the ordinary filled in space that will be sure to gather moisture in time.

How to Make Breaded Fish.

Take a half pint of dried bread crumbs, 1½ teaspoonfuls of salt, a sixth of a teaspoonful of pepper, an egg, 2 pounds of any kind of fish, fat for frying. Have the fish free from skin and bones and cut it into pieces. Season it with the salt and pepper. Beat the egg in a soup plate and dip the fish in it, one piece at a time, getting every part covered with the egg; then roll in the crumbs and lay on a plate. Have enough fat in the frying kettle to float the fish. When it becomes so hot that blue smoke rises from the center, put in the fish and cook for five minutes. Drain on brown paper and serve very hot. Tartar sauce is particularly good to serve with breaded fish.

Wonderful for Headache.

IDEAL VS. REAL MASONRY.

There are two kinds of Freemasonry; one is that ideal kind which appears in books and periodicals written and controlled by the fraternity for public dissemination; and the other is that sort of which true Masons never speak in the presence of the uninitiated—the secret rituals of the various degrees and the blood-curdling obligations which members of the fraternity must assume.

The fact that there exists a dual Freemasonry, as explained in the foregoing paragraph, might suggest to a candid mind the suspicion of hypocrisy in the fraternity; and the testimony of those who have obtained high degrees in Freemasonry, and then left it for conscience' sake and forever, tends to strengthen the suspicion and confirm the existence of a shameful duplicity in this boasted "handmaiden of religion."

A ponderous volume could be compiled from the writings of adhering Freemasons in praise of the fraternity and its alleged merits; but such a task is unnecessary, and in one or two brief essays may be presented all that is necessary to establish our position and attest the hypocrisy of Freemasonry.

The testimony which we here reproduce in support of this position is gathered wholly from Masonic authorities—from both the open and secret books of the fraternity, and, of course, belongs to that class of evidence known in courts of justice as self-convincing.

For the present we will offer, as a witness, the Rev. Salem Town, LL. D., a man whose writings in defence of Freemasonry indicate the possession of more than ordinary ability. In the fraternity he attained to the official dignity of Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter, and Grand Prelate of the Grand Commandery of New York;" a man who was ardently attached to Freemasonry, and the author of a "System of Speculative Masonry." In that volume he embodied many plausible and suggestive thoughts, which, aside from some historical errors in his work, have been greatly esteemed among Masons. It is from that volume (edition of 1818) that we now proceed to quote ideal Masonry:

"That speculative Freemasonry is wisely calculated to irradiate the understanding, enlarge the capacity of the mind, and improve the heart, no man can doubt who has been correctly taught in its principles. These are facts capable of as positive proof as the nature of moral fitness will admit. . . . Speculative Freemasonry, as a system, evidently embraces, in body and substance, the whole duty of man as a moral being; comprising a summary of principles conformable to the very nature and fitness of things. Here is presented that variety and richness of scenery which charms the understanding, that beauty, sublimity and grandeur of objects which fill the contemplative mind with admiring views. Here we discover the wisdom of God in the symmetry of nature and the finger of Providence in the government of the world. The great outlines in the history of creation are also unfolded; the primitive innocence of man, the fall and consequent scenes of natural and moral evil. In a word, the history of nature and grace is most beautifully prefigured in a lively display of Masonic symbols."—Pages 23 and 24.

"Masonry," wrote Pres. Finney (Master Mason), "cannot be known from a perusal of the eulogistic books which adhering Masons have written. . . . . Their eulogistic books, as anyone may know who will examine them, are silly and for the most part little better than twaddle. If we read their orations and sermons that have been published in support of Masonry, and the books they have written, we shall find much that is silly, much that is false and a great deal more that is mere bombast and rhodomontade. I do do not say this rashly."

"It is the oath that makes the Mason," is an old and common saying among members of the fraternity; and all evidence deduced from the inner history of Masonry by competent witnesses confirms its truth. We may go further on the same testimony and say that Masonry is no better than the obligations which it imposes on its members. It is in these obligations that true Masonry is found—the real spirit of the fraternity as opposed to its flowery ideal.

In making this assertion we do not have to depend for its truth upon the works of seceded Masons (in whose statements we have implicit confidence), but obtain our information from their own publications, like "Ecce Orienti," and "Cabala," which reveal to us the secret work, respectively, of the Blue Lodge and the Chapter, covering seven degrees—from Entered Apprentice to Royal Arch Mason, both inclusive.

These books, published by Masonic authority, "for the use of members only," when compared with the expositions of Ronayne, Doesburg, et al., are confirmations of what these seceders from the lodge have written.

There is more to be said on this subject in future issues of this paper.

SECRET SOCIETIES, THE CHURCH AND PERSONAL LIBERTY.

Two of the most staunch and intelligent papers that we find among our religious exchanges are the Lutheran Standard, of Columbus, Ohio, and the Lutheran Witness, of Dayton, Ohio. Reference to the recent "know-nothing" article of the New York Independent, ignoring any knowledge of secret societies or any offensive relation which they bear to Christianity, has already been made in the Cynosure and promptly rebuked. The Lutheran Standard, of Februry 9, begins a series of articles on this subject, by an intelligent contributor, Wm. H. Price. In the first paper he discusses the right of church members to unite with deistical secret societies, and gives expression on the subject in the following words:

When, therefore, the right of church members to belong to secret societies is discussed and the cry of liberty, personal rights and a free country is raised, it has only the effect to blind people and embolden them in their opposition to the church. The ideas of men concerning liberty and personal rights are very vague. If the state and the church were always compelled to heed the cry of a free country and personal rights, where would they land? The anarchist, for example, is bent upon the destruction of all government, society, law and order. No one has more to say about a free country than he. When now he begins to carry out his infamous principles, and the strong arm of the law lays hold on him, are the authorities to deslst from meting out deserved punishment because he raises the cry of a free country and personal rights? How rldiculous! So it is also in the church.

There are other ideas in this article that may well be heeded also.

Of our Lutheran exchanges printed in foreign languages we know less than of those mentioned; but we know that there are many true Christian men in the Lutheran denomination who will earnestly resist the encroachments of Baal-worship into their churches.

The German Lutherans are firm opposers of the lodge. We make this statement lest the allegation in the letter of our correspondent on another page, respecting ALL Protestant denominations, should be considered too sweeping. In the main it is unhappily too truthful. Very many of the Protestant churches are open to the criticism which he makes, but it does not extend to those who fearlessly declare the whole counsel of God.

A FARMERS' FEDERATION — NON-SECRET AND NON-PARTISAN.

It is refreshing in these days of multifarious secret societies for all sorts of purposes, and ostensibly "benevolent," to find here and there an organization having a motive so excellent that it requires no hoodwinks, cable-tows or sanguinary obligations to make it seem better than it really is. Such a one has recently come to our notice.

Several weeks ago a call was issued to representative farmers in different parts of the country to meet in Chicago and form a society for mutual benefit. In pursuance of this call, those invited met about the middle of January, and organized "The National Farmers' Federation of the United States."

The objects of this Federation are thus set forth in its printed constitution:

To build up farmers' organizations by extending existing orders, and establishlng new ones; to bring all farmers' organizations into active co-operation ln promoting their com mon good; to furnish a means of communication between organizations and between isolated farmers; to brlng farmers lnto closer relation with the national and State departments of agriculture and the experlment stations; to provide for a farmers' reading course of study; to provide for the distributlon of literature whlch will lead to a better citizenshlp, to a more profound and practlcal knowledge of agriculture and a more thorough understanding of the questions relatlng to government, legislature, the laws of trade and relation of agriculture to other pursuits; to test the practicability of direct legislation on the "referendum" plan by submitting all questions of general interest to a vote of all members of the Federation; and to promote such other objects as the Federation may deem best accomplished by a general co-operative movement. The business and transactions of the Federation shall not be secret; but persons not members shall be excluded from executlve sessions. The Federation shall be non-sectarian and non-partisan.

The government of the Federation is centered in the "Supreme Council," which is composed of nine chosen members, three of whom serve three years; three, two years, and three, one year. This council elects the presiding officers, secretary and treasurer annually. The work and government of the confederation conforms as nearly as possible to that of the United States in its legislative, judicial and executive departments; and the Supreme Council selects the respective legistive, judicial and executive bodies, a board of education, and such sub-committees and officers as may be necessary; grants charters to all eligible organizations that desire to unite with it; and is empowered to organize subordinate branches of the Federation, to be known as "Farmers' Unions," and to provide for their government.

Membership in the Federation includes any organization composed of persons who obtain their living from the cultivation of land, and any person, over 18 years of age, who earns a livelihood by tilling the soil. The admission fee required from the latter is fifty cents. The Federation does not interfere with the rules, business arrangements or autonomy of the organizations which unite with it.

The following officers were chosen to serve during 1895: President, J. B. Furrow, Garwin, Iowa; vice-president, F. M. Palmer, Clinton, Ill.; secretary, Milton George, Chicago, Ill.; treasurer, W. R. Hostetter, Mt. Carroll, Ill.

Any further information concerning the Federation can be obtained from Secretary George, Room 1080, No. 324 Dearborn street, Chicago.

ABOUT THE NEW YORK "WEEKLY TRIBUNE."

The publisher of the Cynosure is receiving letters from past and present subscribers, asking information about "clubbing" our paper with the New York Weekly Tribune. Our object in making this advertised offer is to increase our subscription list, and especially to gain new subscribers. If those who already receive the Cynosure will induce some neighbor to subscribe for the Cynosure one year for $1.50, and then send us the $1.60, the Tribune will be sent to the old subscriber instead of the new. Thus the neighbor would be helped and the cause promoted. Again, some persons who have paid $1.50 for the Cynosure within the past few months ask to have the Tribune sent to them for ten cents additional. Now we do not wish to offend any of our old friends, but we cannot do better than we offer in the advertisement, which looks to future transactions and not to those of the past.

—The Pope has made public his disapproval of the bicycle as a means of locomotion by the priesthood.

—Rev. O. T. Lee, pastor of the Reformed Norwegian Lutheran church at Northwood, Iowa, writes to correct Rev. Wm. Fenton's statement that ex-Gov. Nelson, of Minnesota, is a Swede. Mr. Lee says that he is a Norwegian, from Voss, Norway.

—The Christian Arbitrator and Messenger of Peace has entered upon its twenty-fifth year, and removed from Richmond, Indiana, to Philadelphia, Pa. It is a bright monthly, handling the subject of peace and arbitration from a Christian standpoint.

—When Frances E. Willard used to chafe under cruel criticism, in the early days of her reform work, her mother pointedly remarked: "Keep quiet, child; we were not born to reign, but to wrestle." Other reformers will feel the force of the apothegm.

—Rev. P. B. Williams, the Pacific Coast agent, has removed to Portland, Ore., and writes, Jan. 30, that he was then going to Canby, Oregon, to lecture; from there he expected to visit the Puget Sound (Wash.) district, and to lecture in Seattle on the 7th of March.

—The Catholic Review thus interprets the fulmination of the Pope against the Odd-fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Sons of Temperance: "Their indeterminate oaths and their religious rituals make them organizations to which Catholics ought not to belong. With the good they do there is no quarrel. But a Christian is not free to swear away his freedom without limit, nor to take part in rites not provided by his religion." This may be accepted as a semi-official declaration, and contains a germ of truth, which all Christian churches will do well to receive and heed.

—The religion of our Lord Jesus Christ has many strange expositors in these days of apostacy. "I lately went to a church," writes a friend of the Cynosure, "and after services I asked one of the old members for some points in reference to their creed. The reply, instantly made, was that 'they had no creed but the Bible'; also that they excluded nothing and no one excluded by the Bible. In the course of further conversation, he drew from his pocket a plug of tobacco; he also admitted that his church admitted members who are Freemasons." Somehow the light in some minds is very like darkness when they read the Bible by it.

—Referring casually to the First Presbyterian church of Chicago, the Advance recalls a little history, interesting in itself, but especially so to friends of the anti-secrecy cause: The First Presbyterian was "the first church organized in Chicago. It is a rather remarkable fact that every memeber, with but one exception, at the organization of that church, was a Congregationalist; and that one, Deacon Philo Carpenter, was the man who a few years later was the real founder of the First Congregational church of which Dr. Goodwin is now pastor, and who besides did more 'first things' of greatest consequence to the higher interests of the city than any other citizen of his day."

—Nerve believes that labor, capital and engineering skill are at present all working at cross-purposes; but it also believes that these differences might be compromised if the cause of political "influence" did not intervene to disturb the relations between them and destroy what little confidence and wisdom yet exists. But the clannish spirit that shuts up labor in its secret unions and degrades their oath-bound members to the status of slaves; that combines capital and prescribes regulations better fitted for the government of slaves than of freemen, and the subordination of both skill and labor to these sinister influences will have to be removed by generous legislation or a higher power, before peace and harmony can be restored.

—The framers of the new Constitution of the State of New York wisely prohibited the issue of free railroad passes to any public State officer, one penalty for the acceptance of such a favor involving the recipient's loss of his office. The press reports that every effort will be made by State officials to violate the law without incurring the penalty, which, of course, includes the adoption of prevarication and other trickery. Chauncey Depew, one of the managers of the New York Central Railway, it is alleged, favors a plan of this sort that is unworthy of any citizen, and leads an exchange to inquire if he is an anarchist. Mr. Depew, however, is only directly in the line of the spirit of the age—to encourage lawlessness and to enhance personal and corporate gain at the expense of the suffering public.

—Older members of the N. C. A. will regret to learn of the death of Rev. J. E. Ambrose, of La Grange, Ill., on Sunday last. At the time of the murder of Wm. Morgan, Mr. Ambrose was a growing lad, and was so impressed with the circumstances and Morgan's exposure of Masonry that he ever afterward gave his public testimony against the iniquity of the lodge. He was among the first Baptist preachers (if not the very first) in Chicago, and was largely instrumental in organizing churches of that denomination throughout the West. He is to be buried at Elgin, in which place he labored faithfully in building up a prosperous society, and where he resided for several years. He was among the prominent speakers at the Chicago Conference of Christians on the Secret Lodge System, in April, 1890.

—Just after the publication of the papal ban upon several secret societies, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of New Orleans had the assurance to write to Supreme Chancellor Blackwell, of the Knights of Pythias, asking to be made acquainted with the secret work of the order. The answer of the chancellor informed the prelate that "no member of the Knights of Pythias has authority to disclose the contents of our rituals, and the only manner in which cognizance of the ritual can be taken by any person, is to make application for membership in a subordinate lodge of the order, receive the ranks and become a member in accordance with our laws and regulations." The Archbishop is hereby respectfully notified that it will not be necessary for him to join the order for the purpose designated. The N. C. A. will furnish him with the complete ritual of the Knights of Pythias for 25 cents.

—Republican Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Greenfield, Mass., celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of its organization a few days ago, with appropriate ceremonies and "such." One of its principal attractions was the very oldest Mason in that vicinity—90 years old, and 69 years one of the fraternity. His name is Dr. Chas. L. Lee. He said to a newspaper correspondent: "I always loved Masonry from the beginning to the end. I lived all through the Morgan excitement and attended meetings when I could. Subsequently my wife and I proposed to join the Congregational church. One of the deacons who had a bad attack of Anti-masonic fever said he would vote against me unless I would renounce Masonry. I said to him: 'Masonry is the handmaid of the church and I shall not give it up.' After awhile the deacon gave up his opposition and I was allowed to join the church." This settles the question among his lodge-fellows that Freemasonry is all that it claims to be. Otherwise this Masonic festival seems to have been very much like others of the same sort.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

FREE BIBLE LECTURES.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 6, 1895.

The second of the popular free lectures on the Bible, under the auspices of the American Society of Religious Education, was delivered this even- in Calvary Baptist church by Bishop Hurst, who took for his theme "The Bible and Modern Discovery," and pointed out numerous instances where modern discovery bore indisputable evidence to the mighty truths of God's book. He was introduced to the audience by Representative Springer, of Illinois.

There are in Washington ten large so-called each of which has an acknowledged bar-room attachment sufficiently profitable to justify the club in paying $400 a year for a bar-room license, and hundreds of smaller clubs where intoxicating liquor is sold on a smaller scale. Of the ten large clubs, eight have had liquor licenses granted them, and two are dispensing liquor without a license, under a recent court decision. The eight which have licenses wanted to do the same, and will, next year, if Congress does not amend the liquor law; but, as they had made applications for their licenses, and deposited the money to pay for them, before the court decided that they were not obliged to obtain licenses, the authorities issued them licenses instead of returning their money.

THE UNUSUALLY SEVERE WEATHER

has caused much suffering in Washington, owing to the large number of people out of employment. Strong efforts have been made to relieve this suffering. Within the past week a house-to-house canvass of the city has been made, and nearly $10,000 in money obtained, besides clothing, provisions and fuel, but the demands for help are increasing. It is estimated, by those who have investigated, that more than half of the applications for help come from non-resident tramps, who have come here for the purpose of living on charity during the winter, and who will not work when work is offered them.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Washington Humane Society the plan of establishing in our schools, which is being pushed by Mrs. M. Freeman Gray, of San Francisco, was endorsed. Mrs. Gray was present at the meeting, and said that she had been promised a hearing of her plan by the president of the board of public school trustees.

"INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION-CUPS."

So far as I know, the only Washington church that has followed the example set by a Baltimore and a Buffalo church, in using individual vessels for the wine at communion service, is the Dumbarton Avenue M. E. church, which introduced the innovation last Sunday. Bishop Hurst, who preached a powerful revival sermon before the celebration of the Lord's Supper, said the change was simply a matter of taste, although it had for its origin the opinions of eminent medical men that there is danger of communicating disease from sore lips and infected mouths in the old way of administering the wine. In this case each communicant was handed a small glass containing wine, there being a sufficient number of glasses for each communicant to have one.

Quite a number of Washington churches devoted one or both of their Sunday services to a celebration of the fourteenth anniversary of the organization of the first Christian Endeavor Society, which has grown in these fourteen years to 37,000 societies, with an aggregate membership of 2,223,800. An afternoon union mass meeting was held at Mt. Vernon Place church, and the first speaker thereat was Mr. W. H. Pennell, now a member of the First Congregational Society of this city, who is deservedly proud of having been the author of and the first person to sign the original Endeavor constitution. Mr. Pennell spoke entertainingly of how and why the society was organized, and read the constitution that he originally prepared, which differs little from those which have been adopted by all the societies since organized. The first society began its existence with a membership of fifty-eight.

THE CHURCH OF THE FUTURE.

Rev. Edward B. Bagby, pastor of the Ninth Street Christian church, and chaplain of the House of Representatives, in a sermon on "The Church of the Future," expressed the belief that the church of the future will be more of a young people's organization than either in the past or at the present. He referred to the time—not so long ago, either—when it was thought improper and unbecoming for young people to take any active part in church work, and said he thought the time was near at hand when every evangelical church in the world would have its bands of young people, organized to assist the pastor and ready to take the place of the older people. *

hind in this matter. My time will be too fully occupied with details of the convention to do much personal solicitation. Will not each one write a letter expressing an interest and enclose a contribution to aid in meeting the expense? Send to State Treasurer Edwin P. Sellew, 207 Walnut Place, Philadelphia, or myself.

It is said that a colored brother, when preaching, remarked that his text had two divisions. The first was "'splanatory." The second the "'rousement." I shall try and make the explanations regarding our convention, feeling sure that the friends will put in the "'rousements." There will be plenty of 'rousements at the convention. Do not wait until then to work, but begin now. Tell your friends you are coming, and advise them to do likewise. Bro. Speer, of Northwood, Ohio, took the right view of this matter. At the Ohio State Convention he said he had come to hold down a chair and show his interest in the work. He knew there would be plenty of good speakers, but felt that it was his duty to show his interest by coming to hear. Don't let any one say "I am of no account at such a meeting. Every one counts.

We hope to arrange to entertain friends coming as usual. Let all who expect to come write at once, that we may arrange for their entertainment.

Don't forget to pray often and earnestly for this, and all State conventions. It will profit but little to "torment the devil before his time," unless deliverance is given. Did I not know of souls being brought to Christ through truth presented at these gatherings, I should have little heart to labor for their success. May God so manifest his power that every Baal altar in this city may be broken. Yours for victory,

W. B. STODDARD.

WOMAN AND REFORM.

THE MORAL ADVANCEMENT OF SOCIETY IN HER HANDS.

Rev. Madison C. Peters Pays His Respects to Women Who Drink and Who Treat Temperance as a Joke—A Word About Sowing Wild Oats.

To me it is absolutely appalling as I mingle in society to see with what readiness those who are worthily called ladies drink.

When lovely woman stoops to folly
And finds too late that nips betray,
What charm can soothe her melancholy?
What art can wash her guilt away?

There is little hope in reforming our young men and keeping them in the path of virtue unless we begin by reforming the young women and teaching them to give their best influence to the cause of sobriety by the powerful example of total abstinence.

"You may rely upon it," said a young man who had felt the influence of which he spoke, "you may rely upon it that if they mix up the drinks for us we will not refuse to take them. If their lips first touch the glass, we are sure to drain it. If they evidently think us better company when our lips are loosened by wine and join in the laugh when we tell them of our follies, ministers may as well stop their preaching unless they can go a step further back and begin at the right place."

It is impossible to estimate the influence a woman of attractive manners can exert, and often that influence is thrown on the side of immorality simply because she does not think of it at all. In every circle woman fixes a standard of morality, above which few men have the courage to rise. If she treats temperance as a joke, they will regard drunkenness as a pardonable fault. The only hope for the moral advancement of society is to keep woman in the advance guard. I know men whose first steps in folly were taken under woman's direction, but who are now by drunkenness made unfit for her society, showing that there are women who do not condemn the iniquity so much as its vulgarity and grossness.

My dear young lady, for what do men seek your society? Are they simply attracted by a beautiful face? Is it the old fascination of sex alone? Do you draw around you men of intelligence and sense, men whose sentiments are lofty and edifying and whose deportment is such as correct morals dictate? She is the most beautiful woman in the world who can gather the good around her for the blessing of her smiles and strew men's pathway with moral light.

This is my lady's praise:

Shame before her is shamed.
Hate cannot hate repeat.
She is so pure of ways
There is no sin named
But falls before her feet.
But she is so frankly free,
So tender and so good to see,
Because she is so sweet.

REV MADISON C. PETERS PAYS HIS RESPECTS TO ALCOHOL.

Strong Drink Is Not Necessary For Man's Well Being—Beer, Wine and Whisky Drinkers Die Young—The Offspring of Drunkards Inherit Mental Diseases.

That strong drink does not help men to endure continued cold we have the testimony of Dr Hayes, the arctic explorer, who did not use alcohol and would not take any man with him who did.

That it does not help men to endure great beat we have the testimony from the middle of Africa. Dr. Livingstone said, "The most severe labors and privations may be undergone without alcoholic stimulants, because those of us who have endured the most had nothing else than water, and not always enough of that."

Alcohol does not create a healthy condition of the body The corpulency of beer and wine drinkers seldom continues to old age. First the legs, then the shoulders, give way, and finally the whole body becomes loose and flabby A general corpulence of the body is not a healthy state, but the reverse. No animal in the state of nature exhibits any considerable deposit of fat. Animals are fattened only for the slaughter Certain classes of men have the appearance of great bodily vigor, notwithstanding the habitual use of liquor, and undergo great muscular exertion, but the constitutions of such men break down before they are advanced in years. Diseases and injuries of the most trifling character are often very serious, the slightest scratch or bruise often causing a fatal attack of erysipelas, etc. Surgeons unwillingly perform operations on drinking men because the chance of recovery is so small.

The history of cholera and all epidemics shows that alcohol lessens the power to resist diseases and contributes to their fatality by impairing the ability to overcome them.

Stimulant from stimulus, "a spur or a goad," seemingly gives new strength and life for awhile, but it uses up the reserve forces which God gave to us for the emergencies of life.

Whisky is a Saxon word and means "water of life." Water of death would be better Alcohol, from the Arabic alkahol, "something very subtle," is the devil's most subtle poison for man's destruction.

Intoxication means poisoning The condition of drunkenness in all of its stages is one of poisoning. Among the first effects of this poisoning is an increase in the force and rapidity of the heart's contractions.

Drink a glass of whisky, and it passes into your blood, through your heart, into the lungs, and finally into the brain. Every part of the body tries to refuse it admission, and so it hurries on, but leaves somewhat of itself behind, poisoning everything it touches. Its baneful influence remains. When the alcohol reaches the heart, it goads the heart to greater work, and so the heart beats faster. The normal condition of the heart is 100,000 strokes a day, but an abnormal condition produced by the use of alcohol increases the heart's work to 130,000 strokes a day This extra labor is very wearing upon the heart. The manifestation of this undue excitement of the heart is felt in the morning headache after last night's drunk. Alcohol kept the heart pumping all night when it should have been resting.

Drink and Longevity.

There can be no doubt that the use of alcoholic liquors shortens life. No life insurance company will accept a person who is known to be intemperate, and if it is discovered after his death that he has been accustomed to the excessive use of alcoholic liquors, contrary to his statement, the policy is declared void.

The following table, prepared from a series of careful observations made by Mr. F. G. P. Nelson of London contrasts the "expectations of life" for temperate and intemperate persons:

Ages.	Temperate. Years.	Intemperate. Years.	Loss of life. Years.
30	36.5	13.8	22.7
40	28.8	11.6	17.2
50	21.2	10.9	10.3
60	14.3	8.9	5.4

The drunkard not only injures and enfeebles himself, but entails mental diseases upon his family His daughters are nervous and hysterical, his sons are weak, wayward, eccentric and liable to insanity Dr. Willard Parker says, "Alcohol has no place in the health system, but is an instant poison, producing a diseased condition of body and mind."

HOW THE POOR AND HOMELY CAN MEET WITH SUCCESS.

The Different Sets Which Exist In Every Community—The Girl Who Is Neither Beautiful Nor Possessed of a Fortune Must Rely on Her Wits.

Let the homely girl who is just beginning her first season make up her mind early as to what "set" she means to be in. There is no place so large or so small that people of like tastes in society do not tend to congregate and seek each other's company. Everywhere one is sure to find the fast set and the serious set, the musical, the literary, the religious and the athletic sets, and, however she may make up her mind beforchand to keep clear of cliques, she is sure to find, sooner or later, that she has, by natural affinity, selected her special friends from some one of these sets.

But there is a wide difference between choosing friends among sympathetic people and giving oneself over to a very narrow range of acquaintances and ignoring the possibilities of amusement or benefit to be found outside a small clique. Naturally the plain girl with a nice singing voice or the one who loves her piano is going to be inclined to chum with the other girls who like to go to the concerts, and naturally she would rather accept invitations to houses where her talents count for something and she is likely to meet the great musicians as fellow guests, but she will make a great error if she identifies herself so exclusively with the musicians that when a party is being made up to go and hear a popular lecture and come back to a little supper afterward, where there is a lot of clever talk and fun, she is left out because the people with literary tastes think she cares only for music. And, though she may be a girl with serious religious views and anxious to be of use in the Sunday school or interested in some of the city missions, it's a pity to be so absorbed in being of use to others that she loses all sight of the uses of her own youth and to get left out of all the innocent larks and fun of the other girls because they think "she's so deadly pious and grave."

To the ordinary looking debutante who is full of health and high spirits and eager for pleasure—as, thank heaven, the average girl is—the greatest temptation of all is to join the fast set, the set whose only pursuit and interest is pleasure, and, therefore, seem to her ignorant little eyes to have the best time of any of them.

She sees mamma shake her head when the names of some of the leaders in that set are mentioned, but when she meets them herself they seem to her to be only more than usually jolly and kind and not at all different in behavior from girls whom mamma approves of, and the men of that set are livelier and dance well and say such admiring things to her that she jumps at the conclusion that the fast set are quite as nice as anybody and much more amusing.

After awhile she hears them say and sees them do some little thing that shocks her rather, but they are so good tempered and cheerful about it that she hesitates to take offense at it, and day by day she sees and hears and gradually grows accustomed to things that would have shocked her terribly at first had she known them all at once. Day by day she grows to "not mind" coarse jokes and vulgar deeds, and from thinking they are no harm she simply passes into imitating their behavior, the decline in her delicacy and modesty being so gradual that she does not perceive how far she has gone. She would be horrified and disgusted with a girl whose finger nails were black or her body foul and dirty, but she has lost the power to perceive that a black mind and a foul tongue and imagination are infinitely more loathsome.

Another set that the wise, sweet minded young debutante will keep out of is the idle set, who find their only amusement in the feeblest of novels and the Saturday matinees, who fill their empty hours with furious admiration of actresses and singers, who know and care nothing for such addle pated admirers.

Every girl beginning her first season should take stock of herself carefully. A pretty girl, or a rich girl, or a witty girl is likely to be much in demand, but the girl who is not pretty has a somewhat harder task before her to make her season pleasant and successful.

For one thing, she should realize that while beautiful debutantes can afford to be a little careless in dress and still look attractive, it behooves her to be always a very pink of perfection in all matters of toilet, since there is a certain beauty and charm in absolute neatness which every one unconsciously feels. Her hair should always be beautifully done, her nails perfectly manicured, and every pin, plait and ribbon exactly in place. Whatever gift she may have should be carefully cultivated and developed to its highest degree. It is not always the beauties who are the best partners on the ballroom floor or the best musicians or horsewomen or golf players, and whenever such accomplishments count the beauty may have to give place to the girl who knows how to do something well.

A clever, witty girl finds most things plain sailing, but a girl without such gifts can charm almost as much with sweet temper and careful courtesy and cheerful willingness to be of use to other people.

The rich girl, too, can without much difficulty command a following, but the poor girl has a harder time. Yet the poor girl who shows no envy, who takes her deprivations cheerfully, is not always standing upon her dignity and knows the art of being a charming guest and accepting gracefully and gratefully many favors she cannot return, is in a fair way to do away with many of the disadvantages of circumstances. This sort of girl never places herself in rivalry with those better off than herself in matters of expense. She makes no attempt to imitate with cotton velvets and cheap furs or imitation jewels the beauties of the toilets of the richer girls. She makes herself content with the simple daintinesses within her means, and when she entertains makes her hospitable good will and merriment take the place of costly dishes or expensive flowers.—Chicago Tribune.

Baby's Cries.

When a baby cries from hunger, it generally stretches out its hands and moves its head about; if from pain, it moves restlessly, especially its lower limbs. There are some people who think a child never cries unless it requires feeding. Should it be in pain, very often feeding will only increase the mischief. Mothers and nurses who are used to children generally can divine by experience what is the cause of the infant's trouble. The popular idea of dancing a baby about when it cries is generally a very erroneous treatment, and gentle, tender handling would be much more soothing to it.—Woman.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 17. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Lessons from the parable of the good Samaritan.—Luke x, 25-37. (A missionary topic.)

The parallel of the good Samaritan is recorded by Luke alone. We do not know either the time when or the place where it was spoken. It is probable that it was during one of Christ's public discourses, when He was interrupted by the lawyer who asked Him what He should do to inherit eternal life. In answer Christ asked him what the law said, and he replied, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, * * * and thy neighbor as thyself." Probably to vindicate himself the lawyer further inquires, "Who is my neighbor?" to which question Christ replies with the parable of the good Samaritan, to the lessons of which our topic directs us.

1. We learn from this parable the brotherhood of man. This was the great lesson it was to teach. The lawyer was a Jew. He had been taught that the word neighbor was limited by nationality and religion; that people of a different nationality and religion had no just claims upon him, and therefore in fulfilling all his obligations to his own people he obeyed the command to love his neighbors as himself. But Christ wished to teach him differently and did so by making him admit that a Samaritan, between whom and the Jews there was no affiliation or association, had proved himself neighbor to an unfortunate Jew who had been waylaid by thieves when he had compassion on him and helped him rather than men of his own race who had looked upon him and had passed by without assisting him. This is the one great lesson taught by this parable—that all men are our brothers, our neighbors; that nationality and religion do not separate men so that the one has no obligations toward the other. As God is our common Father, so all men are our brothers, and we are each our brother's keeper.

2. We may learn also the estimation which the world places upon pharisaism. Christ may not have intended particularly to hold up the priest and Levite to the scorn and ridicule of the world. He may have used them simply to emphasize the character of the Samaritan, and yet the result has been the same. The world ever since has held them up but to heap scorn and ridicule and abuse upon them, and in so doing it has without qualification condemned pharisaism in any form.

3. We may learn the beauty of sympathy and self sacrifice. The Samaritan saw before him a fellow creature in need of his help. He sympathized with him, and sacrificing his race and religious prejudices he helped him. His action has always been praised and lauded. The church and the world never tire of singing his praises. "Go and do thou likewise." On the highway of life many have been robbed and plundered of things more dear than physical life and earthly possessions. They need your help. They need you to carry or send the gospel to them. Be a good Samaritan and do it.

Bible Readings.—Gen. iv, 8-12; Lev. xix, 18; Ps. xxxv, 11-14; Prov. xix, 17; Math. v, 43, 44; xxviii, 19, 20; Luke vi, 31; John xiii, 34; Acts i, 8, xvi, 9-12; Gal. vi, 2; I John iii, 17; iv, 20, 21.

Christian Endeavor Churches.

A recent speaker before the Christian Endeavor union of Manchester repeated the old charge against Christian Endeavor—that it was founding a separate denomination, giving as proof the fact that already several Christian Endeavor churches had been built. American editors, I am glad to say, have learned that these "Christian Endeavor churches" have all been built by the regular denominational boards of home missions of the various denominations, with money furnished at their invitation by the Christian Endeavorers of those denominations. That is all there is to that charge.—John Willis Baer.

The Best Commandment.

The fourth commandment is the test commandment of the ten, the very keystone of the arch. Again and again it has been made the starting point, the entering wedge of great moral changes. It is the strategic point. It sounds the keynote. That man who has little or no regard for the Lord's day has within him the moral tone of an idolater, a thief, a liar, a murderer. That government which fails to observe the command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," sets a premium on every sin of the decalogue.—M. D. Kneeland, D. D.

How to Reduce the Number of Heathen.

An English Endeavorer formed the plan of collecting as many 3d. pieces as would furnish one for each 1,000,000 of heathen in the world, and he did it—840 three penny bits. Is not this a plan that can be carried out by all Endeavorers? It would not take many sets of 840 dimes each to reduce considerably the number of heathen that must be counted.—Selected.

POOR MEN'S CLUBS.

PLAN TO SUPPLANT SALOONS WITH TEMPERANCE RESORTS.

They Will Endeavor to Surpass the Drinking Places In Comforts and Conveniences—Methods of Saloons to Be Followed Except as to Sale of Intoxicants.

In our opinion the temperance forces and agencies of the country could not unite in any work more practical and more productive of immediate and lasting benefits to the cause than the founding of a general system of popular resorts having for their aim the supplanting of the saloons as places of rendezvous for the masses. Every large city ought to have 200 or 300 of these resorts and every town its due proportion.

In order to reach the people who now patronize the drink shops and to be successful in all respects these resorts must be run, ostensibly at least, on strictly business principles for strictly business purposes. To form any connection between them and any religions, charitable or philanthropic organization would be absolutely fatal to their success. The men whom they ought to reach will not enter places where they are preached at, exhorted, "missioned" or patronized in any way. No doubt they ought to do so, but the fact remains that they will not.

In dealing with men, it is generally necessary to take human nature into account just as we find it and not as we might like to have it. This is particularly true here. The class of people whom we have in view have a natural feeling of independence which prompts them to fight shy of charitable and philanthropic agencies and to resent any attempt to thrust upon them things which they have no desire for and do not think they need. They prefer to pay their own way and to enjoy their own liberty of thought and action.

This describes the state of feeling of the vast majority of the working class everywhere, the class that now finds in the saloon the best and only substitute for the rich man's club, a place for social meeting, for relaxation and amusement.

The question is whether it would not be a wise, practical and effective stroke of policy to meet the saloon at this point by establishing in its place an institution that shall have all the features and characteristics of the drinkshops within the limits of law and decency, with the single exception of intoxicating liquors. It should resemble the saloon in keeping open doors at all lawful hours for all orderly persons of all ranks and conditions. It should place no annoying and needless restrictions upon its patrons as to conversation and conduct, leaving such matters to be dealt with as occasion may arise and according to the dictates of common sense. It should endeavor to outdo the saloons, if possible, in affording more comforts and conveniences, cleaner and more attractive surroundings and better and more wholesome food and drink for a given price.

There would be a field here for the quiet exercise of righteous principle, to which the saloon business is a stranger—dealing with men on an honest, fair and just basis—good measure, no adulterations and no petty exactions. Honest workingmen would not be slow to appreciate the advantages of a place where they felt certain of being treated honorably and fairly in all things and of getting a genuine article for their money, whether of food or drink or anything else that might be for sale. It is only in extremely rare cases that they can have any such certainty in a saloon.

Surely some large and positive gains on the side of temperance and law and order might be expected from the general institution of such resorts as we have described. That they would meet a large and real need in our social system there cannot be the slightest doubt.—Christian Work.

Marching Toward Perdition.

Between 1861 and 1865 a million of men were horribly slaughtered in bloody, barbarous war. It is now admitted by the church itself that all this carnage might have been avoided had she been up and doing and filled with the spirit of the blessed Master, Jesus, who was murdered by the cultured, time-serving church people of his day. Are not Christians crucifying him again today by their indifference? A million of men are at this moment marching to the fearful Niagara of drink, and every year a careful estimate tells us nearly 100,000 of them plunge into the great abyss of rum's perdition and are forever lost in the whirlpool and rapids that utterly destroy them.—Exchange.

Temperance In Alaska.

A very curious temperance society exists in the Siberian village of Ashlyka. Every year in September the members meet in the church and make a solemn promise to abstain from wine and spirits for a whole year. They also sign an agreement that any person breaking the pledge shall pay a fine of 25 rubles to the church and submit to be spat upon by his more continent fellows. The most peculiar feature of the whole business, however, is that the members on the one day of the year when the pledge expires allow themselves wine and brandy during the few hours which intervene before the pledge for the ensuing year is made.—Exchange.

THE ENGINE WENT ON.

It Had Eight Masters, and Strong Drink Killed Most of Them.

I once had a curious and instructive conversation with an engineer who had charge of a large stationary engine. It was a beautiful engine and worked as true as steel could work. The man surprised me by telling me it had been at work 90 years, "and do you know," he added, "it has had eight masters. I am the eighth who has had the care of it. The others are all either dead or worn out, and yet it goes on as if it were as young as ever. Very strange, sir, isn't it, that an engine should live so much longer than a man, and it is not hard work for us either, or exposed work, for the room is always warm and comfortable, and the place is of course clean and light."

"What did the men die from?" I asked.

"Well, three or four, I am afraid, died of drink, another of bad temper, another of worry, and so on, but the engine went on all the same." The fate of the engine, its long life and continued industry puzzled the man. He often in his lonely hours thought of it and wondered how many men would follow him before the engine began to break down. It did not puzzle me. That engine worked a great many hours a day truly, but it was equable in its work; it never ran loose; it was true in its vocation; it was bright as a new pin, clean in every point; it was served with best but simplest fuel food; it had its furnace tubes clear; it was saved from friction by having its parts properly oiled, and it drank nothing but water. So it lived on through nearly three generations, with a good chance of living through three more. It was allowed, in fact, to make the most of its physical life.

Its masters did not make the most of their lives. They might have been somewhat industrious, but they were not so orderly, so true, so steady, so clean as they made the engine. They had not learned so well how to find the best food and drink for their own labor as had been found for the engine. They did not make the most of their lives, and therefore they stopped, but the engine went, still merrily, on its way.—Sir B. W. Richardson in Longman's Magazine.

There Are Flies on the Drunkard.

If three or five or more men are asleep in a room and one of them is drunk, the flies will gather upon the tipsy man and avoid the others. The reason is that insects revel in the odor of alcohol and sometimes get drunk on it.—Harrison's Magazine.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VIII, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, FEB. 24.

Text of the Lesson, John ix, 1-11—Memory Verses, 1-3—Golden Text, John ix, 5—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "And as Jesus passed by He saw a man which was blind from his birth." In the order of events this lesson probably preceded that of last week. It is the only one given to us from that whole section of John's gospel from chapter vii, 2, to x, 21, in which we find Jesus at Jerusalem teaching in the temple and hated by the chief priests and Pharisees. In chapter viii, 12, 28, He proclaims Himself as the light of the world and the light of life, speaking only what the Father told Him and doing always these things that please Him, not seeking His own glory (verses 29, 50).

2. "And His disciples asked Him, saying, Master, who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind? It is a common thing to suppose that special suffering is caused by special sin and that sickness is the result of individual sin. This is sometimes the case as with the men whom Jesus healed at the pool of Bethesda (chapter viii, 14), but let us carefully observe the teaching of Jesus in this lesson, and we shall see that while sin lies originally back of all sickness and suffering, for had there been no sin, suffering would not have been, yet we must not suppose in the case of any individual that there has been any special sin or that there is any lack of faith in God back of the suffering.

3. "Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned nor his parents, but that the works of God should be made manifest in him." There can be no contradictions in Scripture, and as it is written that "all have sinned" (Rom. iii, 23) Jesus did not say that neither this man nor his parents had never sinned, but in answer to the disciple's question He said that this blindness was not the result of any special sin. Why, then, was this man born blind? Here is the answer. That the works of God might be seen in him. We are reminded of the question in Ex. iv, 11, "Who maketh the dumb or deaf, or the seeing or the blind? Have not I, the Lord?"

4. "I must work the works of Him that sent me while it is day. The night cometh, when no man can work." Jesus delighted to honor the Father and to call Himself "Sent of God." More than 30 times in this gospel He is so called, and when He finished His ministry He said gladly to His Father, "I have glorified Thee on the earth" (John xvii, 4). As to all the works wrought by Him, He confessed that it was the Father in Him who did the works (John xiv, 10). For our comfort He tells us that, as the Father sent Him, so He sends us (John xvii, 18; xx, 21); that He is with us all the days having all power in heaven and on earth; that He will hold our hand, be with our mouth and work in us both to will and to do of His good pleasure (Math. xxviii, 20; Isa. xli, 13; Ex. iv, 12; Phil. ii, 13).

5. "As long as I am in the world I am the light of the world." Compare chapters viii, 12, and xii, 35, 36. See a proof of His divinity, for what mere man would dare to use such words, being in his right mind? Then hear Him as He says to His disciples, "Ye are the light of the world" (Math. v, 14), and consider well the fact that, whether blind or seeing, deaf or hearing, dumb or speaking, sick or well, rich or poor, unto each one is given the offer of having God work His works in us, and of having Jesus live His life in us. The wonder is that He takes sinners to do this. He came to save sinners, to take lost ones and redeem them, filthy ones and make them whiter than snow; that in these redeemed and blood washed souls He might reproduce His life and speak the words and work the works of God (II. Cor. iv, 10, 11).

6. "When He had thus spoken, He spat on the ground and made clay of the spittle, and He anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay." Sometimes with a word, sometimes with a touch and sometimes without being present at all He wrought His works and glorified God, but whether we may see it or not there must have been always a reason for the way He wrought. On other occasions we read of His using spittle, as in Mark vii, 33; viii, 23, and by means of this spittle from His tongue both sight and hearing are restored either instantly or gradually, as it pleaseth Him.

7. "And said unto him, Go, wash in the pool of Siloam (which is, by interpretation, Sent). He went his way, therefore, and washed and came seeing." All is suggestive. Jesus is the "Sent of God" (Gal. iv, 4). He also is the fountain of living water (Jer. ii, 13). He was God manifest in the flesh (I Tim. iii, 16), so that both spittle and earth and Siloam are suggestive of Him by whom the blind eyes were made to see. On the part of the blind man there was simply submission and obedience, and thus the victory.

8. "The neighbors, therefore, and they which before had seen him that he was blind, said, Is not this he that sat and begged?" The poor blind man had been utterly helpless, he could give nothing and he could do nothing by which to merit or obtain his sight. Such is truly the real condition of all the unsaved, but because they fancy they are not blind (verse 41) and not helpless they insist on saying, "We see," and "We can do very well," and thus they continue blind. When, however, any become willing to be healed by Jesus and are truly healed, their old acquaintances can hardly tell whether it is they or not, the change is so great.

9. "Some said, This is he; others said, he is like him, but he said, I am he." If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature. Old things are passed away, and all things are become new. Only one who was always blind and had his eyes finally opened could sympathize with this man in his newly found joys and experiences. He was in a new world, a world of which he had heard and something of which he had felt, but which he now saw for himself.

10. "Therefore said they unto him, How were thine eyes opened?" Since the world began no one had ever heard that a man opened the eyes of one born blind (verse 32), and this was such an unheard of thing that some now questioned as to whether the man ever had been blind (verse 18). To doubt the miraculous is still a common sin. The difficulty now is that the professed followers of Jesus are, many of them, filled with these doubts and so zealously proclaim them that many are affected thereby, but not for good.

11. "He answered and said, A man that is called Jesus made clay and anointed mine eyes and said unto me, Go to the pool of Siloam and wash, and I went and washed, and I received sight." These are the plain, simple, unvarnished facts given by a competent witness who could say, "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see" (verse 25).

STATE LAWMAKERS.

SYNOPSIS OF PROCEEDINGS IN THE LEGISLATURE.

What the Senators and Representatives Are Doing for the Benefit of Their Constituents—Bills and Resolutions Introduced—Other News of General Interest.

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 6.—The senate passed the following bills: Providing that the person offering to charge the least rate of interest on sales of lands for taxes shall be the successful bidder; changing the time for taking judgments on property for delinquent taxes from May to June term of court. The resolution in memory of ex-Senator McDonal was adopted, and the joint resolution to buy flags to decorate soldiers' graves on Decoration Day was defeated. A bill to regulate telephone charges was introduced in the house and one to reform city police departments.

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 7.—A bill for the appropriation of $26,000 to establish a plant in which to cultivate anti-toxine at public expense was introduced in the senate. Other bills introduced: To prevent replevin of captured gambling tools; to regulate elevated and surface railways. In the house the first bill against Pullman was introduced; it dictates what he shall charge for his sleeping car berths, the cut being about 50 per cent. Other bills: Proscribing the cigarette; to abolish capital punishment by the courts; to regulate the sale, etc., of bread. A large delegation of prominent Chicago men is here to lobby for the movement in favor of reform in city government.

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 8.—In the state senate a letter from Vice President Stevenson was read thanking the senators for their sympathy. Several petitions were read, one being from letter carriers who want street railways forced to carry them free. The Chicago library bill was advanced to third reading, as were the bills giving $4,000 in aid of the State Horticultural Society and $1,000 annually to the Dairymen's association. Recent nominations by the governor were confirmed. The house sent to third reading the bill to make incurable insanity grounds for divorce. A number of bills were introduced, among them one appropriating $100,000 for a new state normal school, probably at Mattoon.

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 9.—The senate adjourned to Monday, but the house for the first time this session adjourned to today, with poor prospects of a quorum. The senate ordered to third reading the bill granting woman suffrage in certain township elections. Bills introduced: Appropriating $25,050 for a home for indigent mothers, widows, and daughters of deceased soldiers; authorizing cities and towns to tax "foreign" fire insurance companies for the benefit of the local fire department. In the house a bill was introduced to require the Illinois Central railway to sell 150,000 acres of land in southern Illinois. It is part of the state grant to the road. Another bill is for local option in towns and cities of 100,000 or less population. The bill limiting the time for contesting wills to two years passed.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

Proceedings of the National Lawmakers in Both Houses.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—The senate session opened with a very breezy personal altercation between Mitchell of Oregon and Harris of Tennessee. The words "ungentlemanly" and "contemptible" were exchanged and for a time it looked as though the senate chamber might witness a repetition of the belligerent scene in the house last week. But the conflict assumed a somewhat serio-comic aspect and the senate soon relapsed into an uneventful consideration of routine business. The District of Columbia appropriation bill was passed and discussion of the diplomatic and consular bill was begun.

The house passed several bills, among them one to pension the widow of the late Commodore Frank Avery, at the rate of $20 per month, and one for the relief of Kate Eberle, an Indian woman. The balance of the day was devoted to debate on the administration currency bill, Reed speaking in favor of his own measure to tide over the difficulties.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—The Hawaiian question in general and the Hawaiian cable in particular were the main themes before the senate, but nothing except talk resulted on the item in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill of $500,000 for immediately beginning cable construction between the United States and Hawaii. It will probably be ruled out on a point of order. The bill for a new postoffice building at Chicago was passed. Cost is limited to $4,000,000. It differs from the house bill and will go to conference. An executive session was held.

The second day's debate on the administration's bill authorizing the issue of $500,000,000 of gold bonds for the retirement of the legal tenders and treasury notes was not productive of marked incident of any kind. Most of the amendments were defeated as rapidly as offered. An amendment proposing to strike out the section providing for the payment of customs duties in gold was allowed to stand amended so as to make them payable in gold and silver, and the committee amendment compelling the national banks to carry their reserve in gold and silver coin was voted down.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—The laying of a cable to Hawaii was further discussed in the senate, but no conclusion was reached, and the item remains as a stumbling block to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. The cable project has been well nigh lost sight of in the wide range of Hawaiian debate. The house did nothing but defeat the administration currency bill—161 to 134—and then adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—The senate passed a bill giving $10,000 for the relief of the poor in Washington. The president's message announcing the purchase of gold was read and referred to the finance committee. The message giving Minister Willis' telegram from Hawaii stating that two Americans had been condemned to death by the Dole government, caused a discussion. Hale, Hawley and others declared the execution must be stopped; Morgan said our policy was non-intervention. The matter was dropped without action. Some miscellaneous business was attended to and an executive session held.

The house filibustered against a bill to allow clerks for members at $1,200 per annum, and it was laid aside. The president's messages on bonds and the Hawaiian trials were read, the former referred to the ways and means and the latter to the foreign affairs committee. The senate bill for the relief of the poor of the city was passed, and the senate amendments to the bill to regulate navigation on lakes and rivers concurred in. A dozen or so private pension bills were passed.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—By the decisive vote of 36 to 25 the senate adopted the amendment to the diplomatic bill giving $500,000 to begin work on a cable to Hawaii and authorizing the president to contract for the entire work at a cost not exceeding $3 000,000. Morgan, Gorman, Hill, Butler, Call and White, with two Populists, voted with the Republicans and made the majority for the cable. Pettigrew voted no. The diplomatic bill was passed and eulogies were pronounced on the late Senator Stockbridge, of Michigan. Peffer presented a resolution questioning the right of the treasury to issue bonds. A resolution was adopted for an international commission to investigate the connecting of the great lakes with the ocean.

The house in committee of the whole voted to place individual clerks of members on the annual salary roll at the rate of $100 per month. These clerks now get $100 per month during the session. The annual attempt to strike out the appropriation for the civil service commission was made and was defeated.

A joint resolution was passed to extend the time for making income tax returns to April 15. The remainder of the day after 3 o'clock was devoted to eulogies on the late Representative Wright, of Pennsylvania.

China Telegraphs Full Powers.

LONDON, Feb. 11.—A dispatch to The Times from Pekin says that full powers have been telegraphed to the Chinese peace envoys, with a view of a renewal of the negotiations with Japan. The envoys are now at Nagasaki, Japan, whither they went after the Japanese government refused to treat with them.

MISS FLAGG'S LATEST NEW BOOK!

"A Prisoner of Hope."

COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.

Price, $1.25.

We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident, In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy, postage prepaid.

DEFEATED THE BILL.

HOUSE GOES AGAINST ADMINISTRATION MEASURE.

Not Even Allowed to Go to Third Reading—The Refusal Clinched and Riveted by Laying a Reconsideration on the Table—Those Who Voted for Third Reading.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—The last hope of financial legislation for the relief of the treasury at the present session of congress went by the board when the house yesterday afternoon by a vote of 134 to 161 rejected the administration bill to authorize an issue of $500,000,000 gold bonds. The bill was beaten before it reached its last parliamentary stage. This result was reached after three days of spirited and at times heated debate, and at the end of a seven-hour session. From 11 a. m. until 3:30 p. m. yesterday, when the bill with the pending substitutes was reported to the house from the committee of the whole, amendments were offered in rapid succession, most of which were voted down as fast as they were offered.

Vote on the Reed Substitute.

Many of them were desired to load down the bill and the votes thereon were in no sense test votes. The Bell amendment, for instance, to make the bonds payable in gold and silver, was defeated by the decisive vote of 76 to 103, while the bill was defeated by 134 to 161. Both the Reed and Cox substitutes with the amendments thereto were rejected after the bill was reported to the house. The Reed substitute authorizing the issue of coin bonds for the replenishment of the gold reserve and certificates of indebtedness to defray deficiencies in the revenues, was lost—109 to 187. It was a party vote, save for the fact that seven Democrats and Cannon of California voted for it.

Refused to Order to Third Reading.

When the question came up on the third reading and engrossment of the bill the whole opposition concentrated. While the vote was being taken which resulted in the refusal of the house to order the third reading the interest centered in the vote of Reed. He had sat quietly in his seat during the first call and did not answer to his name, but on the second call he voted for the bill. As soon as the result was announced Reed attempted to make an explanation of the attitude of himself and those of his colleagues who had voted for the bill, but objections were made.

Names of the Men Who Voted Aye.

Following are the names of those who voted for the third reading: Adams of Pennsylvania, Aldrich, Babcock, Baldwin, Barnes, Bartlett, Barwig, Beckner, Beltzhoover, Berry, Bingham, Boutelle, Brickner, Brosius, Bynum, Cadmus, Caminetti, Campbell, Caruth, Causey, Chickering. Clancy, Clark of Alabama, Cobb of Missouri, Coffin, Coombs, Cooper of Florida, Cooper of Indiana, Cornish, Covert, Crain, Dalzell, Daniels, Davy, Deforest, Dingley, Draper, Dunphy, Durborow, English of California, Erdman, Everett, Fielder, Fletcher, Forman, Gardner, Geary, Geisenhainer, Gillett of Massachusetts, Goldzier, Gorman, Gresham, Griffin of Michigan, Griffin of Wisconsin, Grout, Haines, Hall of Minnesota, Hammond, Harmer, Harrison, Haughen, Hayes, Hendrix, Henry, Hicks, Hines, Hooker of New York, Kiefer, Kribbs, Lapham, Lefevre, Lockwood, Lynch, Mahon. Marvin of New York. McAleer. McDannold, McGann, McKaig, Meyer, Montgomery, Mutchler, O'Neill of Massachusetts, O'Neill of Missouri, Outhwaite, Page, Paschal, Patterson, Payne, Pearson, Pendleton of West Virginia, Piggott, Powers, Quigg, Randall, Ray Reed, Reilly, Reyburn, Richards of Ohio, Ritchie, Russell of Connecticut, Ryan Schermerhorn, Scranton, Sickles, Sipe, Smith, Somers, Sorg, Sperry, Stevens, Stone, Charles W. Stone, William A. Stone of Kentucky, Storer, Straus, Talbott of Maryland, Tarsney, Turner of Georgia, Turner of Virginia, Turpin, Updegraff, Van Voorhis of New York, Wadsworth, Wagner, Warner, Washington, Wells, Wilson of West Virginia, Wise, Wolverton, Woomer, Wright. Total, 134.

Vote Clinched and Riveted.

Springer then moved to reconsider the vote by which the third reading was refused, but this motion was laid on the table—135 to 123—and the bill was killed, parliamentarily speaking. An analysis of the vote shows that forty-four Republicans and ninety Democrats voted for the bill, and fifty-six Republicans, ninety-seven Democrats and eight Populists voted against it.

DEBS GOES ON THE STAND.

Pullman Employes Struck Against His Advice—Wickes and the Managers.

CHICAGO, Feb. 7.—In the Debs trial a member of the Railway Managers' association was found who knew what Wickes did not do when he attended a meeting of the association. The witness was General Manager Chappell, of the Chicago and Alton. Wickes made no statement, and there was nothing in the nature of an agreement entered into with the Pullman company.

Eugene V. Debs was the next witness. He said the General Managers' association was organized before the A. R. U., which latter was intended to unite all railway employes in one organization. Twelve lodges were organized among the Pullman employes in April, 1893. He was about to go to Pullman to see if he could not prevent a strike, and the strike was entered upon contrary to his advice.

In speaking at the A. R. U. convention he had said that the Pullman company owned everything in the town—property and human beings—and that it was a worse state of slavery than that prevailing in the south before the war. He also said that the A. R. U. should give the Pullman employes every aid in its power. He gave the events of the strike as they have been published repeatedly.

Debs was on the stand all the afternoon. He was shown the famous "save your money and buy a gun" telegram, and said he had not sent or seen it until it had been sent out by one of the directors.

CHICAGO, Feb. 8.—Judge Grosscup has begun investigating the whereabouts of George M. Pullman. He had the porter of the Pullman building before him, but elicited little information, and will take it up again today. Eugene V. Debs was on the stand all day in the conspiracy trial and his examination was concluded. He declared that he knew none of the men who were guilty of overt acts and read his proclamations insisting on no violence. Cross-examination was then begun, Attorney Walker's object being to show that the great strike was not upon any grievance the railway employes had against their employers. The examination was at an end at adjournment.

ABDICATION OF LILIUOKALANI.

The Dusky Queen of Hawaii Gives Up the Fight—Conspiracy Trial.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 7.—The latest news from the Hawaiian Islands tells of the abdication in favor of the republic of Queen Liliuokalani. She has subscribed to an oath of allegiance and calls on all the islanders to be loyal to the republic. Her action is thought to be a move to obtain clemeney in her trial for treason. Papers have been found showing that she was in the conspiracy and that every arrangement had been made to reinstate her, even to the scleetion of a cabinet and the preparation of a new constitution.

Three of the conspirators have pleaded guilty—Wilcox, Bertellman and Nowlin—the latter of whom have turned state's evidence to save their necks. Thomas Poole, a carpenter, is the one charged with killing Carter. The trial has been concluded and the culprits await their doom, which from present appearances is likely to be death in several cases.

Among the papers of the queen were some that seemed to implicate Rudolph Spreckels, the son of the sugar king, in the supply of arms to the rebels, but the proof is not strong.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7—Minister Thurston read the account of the abdication of the ex-queen with close interest, but was evidently of the opinion that the abdication did not amount to anything. Other Hawaiian monarchs had done similar things. Besides Liliuokalani was of no consequence now any more than any other citizen of Hawaii; she had no power to abdicate, but her act might have some moral effect on the natives.

BLIZZARD BLOWING ITSELF OUT.

Brief Summary of Its Effects as Reported by the Lightning.

CHICAGO, Feb. 11.—The blizzard which has dominated nearly the whole country is slowly losing its grip. East the trains that have been snowed in are being dug out, and traffic is beginning to get the better of the drifts. Everywhere, however, the weather is still very cold. The Atlantic coast is ice-fringed for a long way out. New York harbor is only kept clear by continued work of tugs. The British steamer City of Wakefield has put in at Halifax, N. S., with her cotton cargo on fire after battling for nearly a week with the blaze in the teeth of the storm.

In Florida some people estimate the damage to oranges and other fruit and vegetables at $10,000,000 and talk of 95 per cent. of the orange trees being killed. The monitors at anchor in the James river below Richmond are frozen in. Vessels in distress on the Atlantic coast keep the life-savers in constant work. Birds, rabbits and chickens have been killed by the cold in Delaware. West there is no great loss of life reported yet, but there has been great suffering.

Three People Burned to Death.

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 11.—Three persons were burned to death here at different points in the city. The clothing of Forest McKenney, a lad, caught fire from the grate; Mrs. W. D. Brown, an aged lady, was burned in the same manner, and a child of J. C. Smith fell into a tub of boiling water.

FARM FIELD AND GARDEN

Potatoes In Succession.

There are other reasons besides the danger of propagating the potato disease why it is not best to plant potatoes two succeeding years on the same land. Explains American Cultivator: The great necessity for a large potato crop is an abundant supply of moisture in the soil. Nothing so well secures this as a clover ley plowed early enough in spring to get the advantage of late spring rains. It is true that when clover is allowed to grow in the spring there is a great mass of green herbage to be plowed under in late May or early June. But the moisture that is in the clover leaves has all been taken from the soil and much more, for the clover plant, with its broad leaves, exhales moisture rapidly, as any one who has plowed under a growth of clover in June well knows. Even as quickly as 48 hours after a very heavy rain heavy soil will often become hard to plow.

When clover is plowed so late, the soil often remains dry all the season if summer rains are light. The same cloverfield plowed in early spring will keep moist all summer. What clover there is rots quickly, and this keeps the soil loose, so that every rainfall sinks into it instead of running off. The soil where potatoes grew the year before either has better vegetable matter or the plowing is delayed so late for it to grow that much of its benefit for that year must be lost. This may prove to be one of the drawbacks to the advantages expected from sowing crimson clover to cover the soil in winter and be plowed under in spring for potatoes. There will be some profit, but it will not be as great as is commonly supposed.

Exhibit of Irrigation Machinery.

The exhibit of machinery for raising water made at the irrigation convention in Hutchinson, Kan., demonstrated that at least in the Arkansas bottoms a big ditch full of water can be provided without very expensive appliances. Pumps were there each throwing 4,000 gallons of water per minute. These were each driven by a common thrasher's engine There were also smaller machines doing proportionately heavy work. There were gasoline engines of several makes, all doing excellent work in the operation of pumps. Without doubt the use of these engines is to be greatly increased, where a supply of water is desired, without fail, at the time most needed, and where the quantity must be above the capacity of the windmill and below 10 or 15 horsepower. Windmills were there in great numbers and variety, and they received merited attention. The beginner at irrigation first thinks of the wind as the most desirable motive power, and there is no doubt about the practicability of irrigating considerable areas, and especially gardens, by the use of wind power.

The government report makes the average yield of potatoes 62.3 bushels. Last year the yield was 72.2. The quality is fair.

Any tendency to premature baldness may be promptly checked by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. Don't delay till the scalp is bare and the hair-roots destroyed. If you would realize the best results, begin at once with this invaluable preparation.

MISSING LA GASCOGNE

THE CAPTAIN OF THE UMBRIA IS NOT HOPELESS.

He Gives an Illustration That Contains Encouragement—A Vessel That Was Twenty-Six Days Making the Passage Under Sail with More Masts Than La Gascogne.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—The Cunarder Umbria, Captain Dutton, which sailed from Liverpool Feb. 2, reached quarantine Sunday. She brings no word of La Gascogne. When the monster ocean greyhound steamer passed quarantine her shrouds and part of her hull were covered with ice which glistened like myriads of diamonds. In fact she was encrusted with ice above the water line The vessel rescued the crew of the French bark Jean Baptiste—fourteen persons—en route. The weather was rough all the way across, but not more so than Captain Dutton had seen it hundreds of times.

Caught It Just Outside the Hook.

It was when just outside the Hook that the Umbria met the "weather," and from there to her station at quarantine is where she became ice-encrusted. Regarding La Gascogne her captain said: "I think she has broken down somewhere and that she will probably turn up. Where she may be now would be merest conjecture. I remember that about twelve years ago the City of Brussels broke down in mid-ocean and made port with her sails. She sailed into Liverpool and almost to her dock before sighted. She had for twenty-six days sailed so without sighting a vessel that could help her or that was near enough to recognize her and report seeing her.

Had a Couple of Masts to the Good.

"There was one thing in her favor, too, that La Gascogne has not. The City of Brussels had four masts for sails, while since La Gascogne has been remodeled she has but two. She would have hard work making any headway with them in the weather she must have encountered." The Atlantic Transport line steamer Manitoba, from London, and the Red Star line steamer Rhynland, from Antwerp, both of which have reached quarantine, reported having seen nothing of the over-due La Gascogne. Neither did either of these ships sight any wreckage during the voyage. Four or five other vessels which have been overdue have arrived at ports along the coast, but none have seen La Gascogne.

La Normandie is anchored outside the bar. She was boarded by representatives of the Associated Press and reports no news of La Gascogne.

DREADFUL FATE OF A CREW.

Six Men Slowly Freeze to Death or Drop Into the Sea.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—The life-saving crew from the Lone Hill station, on the Great South beach, opposite Eastport, L. I., were out at daybreak and down the beach in the teeth of the storm to make one more attempt to reach the men lashed and frozen in the rigging of an unknown wrecked schooner. When the life-savers had left previously seven men were still hanging in the rigging, one having dropped into the sea. As the icy wind had not abated and as the waves were washing over the grounded wreck, the life-savers left that the men surely must be dead. Captain Baker fixed his glass upon the ice-draped rigging of the wreck. The seven forms still hung there, not one having fallen during the night.

But three of the men were hanging head down. Evidently they had lashed their legs when they went up in the rigging to escape the fury of the deck. During the night they had died and the fingers relaxing the bodies had fallen, hanging by the knees. The life-savers tried to launch the lifeboat, but the shore ice made that effort vain. The life line was then fired into the rigging. There it hung with a certainty of life to those who would reach it, and it was within a few feet of each of the four upright figures. Soon the life-savers saw one of the men stirring. He painfully and slowly disentangled himself from the lashings and started over towards the line. He took a few steps downward, paused, hesitated, almost fell and climbed back to the surer supports he had left.

In few moments another man began to work himself loose and succeeding, set out in a slow, stiff fashion that was painful to see. He got a little farther down than the first man and then he, too, stopped. He almost lost his balance, regained his hold, remounted and wrapped himself in the cords of the rigging in the place he had left. The cannon was fired again, and again the line flew into the rigging near enough for either of the men to have reached it.

But neither of the two stirred this time. Captain Baker could see their eyes turned toward the shore, but their blackened faces were expressionless. The last line was fired about midday, and from that time until dark the life-savers, sheltered by the mounds of ice, watched and tried to think of some way of reaching the schooner. At dark they went back to their station again. The last gleam of day showed the seven figures still hanging, three head downward, four upright and with enough life in them to make the release from their horrible living tomb a matter of hours.

LATER.—The life-saving crew has managed to reach the wreck and saved two men—S. J. Nelson and William Stevens. All the others are dead.

CHINESE FLEET RUNS AWAY.

Japanese Capture Another Island at Wei-Hai-Wei—Severe Fighting.

LONDON, Feb. 9.—The Times publishes a dispatch from Shanghai stating that the island of Liu Kung Tao, in the harbor of Wei-Hai-Wei, was captured by the Japanese Thursday. The dispatch adds that the Chinese warship Ting Yuen was sunk by a torpedo and that the remainder of the fleet dashed seaward. The fate of the vessels that attempted to put to sea is not known. A dispatch to The Times from Wei-Hai-Wei says that the Japanese desired to attack the western forts and those distant two miles along the shore which was covered by the Chinese fleet.

The advance guard was compelled to make a toilsome march Feb. 1 during a snowstorm and a strong gale. The march was made by a circuitous route. Eventually the Chinese troops were met on the Che Foo road west of Wei-Hai-Wei and severe fighting took place. The Chinese were defeated and fled to Che Foo. The loss on the Japanese side was thirty killed and wounded.

Froze to Death on an Electric Car.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Feb. 11.—E. J. Tichenor was frozen to death here while a passenger on the Fifth avenue division of the Union electric road.

Swept Out to Certain Death.

MILWAUKEE, Feb. 8.—Three men from the intake crib perished in Lake Michigan. The names of the drowned are: Gustave Stoyner, Chicago; James Brown, Port Huron; Thomas Anderson, Milwaukee. They had just returned to the crib from shore with a load of provisions, and while they were landing the boat, without oars, was washed away with one of the men. Two of his companions tore doors from the crib and were also swept away on these in a heroic effort to save their unfortunate companion.

The tug Welcome has returned to the harbor without having discovered the missing men. She cruised up and down the lake for a distance of twenty miles from shore.

Wisconsin Farmers Get Together.

MADISON, Feb. 6.—The annual joint meeting of all the farmers' organizations in Wisconsin opened last evening. There was a great gathering of agricultrists, horticulturists, beekeepers, swine, sheep, horse, and cattle breeders and members of the legislature. Governor Upham gave the welcoming speech, and among other addresses was one by President Hubbard, of the State Agricultural society.

Adjournment.

European writers give to Freemasonry a fourfold religious foundation, as follows: (1) Emanation—one of the theories of the Gnostics, the uncreated fire, eternal source, and first matter, whence all beings have their origin. (2) Dualism—the basis of Manicheism. (3) Sabeism—fire-worship; and (4) Materialistic Pantheism. Sabeism, it is declared, is represented in the 23d and 24th degrees of the Scottish Rite. Summed up altogether, the religion of Freemasonry may be briefly called "devil-worship."

It is in the nature of humanity to oppose whatever seeks to thwart its dispositions, inclinations or desires. Hence we are not surprised to learn that when Bishop Moore, of the Roman Catholic diocese of Florida, threatened to excommunicate all Catholics who refused to leave the secret societies denounced in the papal decree, he was met with the answer from some, that they would rather leave the church than the lodge. There is a spirit of carnality in that response that will not brook priestly control. Christianity removes this carnality, and draws the man from the lodge by its gentle influences. This is the better way.

That is a very apt illustration in the Midland, which remarks that when a convict reaches the penitentiary he not only loses his personal liberty but his name, and is henceforth known only by a number; and then it compares to the convict the workingman who yields his private judgment and personal control to a secret union, and virtually becomes a machine known principally as a member of "No. So-and-so," and is ordered about unceremoniously by the power to whom he has surrendered his manhood and liberty. Sometimes the machine in the convict's garb has the best of it, for he is always clad and fed at regular hours and lives in a very orderly manner free. from the temptations of the outer world, with plenty of time to become a reformed man and a useful citizen.

We yield a large space in to-day's Cynosure to the interests of the approaching anti-secrecy convention of the Pennsylvania State Christian Association at Philadelphia. On this page we print the entire program of the several sessions, on the editorial page will be found the full official call for the convention by Pres. Collins, and on page 5 appears a comprehensive and interesting letter from Rev. W. B. Stoddard, the indefatigable and successful organizer of this and former State conventions. For all of these we ask a careful reading. We find much in them of encouragement for the success of our cause. We also note with gratification, in the program, the name of Rev. E. D. Bailey, of Washington, D. C., our old-time co-worker, who has not appeared on the platform in our behalf for several years. He will be greeted with enthusiasm and heard with pleasure. Another prominent speaker will be Rev. F. W. Farr (our able New York correspondent), Secretary of the Missionary Alliance, with several others whose names we need not here repeat, but who will be welcome participants in the exercises. The attendance promises to be large, and the results, with the divine help, will be far-reaching and effective against the lodge evil.

Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald, in the Methodist Review, has a strong argument against secret societies. As we purpose to reprint the entire article, we must content ourselves, just now, with reproducing one or two paragraphs, which will serve to indicate the bishop's position: "Is Christianity," he asks, "the religion that emphasizes the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, to continue to exhibit to the world the shameful paradox of a social organism honeycombed throughout all its parts by secret organizations isolated from others, and often warring against each other?" Of the A. P. A. he says: "Though ostensibly originating in zeal for Protestantism, it seems to many to be a renunciation of Protetantism—the true Protestantism that stands for an open Bible and an open ballot. It is a stab at Protestantism in its fundamental principles." There is much food for thought in these two paragraphs.

If the Bible is true, there are fearful judgments awaiting those churches, ministers and religious editors who hesitate to declare the whole counsel of God when rebuking sin. We have before us a copy of the professed organ of a prominent so-called Christian (Protestant) denomination, in which a leading editorial article appears, showing the vast disproportion between male and female members in the various Christian churches, and attempting to explain the reason. It enumerates the absence of so many young men from the services of the church as one cause; but it does not tell us that the lodge, rather than the church which tolerates the lodge, has got its grip upon these young men. It deplores the universal worldly-mindedness that prevails among church-goers. It complains that club-life draws men away from the church, but says not a word against the secret societies that foster worldliness and promote club-life. Then, having found so many outside reasons for the alleged disproportion, it goes on to say that the church has lost spiritual power; the pulpit has adopted human rather than Gospel themes for its discourses, and run to sensational methods; doubt has come into the minds of the male members, but the women remain firm to the truths of the Bible. Let us thank God for that. Then it winds up the article by suggesting, as a remedy, that the churches return to Christianity—Christian preaching, Christian work, Christian fellowship, and the principles and practices of the apostolic church. That is good advice, surely; but not until the churches of to-day cast out the secret societies and their paganism, will Christ acknowledge their pastors as faithful watchmen on the walls of Zion, or as worthy successors of the apostles?

THE TWO RELIGIONS OF THE BIBLE.

BY REV. C. POWERS.

[Contniued from the Cynosure of January 24, 1895.]

PAUL'S ADMONITION.

Let the reader carefully consider the following quotations: "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. For it is a shame even to speak of the things that are done of them in secret." Eph. 5:11, 12.

Consider, also, the evidence that this sacred Scripture refers directly to the secret and false religion that we are considering.

The learned Dr. Clarke is endorsed by thousands, and these of various denominations. His luminous commentary on the Scriptures is held as second to none extant. Even that celebrated Baptist clergyman, Chas. H. Spurgeon, of London, called him the "prince of commentators." The following are from his comments on the passage referred to:

DR. CLARKE'S COMMENT.

"Have no fellowship"—have no religious connection whatever with heathen or their worship. "Unfruitful works of darkness." Probably alluding to the mysteries among the heathen, and the different lustrations and rites through which the initiated went in the caves and dark recesses, where their mysteries were celebrated; all which he denominates works of darkness, because they were destitute of true wisdom, and unfruitful works, because they were of no use to mankind, the initiated being obliged, on pain of death, to keep secret what they had seen, heard and done. Hence they were called the unspeakable mysteries, things that were not to be divulged. . . . "But rather reprove them." Bear testimony against them; convince them that they are wrong; confute them in their vain reasons; refute them for their vices, which are flagrant while pretending to superior illumination. "For it is a shame even to speak of those things that are done of them in secret." This no doubt refers to the Eleusinian and Bacchanalian mysteries which were performed in the night and darkness, and were known to be so impure and abominable, especially the latter, that the Roman senate banished them both from Rome and Italy. Dr. Clarke goes on to say: How the discovery of these traps of Satan were made, and the whole proceeding in the case, may be seen in Livy's History, chapters 8 to 19, where the reader will see the force of what the apostle says here. It is a shame even to speak of the things that are done of them in secret, the abomination being of the most stupendous kind and of the deepest dye.

On the 13th verse: "But all things that are reproved are made manifest by the light; for whatsoever doth make manifest is light," he quotes, and thus endorses another learned commentator as follows: Dr. Macknight paraphrases this verse as follows: "Now all these reprovable actions which are practiced in celebrating the mysteries are made manifest as sinful by the Gospel; and seeing everything that discovers the true nature of actions is light, the Gospel which discovers the evil nature of actions performed in the mysteries, is light."

THESE THINGS BEING TRUE,

we are most emphatically warranted in using the Gospel to make manifest the iniquities of the secret lodge system, especially as works of darkness of the same general character are practiced all around us. "Have no fellowship with them, but reprove them," applies as really to circumstances of the present as to those in Paul's time. "But reprove them," says Paul. And Dr. Clarke says: "Bear a testimony against them; convince them that they are wrong," etc. This is just what we are endeavoring to do. This is what the National Christian Association has been doing for twenty-seven years past; and, under God, many have been convinced of their error and left their lodge associations, persuaded that they are anti-Christ in character and influence. As to the identity of the iniquity of with that to which Paul refers, look at the following evidence:

THE PRESENT MASONIC RELIGION,

First, the abominable things that Paul referred to in that passage were the Eleusinian and Bacchanalian mysteries.

Second, put alongside of this the information that we get directly from Masonic authors in high authority among Masons.

In Sickels' Ahiman Rezon, page 64, he says: "The rite of illumination is a very ancient ceremony, and constituted in all the mysteries of the early ages. In the Egyptian, Cabirian, Sidonian, Eleusinian, Scandinavian, and Druidical rituals, it held a prominent place, and in them all represented the same ideas."

So much is proof that the Eleusinian mysteries of Paul's time are all one in general character and significance with the "rite of illumination "in Masonic symbolism.

A MASONIC MANSLAUGHTER REVIEWED.

OUTLINE OF AN ADDRESS DELIVERED BEFORE THE OHIO STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION, AT XENIA, JANUARY 28 AND 29, 1895,

BY REV. I. J. ROSENBERGER.

[Mr. Rosenberger took for his subject: Lessons from the killing of Rev. J. W. Johnston in a Masonic lodge-room.]

The subject of this notice, pastor of the M. E. church at Huntingdon, W. Va., was brought to his sad and untimely death, on the night of January 10, 1890, in taking the Masonic Royal Arch degree. One feature of the ritual occurs in what is known as the dark room, in the centre of which is a trap-door that opens into a dark vault, or shaft, thirteen feet deep. At the ceiling above this trap-door is a hook, to which is attached a rope and pulleys; fastened to this rope is a short stick. The stick is straddled by the candidate, as he is lowered into this dark vault. The shaft represents the ruins of Solomon's temple; and the candidate is in search of a treasure. He finds a small box in one corner, a type of the Ark of the Covenant. Mr. Johnston fell while being lowered into this shaft. From injuries received in the fall, he died in a few hours, amid intense suffering.

No doubt but there are those who scout the correctness of the foregoing statement. I met a minister in Kentucky, who flatly denied the whole affair. Any person may lie, but knowing as I do that Masons are sworn to lie, his denial did not surprise me.

I affirm the statement to be true in every particular, because: 1. Its publicity in leading papers, giving name, place and date. 2. A Mason who was an eye-witness to the tragedy related the accident to one of the business men in our town. 3. One of our brethren who had taken the Royal Arch degree said to me, "It could easily happen."

We shall find a parallel of our subject in the words of Christ: "Remember Lot's wife." I therefore bid you remember the sad, sad death of Mr. Johnston. In the pulpit we would term our subject, "revelation by character."

1. Many of the rites of admission and taking of the different degrees endanger life. (a) The case before us is a proof. (b) In the same number of the Cincinnati Enquirer which relates the sad story of Mr. Johnston's death, Col. Enoch T. Carson, of Cincinnati, of Cincinnati, a high Mason, is quoted as stating that he has known of a number of deaths in taking the different degrees. (c) From the Cincinnati Enquirer of May 12, 1892, we quote an occurrence as follows: "John Ceiger sued Court Valley Forge, No. 169, I. O. F., Chicago, for $25,000 damage; in being made a Forester he was compelled to jump into a supposed lake of fire, but unexpectedly landed on a floor, and broke his leg in three places." How shocking to our senses! How revolting to reason!

2. Masons do not take Christ into their service; hence there is no Christ in the chaplain's prayer, nor in their songs on that sad night of January 10, 1890. As Christ is an invited guest only, it appears very much as if there was no Christ there; and from the fact that "whosoever denieth the Son hath not the Father," and "he that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father," it is pretty safe to conclude that there was not only no Christ, but no God present when Mr. Johnston fell into that dark, yawning chasm. What a dark and gloomy cloud looms up at this juncture, through which to pass to that awful eternity! No Christ, no God! How lonely!

But they tell us that they address their prayers to God. We will let Christ explain: "Verily, verily I say unto you, whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name, he will give it." Our petitions, songs and prayers can alone reach the Father through Christ. There is no other channel. Hence those prayers were of no avail.

3. "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ," is a divine teaching; but oh, how it was violated on that sad, sad night! 1. That meeting was not in the name of Christ, hence was Christless and Godless. 2. He was taking upon him an unknown obligation, which was a sin under the law; see Lev. 5: 4, 5; and is an equal sin under the Gospel. 3. The obligation of the Royal Arch degree is one to make us shudder; besides, it is taken by an oath in open violation of Matthew 5 and James 5.

Be it further remembered that "whoso transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God." This lends further aid to the dismal thought—no Christ, no God.

4. The fact that most of the admission ceremonies of secret orders, and the higher degrees, are taken either in dark rooms, or blindfolded, or both, does not lend enchantment to our dark picture. At the time of the accident, Mr. Johnston was being lowered into a dark, sunless shaft. "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." "Christ is the light of the world." Yet some men love darkness, seek darkness, and the Scriptures explain, "because their deeds are evil."

5. When Mr. Johnston fell, he was seized with deep, agonizing pains, upon which he doubtless raised his trembling voice in prayer. Yet to whom could he direct that prayer? for neither Christ nor God was there. This looks like a repetition of the days of Elijah, when those four hundred prophets raised their fruitless cries to Baal. This matter seems to sum up thus: The opening service of the lodge, that night, was in violation of the law of Christ and of God. While Mr. Johnston lay for two long hours upon a stretcher in the lodge-room, prayers, humble, pleading prayers to Christ, would seem to have been very proper; but if such prayers were offered they were in violation of his Masonic obligations. To be confronted with such opposing obligations, as we approach death's door, is surely deplorable. How true: "No man can serve two masters."

We close with

A WARNING TO THE READER.

All persons should act with dignity in their calling; especially a minister who is designed to be "an ensample to his flock." For considerate men, even ministers of the Gospel, to stoop to some of the low, ridiculous ceremonies and rites of the lodge is difficult to reconcile with good reason and ordinary intelligence. It is well-known that many of the rites of admission and advancement occasion much indecent sport and ridiculous merriment; all at the expense of the blinded and blindfolded candidates. Think of a minister, a divine, a leader of the people, stooping to such meaningless ceremonies, whose spirit and influence are so contrary to the pure principles of our holy Christianity!

What must have been the feeling of that congregation in considering the cause of their pastor's death?

We usually take pleasure in visiting the spot, the scene where our friends engaged their last effort in their toil. If Mr. Johnston's friends are allowed to do so in this case, to where will they come? To a dark, yawning chasm, in a Christless lodge-room. The longer we dwell upon this picture, the darker and more pitiful and more sad it becomes.

SELECTIONS.

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR MINISTERS.

Briefly it is this: to spend the month of April in Chicago, with the Bible Institute as headquarters, for a special course in the English Bible, and a study of the various methods of personal work, as applied in the multiform missionary activities of that great city.

The month of April has been selected for this conference as a time when many ministers might arrange to be absent from their work without serious detriment thereto. In many country places the roads are usually in bad condition at that time of year, and little parish work can be done. For city ministers, a change and season for Bible study, after the special meetings of the winter, would be a great boon, and would be the means in many cases of putting new vigor into the entire summer campaign.

The inducements in the line of study are as follows: The regular work of the Institute will be carried on as usual. This will consist of (a.) A study of Old Testament prophecy, with the books of Isaiah and Jeremiah as a basis, under the direction of Prof. W. W. White, at 9 A. M. (b.) A course in the Acts and Epistles, under the same teacher, at 10 A. M. (c.) An analytical study of the first Epistle of John, by Supt. R. A. Torrey, at 11 A. M. (d.) Prof. D. B. Towner, Superintendent of the Musical Department, holds classes at 10 and 11. A. M. Visitors will be welcome to all these exercises. They will be held daily, except Sunday and Monday (which is rest day at the Institute).

The special course will occupy two hours in the afternoon, from Tuesday to Saturday inclusive. Mr. Torrey will speak at 2 o'clock on the great fundamental doctrines of the Bible, such as Regeneration, Sanctification, Justification, the Holy Spirit, etc. Prof. White will give a book study at 3 o'clock each day. Ten studies will be taken from the prophetic literature of the Old Testament, and ten from the New Testament.

The evenings, so far as desired, may be spent in studying the various missionary activities of the city. Chicago, with its large and miscellaneous population, its many successful missions, its active churches, able pastors and successful Christian workers, its large and ably-officered Y. M. C. A., and the rapidly extending operations of the Bible Institute, is unsurpassed as a place in which to study methods of Christian work, in all its varied forms.

If desired by those who attend, a series of conferences may be arranged on subjects relating to church and pastoral duties.

The total expense of this course, including room and board, has been placed at $5.00 a week. This is, without question, exceptionally reasonable, as the Institute is located in the very heart of Chicago. The wives of ministers will be welcome on same terms with their husbands. To these the work of the Women's Department will be of great interest.

We will be glad to send a catalogue of the Bible Institute, and also a special circular, to those desiring further information. Address: The Bible Institute, 80 Institute Place, Chicago.

Yours in the work, D. L. MOODY.

MASONIC SLANDERS OF GEO. WASHINGTON.

The recurrence of the anniversary of the birth of George Washington affords another opportunity for Freemasons to eulogize him as the Master of a Masonic lodge, and to repeat the story that he, as a Worshipful Grand Master, laid the corner-stone of the Capitol at Washington.

The corner-stone of the Capitol was laid September 18, 1793. In his letter to Rev. Mr. Snyder, September 25, 1798, Washington wrote that he had not been in a Masonic lodge more than once or twice in thirty years, and that he did not preside over any English lodge in this country. On the 14th of February, 1781, a committee of "King David's (Masonic) Lodge," of Newport, R. I., reported that "on inquiry they find General Washington not to be Grand Master of North America, as was supposed, nor even Master of any particular lodge. They are therefore of opinion that this lodge would not choose to address him as a private brother; at the same time (we) think it would not be agreeable to our worthy brother to be addressed as such."

Gov. Trumbull, when Aid to Gen. Washington, asked his advice as to becoming a Mason. He replied "that Masonry was a benevolent institution, which might be employed for the best or worst purposes; but that for the most part it was merely child's play, and he could not give him any advice on the subject."

The description in the printed accounts of that day respecting the ceremony of laying the corner-stone of the Capitol at Washington appears very minute in all other respects, but says nothing about Washington's wearing the Masonic sash and apron, or of his having applied the square, level and plumb to the stone—such was the Grand Master's duty—pronouncing it well-squared, etc., or of his placing on the stone the elements of the consecration—the corn, wine and oil, as is the custom of other Grand Masters in such cases.

In view of all these facts, how is it possible for anyone to believe that Washington laid the corner-stone of the Capitol of the United States in the disgusting formalities of Masonry; or that he would, when President of the United States, in the habiliments of Masonry, suffer himself to be made such a spectacle?—Henry Gassett, of Boston, 1852.

A JUNIOR JESUIT ORGANIZATION.

In San Francisco, Portland (Ore.), Denver, Omaha, St. Louis, Detroit, Chicago, and almost every large city in the West, there are thousands of members of an organization but little known in the Eastern cities, though they may be working more secretly in the East. It is composed exclusively of members of the Roman Catholic church, and a candidate for membership must produce a certificate from a priest showing that he has been to confession and taken communion during the thirty days preceding.

A Louisville paper prints the following: "The latest order of lay Jesuits is the Y. M. I. (Young Men's Institute), club, but in fact an armed military organization, under control of the Pope of Rome. Every parish in the land is to have one company, under orders of the priest; these companies are organized in battalions under control of the Vicar-General of the Bishopric. Thus it is calculated that an army of a half million can be called out on a few hours' notice by the Vicar-General, or by the Commander-in-Chief Satolli, Vice Pope and Supreme Lord of the United States."

The Pope claims the power to dispose of any Protestant country as he may please. He has given the United States into the hands of Satolli, an Italian. Satolli is organizing his army in every parish. All Catholics, between the ages of 16 and 20, unless they already belong to some military organization, such as the Roman Knights of St. John, must enroll in some company of the Y. M. I.

In Louisville there are eight councils, the largest of which has a membership of 200. The total membership in all councils of the city is 800, though they claim more than double that strength.

The Y. M. I. takes an obligation: 1. To support the Pope and church in preference to the state and its laws; "we are Catholics first and citizens next." 2. To not trade with Protestants. 3. To not employ Protestants. 4. Where a Catholic and a Protestant are running for the same office, to vote for the Catholic, no matter what he represents. 5. To take part in all primaries and elections, and strive to get Catholics in all offices.—United American.

"The Society of Jesuits," wrote Bishop A. Cleveland Coxe (Protestant) to Monsignor Satolli, "is not a church but a conspiracy. While this conspiracy is permitted to assail the dearest rights of Americans, there can be no peace or harmony or good neighborhood among us. Subject them to law or expel the whole 'society.' I am writing these letters to you, Monsignor, as an American citizen to a political emissary, the instrument of Jesuitism to subordinate our entire government to Jesuit supremacy in the States. You are put forward, while they keep out of sight. 'To devour widows' houses,' and drain our national and local treasuries to their own channels and insatiable jaws—this is Jesuitism."

"I do now renounce and disown any allegiance as due to any heretical king, prince or state, named Protestant or Liberals, or obedience to any of their laws or magistrates or officers.

"I do further declare the doctrine of the churches of England and Scotland, and of the Calvinists, Huguenots, and others of the name of Protestant or Liberals, to be damnable, and they themselves to be damned who will not forsake the same.

"I do further declare that I will help, assist and advise all or any of his holiness' agents, in any place wherever I shall be, in Switzerland, Germany, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, England, Ireland, or America, or in any other kingdom or territory I shall come to, and do my utmost to extirpate the heretical Protestant or liberal doctrines and to destroy all their pretended powers, regal or otherwise."—From the Jesuits' Oath.

THE LODGE EVIL—PRESS OPINIONS.

Notwithstanding the fact that every candidate for admission to the lodge declares that he is uninfluenced by mercenary motives, yet one prominent in the order says: "We dislike to find that Masonry for revenue only is growing upon the craft."—The Midland.

As a connection we have sister churches in South Carolina without a place of worship. Ostracised by the secret societies and the dominant sects, they are practically shut out of the public buildings, and can only meet in the groves and private houses.—Associate Reformed Presbyterian, Due West, S. C.

Labor organizations may be beneficial for mutual improvement, advancing knowledge, influencing the employer, and appealing to the courts; yet as commonly operated by unscrupulous men, impose rigid obligations upon members, and arise into a menace to civil government; they are pernicious, and are to be shunned by loyal citizens and faithful Christians. Men are found at the head of such organizations who neither fear God nor regard men; but use their power blindly, rushing the members into defeat and misery. In the organization the laborer loses his manly independence, and is liable to be plunged at any time into a condition of idleness and wretchedness by irresponsible leaders.—Christian Nation.

The anti-secrecy movement is neither dead nor dying. In our own synod the work goes on quietly, yet surely. Recently a young man quit the K. P. lodge and publicly confessed Christ, uniting with one of our congregations. By this influence another young man, a member of the church, who had been a member of the order, withdrew from the order and now again is a full member of the church. One of our young missionaries in the West is working hard to build up his little congregation, but is just as determined not to build up the walls of Zion with the rotten stones of secretists. He recently succeeded in reclaiming one who had been an Odd-fellow. These are only a few examples. There are undoubtedly many similar cases.—Lutheran Standard.

Secret orders for the most part boast of their charity. But to whom does their charity extend? To those who pay in their money. The member who becomes delinquent in dues forfeits all claims upon lodge charity. All the charity that comes from the secret order is the charity that has been paid for; it is simply the result of monetary agreement. Such charity fails when by chance the money conditions fail. But true "charity never faileth." It "suffereth long and is kind;" "it envieth not;" "it vaunteth not itself," and "is not puffed up." This kind of charity cometh only of faith in Jesus Christ, and is manifested in obedience to the law of God: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart . . . . and thy neighbor as thyself."—Signs of the Times.

The battle with secret societies is on and should be pushed fearlessly and with vigor. Conventions are being held here and there and should have their influence. But there is an individual buttonhole work that must be done both before and after the conventions. The influence of the convention should be sustained and multiplied many fold by its members taking up the work in communities. The enemy's works are great and large and fortified by selfishness and vanity at every point, and it won't do to depend on little pop-gun conventions to demolish them at once. The great mortars in the army scatter their shells, and these in turn are filled with explosives, each one doing its work for the overthrow of the enemy. So these pop-gun conventions may become heavy mortars if every individual becomes an explosive, or to use another more agreeable figure, if every one becomes a light to dispel the gloomy shades that enshroud the mystic shrine. Multitudes of noble young men and women are being led into the meshes of this voracious devourer. They ought to be warned and saved, if possible, from falling into the temptation for gain or other selfish end, to foreswear themselves by taking the oath or pledge to conceal something yet to be made known to them.

It is verily believed that many of the greatest evils that afflict our land had their origin from or are supported in large measure by secret orders. And it is becoming more and more apparent that these orders are a menace to the stability of our government. — Rev. J. A Collins, in the Christian Instructor.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST AGENT.

CANBY, Ore., Feb. 12, 1895.

After a very enjoyable day at Oakville, I came to Salem, assisting a few nights in a meeting at the United Brethren church. A very deep interest was manifested by the unsaved, but they lack courage to follow their convictions. Here, I find Rev. H. F. Barkley, D. D , in the Oregon Legislature. His presence is being felt as an anti-Dolph and anti-monopoly leader. Mr. B. has so deported himself as to make him many friends throughout the State.

From Salem I went to Portland. Here I found Bishop Dillon assisting the pastor in a series of meetings. Quite a revival spirit is manifest. A number have been converted, and ten have united with the church. The bishop is a faithful worker. Our pastor at Portland is true to the principles of our reform. Some lodge men have professed conversion and think the church should give up its time-honored principles just to accommodate them. The church, of course, is of a different opinion.

Bishop Dillon dedicated the new church Sunday, February 10. He secured all the indebtedness. This shows what a struggling missionary church can do.

I put in a little time here, arranging appointments for lectures in the future. Then I came to Canby, to assist the faithful, and help others into the light, if possible.

I find here a sentiment against the lodge that will not down. Many have modified their views on the subject, through the A. P. A., the new pastor of the M. E church having gone into the order. Some of his members will not follow, and some are so disgusted that they will leave the church on account of it. The presiding elder has taken it on himself to send word up to some of the members, that "if you want to be on the right side, join the A. P. A."

What a pity!

We will see the outcome of this.

THE PENNSYLVANIA ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

SEE THE OFFICIAL CALL ON PAGE 8, AND THE PROGRAM ON PAGE 1.

457 N. 6TH ST , PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 14, 1895.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Time hastens us toward the convention to be held here. I am endeavoring to ring the bell, and the friends are coming. Indeed, so much is the interest manifest that it BEGINS TO LOOK LIKE A POPULAR UPRISING.

Those who attended the convention last year all seem anxious for another, and, of course, they will bring their friends with them. Nearly all whom I have asked to speak have said "yes." Look at the crowded program which I send you herewith. I have endeavored to enlist new speakers. There are but few of the sixteen who took part last year.

THE LEXOW COMMITTEE has come to Philadelphia, to investigate and bring to the sunlight the hidden things of darkness. This seems to be the order of the day. The best papers say,

'WHAT LIGHT HAVE YOU?"

Even some of the high-fed popularity preachers are beginning to question the propriety of being sworn brothers with drunkards, gamblers and crooks generally. May not this convention be just in time to carry forward this rising sentiment, so that the dark, damp pits within the Masonic temple shall be filled up, and never again take the lives of preachers who are hung suspended in darkness over them, as was Rev. Mr. Johnston, of Huntington, W. Va.? What may we not accomplish if we go forward depending on the assistance and manifest power of our God!

THIS IS NO TIME FOR SLEEPING.

Let the children of the day awake to action. Let every one in the State who cannot come, pray and write and contribute. Some grand letters have already come, but little money. I know it is "hard times," but the saloons still receive tribute. You and I have the blessed opportunity of being co-workers together with Him in this matter.

Programs will be mailed at once on application.

THE SPEAKERS

will need to be brief, not running over the time assigned. Come, loaded with arguments, concise, to the point, and, above all, filled with the divine Spirit. We trust no spirit other than the divine may appear, unless it be to show the folly of this thing of darkness some would maintain.

NOTE THE OPEN PARLIAMENT

for five minute speeches. We hope many may improve the opportunity to bear testimony.

I plan (D. V.) to run up to Quakertown and speak on Sabbath, in the country church of which Rev. A. B. Shelly is pastor. Many are coming from that part of the State.

AWAKE—COME!

I took a run up to Royersford, Spring City and Oaks. Found friends planning to come from there. How about Reading? How many will come with Bro. Morrison? How many are coming from Emaus? Sister Backenstoe, please find out how many are coming from your town. I am sure Bethlehem and Allentown and Coopersburg will want to be represented.

ENTERTAINMENT.

I will not take up space to tell of those who have written and who are coming. Friends will see them when they get here. If you desire arrangements for your entertainment, write at once. Several friends have promised to help in this regard, and others will. The program will tell the rest of the story, and I will stop.

W. B STODDARD.

TURN ON THE LIGHT.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., Feb. 12, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The largest church in our city was recently crowded at a union meeting, on Sabbath evening. The meeting was called to advocate the Nicholson bill, a Republican measure, very similar to the Mulct saloon-law in Iowa.

The bill has passed the lower house of the legislature, and is now before the Senate. It proposes to have the saloons of Indiana run on the ground-floor, and without window-blinds and screens. All of the pastors and several of the professors of the University made speeches lauding the bill. It is named "An act to better regulate and restrict the saloon." It seems difficult to harmonize this with Christ's method. He came, as the apostle said, not to regulate or restrict, but "to destroy the works of the devil." The Bible says: "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink," and "Woe unto him that buildeth a town with blood, and establisheth a city by iniquity;" "look not upon the wine whan it is red," etc. But the Nicholson bill implies that you may do all this, provided your saloon is on the ground floor, and has no blinds on its windows.

The best speech in favor of the bill was by Prof. Geo. E. Fellows. He emphasized the value of that feature which compelled the saloons to remove their blinds and screens. He said, if the light was thus turned on, so that the public could see all that was done inside the saloon, and who were its patrons, it would make it much less harmful, and deprive it of a large class of its customers. Many would never be seen inside if the public could see them. Nothing, he said, will prevent crime like turning on the light. Criminals shun the light and resort to the shade of darkness and concealment. He that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. The experiment of preventing crime, he said, by turning on the light, had been tried successfully in some European cities. In Glasgow, Scotland, they had placed powerful electric lights in all the dark courts and alleys and narrow cross-streets, and the result was a great decrease in crime. Men will rarely commit crime in the light of day, or under the glare of an electric light.

Of course, the Cynosure readers will sympathize intensely with this argument, and apply it, as I did, to other institutions besides the saloon.

Is it not true that every legitimate, honorable business courts the light? The store, the shop, the office, the mill, the school, the church, do not want blinded windows and screens. The two institutions that cannot bear the light of public investigation are the saloon and the lodge. I wondered, while the professor was talking, if he did not think that there were not only five saloons in Bloomington that needed to have their blinds and screens removed, but there were also twenty-five secret lodges, with blinded windows and tyled doors, and all upon upper floors. In these lodge-rooms were often gathered, at the midnight hour, when honest, sober citizens were asleep, selfish, designing men and women, plotting and scheming in their own selfish interests, and reveling in heathen ceremonies, which they would not dare to engage in if the eyes of the public were upon them. Did the professor not know that there were in our city a dozen secret college fraternity halls, with doors and windows likewise tyled and blinded, where male and female students often spend the midnight hours in dancing and revelry, taking liberties with each other which they would not dare to take if they were under the public eye? If these secret lodges were compelled to meet on the ground floor, and remove their blinds, so that the public could see what was done inside, it would contribute much more to the cause of morality than this law applied to the saloon. But the saloons could better run without blinds and screens than the lodges. M. A. GAULT.

NEW HAMPSHIRE NOTES.

One strong support of Odd-fellowship has been the life-insurance annex. At first the cost was only about $8 a year for a $1,000 death-benefit, that the "widow's heart might leap for joy." The cost in the Strafford Relief gradually went up to over $30 a year, and the membership decreased until only 400 are left. Now a meeting is called, with a view to dissolve the concern. No doubt it will be done.

The working of this, one of the best secret lodge insurance companies, can be seen by a single instance. I met a sick soldier who got a pension of $4 per month. He belonged to the Odd-fellows and the Strafford Relief. He got from the local lodge a sick benefit of ten cents a week, and from the encampment five cents a week, amounting to $7 80 a year. His lodge dues and insurance cost him over $30 a year. So he had to take his small United States pension to pay his lodge dues, while his wife went out scrubbing to support the family. Now this poor man, after distressing himself for years and paying hundreds of dollars into the lodge, is likely to lose his insurance and all he has paid in. This is lodge wisdom, lodge charity. An honest, temperate, well man stands no fair chance in any life insurance company, much less in a secret lodge annex. He is "unequally yoked" with bummers, drunkards and swindlers. He cannot possibly guard against their tricks. The secret lodge is a fraud from base to turret. S. C. KIMBALL.

REV. WM. FENTON AND DR. CARSON.

ST PAUL, Minn., Feb. 9, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The lecture of last evening, which you advertised in the Cynosure, was well attended. One Mason, upon seeing the real character of his "school of piety" exposed, left the church in an angry mood. May the goodness of God lead him to repentance.

Dr. Carson, in his letter published in the Cynosure of the 7th inst., stated that he was Grand Orator of Scotch Rite Masonry, and not Grand Lecturer, as printed in the Cynosure.

In Scotch Rite Masonry, twenty-eighth degree, called "Philosophical Lodge," or "Key of Masonry," or "Knights of the Sun," the penalty, as given by Rev. Dr. Dalcho, 33d degree, and published to the world by the celebrated convention of 8,000 citizens held at Le Roy, N. Y., in 1828, and more recently published, and confirmed, by a 33d degree Mason, is, for violating the obligation of that degree: "May my brother seize me and thrust my tongue through with a red-hot iron, to pluck out my eyes and deprive me of smelling and seeing, to cut off my hands and expose me in that condition in the field, to be devoured by voracious animals; and if none can be found, may the lightning of heaven execute on me the same vengeance." In the other degrees of that rite the penalties are of a similar character to those just named. In the first three degrees the penalties are—"throat cut," "tongue torn out," "body severed in twain," "bowels burned to ashes." Such are some of the penalties that bind so-called 'Christian gentlemen" to Freemasonry. But if it be a criminal act to condone crime, what an awful crime it must be to call a Freemason a Christian! And if we hold our peace, will not these Freemasons rebuke us when their eyes are opened at the Judgement day?

Probably it will not be many decades of years before such churches as Dr. Carson's will throw off the masks of Christ, and silence and secrecy (the watchwords of secretism), and follow their brethren in the open worship of the Freemason's god as he is now worshiped in two temples in Paris, in which the worship is strictly in line with Masonry,—none but Masons being admitted to that peculiar form of Masonic devil-worship.

Dr. Carson, as it appears in his letter published in the Cynosure of the 7th inst., takes my opposition to Masonry, in connection with his endorsement of Masonry, as a personal attack upon himself. Now the hidden mysteries of Scotch Rite Masonry prove it is a false religion while it pretends to be a way of salvation; and in its system of false worship, in the third degree for instance, it degrades Jesus Christ beneath the dignity of the devil. But if in explaining to candidates the mysteries of Masonry, after the candidate has taken the degrees in Masonic mysteries, as the duties of an Orator require, Dr. Carson thinks that he has been doing the truth, let him come to the light with it in obedience to Him whom he is paid to serve in the pulpit, who said of himself, concerning his doctrine: "In secret have I said nothing;" "I spake openly to the world;" and who enunciated the plain and just principle: "He that doeth the truth cometh to the light, that his works may be manifest that they have been wrought in God;" and not compel God to make "a hole in the wall" for his people to look through in order that they may say the "Amen" that he commands all the people to say to his curse upon the abomination unto the Lord in a secret place. See Deuteronomy 27: 15. William Fenton

P. S.—Rev. O. T. Lee is right in regard to the nativity of Senator Nelson; the Senator is Norwegian.

NOTES FROM THE NEBRASKA CONVENTION.

Though the State Convention met in a city of only about 1500 inhabitants, yet Humboldt is the centre of a large agricultural trade. More than one hundred teams from the country were hitched around the public square on the Saturday of the convention.

There are five churches, two saloons, and we were told that there were fifteen secret lodges. The Humboldt press advertise one or more lodge meetings for every night in the week, except Sunday. The pastor of the Presbyterian church said that his attention to the evil of the lodge system was first awakened by the knowledge that some of his members preferred lodge-meetings to prayer-meetings.

Very few meetings setting forth the effect of secret societies upon the home, the church and state have ever been held which affected the community more deeply, in so short a time, than those held in Humboldt. There were some nine addresses, besides the testimonies. The 10 o'clock meeting, Monday morning, opened with some forty-five men present, besides women and children, and it was the general testimony that quite a number attended these meetings who were seldom seen at a religious meeting. One man, it was said, had not been in church for twenty years.

There were at least 300 men at the Monday night meeting, a greater number than could have been accommodated in the Methodist church. The Methodist people were very friendly and much in sympathy with the meetings, the trustee who providentially made the disturbance that led us to go to the Opera House being an exception among the members. It is said that he seldom if ever attends the prayer-meetings of his church.

During the early portion of the meetings in the Methodist church, a vote was taken by show of hands as to those who were in sympathy with the objects of the Nebraska Anti-secrecy Association, and about three-fourths of the audience raised their hands. In a much smaller meeting, the next morning, the signatures of those present who were willing to join the association were asked to the following paper:

"We, the undersigned, believing that secret societies are unnecessary and capable of being used for evil purposes, enroll ourselves as members of the Nebraska Christian Association, auxiliary to the National Christian Association, opposed to secret societies."

Two of the three resident ministers present signed the paper, as well as a number of the leading men of Humboldt; and doubtless, with a little canvassing, a large majority of the best citizens of Humboldt would sign such a paper.

If the interest that men manifested in these meetings– men who were not usually found in the church —is an evidence of God's blessing upon his Word that Jesus Christ is the only Saviour and way of salvation, and that men who follow him must cease using tobacco, drinking whisky, following the races, committing fornication, and must come out of the secret lodges,—if the interest which followed such preaching at Humboldt during these meetings is God's manner of approving, and it undoubtedly is, then there ought to be more of this kind. Such preaching may make some trouble—it did in Paul's day; but persisted in, it interests and saves men. It would lead to a great revival, not only in Humboldt, but everywhere. One prominent Odd-fellow was heard to remark that he had heard more Gospel during the few days of the meetings than during twenty-five years preceding. One of the pastors, who was reported as an Odd-fellow previous to these meetings, rose at one session and gave a testimony, which was in substance that he renounced Odd-fellowship on the ground that he could not be a faithful member of the church of Jesus Christ and an Odd-fellow. Another pastor gave, if possible, a stronger testimony, publicly renouncing Freemasonry and all the other secret orders to which he had belonged.

Thus God has raised up watchmen in Humboldt, that can instruct the people in the dangers to their homes and to the church from these secret societies, which are most insidious foes to both.

The German Methodists were very friendly, and very gladly opened their church for the final meeting of the convention. The Presbyterian pastor gave a Bible-reading of great power, on "Separation." We hope the Cynosure readers may yet have an opportunity of perusing it.

The severe weather brought sickness into a number of homes of those in other cities who expected to be present. Some of the letters received from these parties will be found below, and will well repay the reading. *

LETTERS ABOUT THE CONVENTION FROM NON-ATTENDANTS

Fairfield, Neb., Feb. 1, 1895 —When you changed the time of the convention, I indulged the hope that I might be able to attend; but, unfortunately, my wife is prostrated with sickness, unable to help herself, and I will have to deny myself the convention and also cancel my engagement at Lincoln for the same week. This is a sore disappointment, and I feel that I sustain a great personal loss. Trusting that you may have a successful convention, and that the cause of our common Lord and Saviour may be greatly advanced, I am fraternally yours,

Simpson Ely.

Hiawatha, Kan., Feb. 4, 1895.—I am greatly disappointed. This morning I had planned to start for Humboldt, to enjoy the feast that those who are privilged to be there will doubtless enjoy; but my health is such that I dare not attempt the journey. . . . . Please allow me to send cordial greetings to the good friends who may be privileged to be there. I can only meet them at a throne of grace and ask the divine blessing upon their deliberations. Had I been able to be there, I could have added my personal experience and observation in regard to the influence of lodges in courts of justice. I could have told of being on a jury where all were Masons except myself; that while the testimony was such as to prove the guilt of the prisoner beyond all question, still the five jurors labored hard and long with me to acquit him. I did not know at the time that the defendant was a Mason, but subsequently learned that he was. The result was that the jury was discharged and another impanelled, composed of the necessary qualifications to let the Hiramite go free. Another case, here in Hiawatha: Nearly two years since, three of our druggists pleaded guilty to the charge of violating the prohibitory law, and were fined by the judge of the court $300 each. They felt that the fine was too heavy, and appealed the case. The superior court affirmed the judgment of the court below, and that seemed to be the end of the case. Not so. A secret petition was gotten up, and private letters were sent, together with the petition, to the governor, who promptly remitted the fines. Every one who wrote the letters or signed the petitions were Masons. A prominent Mason admitted to me that the pardon was the result of the pressure brought to bear upon the governor by the lodge. Very truly yours,

J. W. Margrave.

Alexandria, Neb.—Owing to the condition of my health, I feel that it would not be wise for me to leave home to attend the convention. I had fully intended to go, until Saturday and Sabbath, when my lungs became so sore that I thought best to give it up; and yet I feel that this part of the State should be represented by some one. So I will send C. H Kimmel in my place. He is an elder in the U. P. Church. . . . . And now, in regard to the convention, I can say that I am with you in spirit, and have been praying, and will still continue to pray, for the success of the anti-secrecy reform work, which I feel is so much needed; for the lodges are sapping the very life-blood of the church, and are robbing her of her support. I think that we have great need of a Stoddard, or a P. B. Williams, or some other good lecturer, right here in Nebraska. Yours respectfully,

Rufus Park.

Pawnee City, Neb., Feb. 4 —I had fully expected to leave home this morning, as I wrote, to attend the convention, but at the last hour find it impossible for me to do so, and will be obliged to remain at home. I am sorry that I am thus compelled to disappoint you. But I am sure it will make little difference in the success of the convention. I enclose postoffice order for $1.00, amount sent me by Prof. Ely. I was at some expense in corresponding for the convention, but I will contribute that as my mite. Several of the friends of the cause talked of going over from here. I do not know if they will brave this severe weather or not. W. I. Brooks.

Mead, Neb., Jan 16, 1895.—I am sorry that the convention at Humboldt will be held at that time. The conference of the Swedish Evangelical Lutheran Church of Nebraska convenes at Oakland, Burt Co., on the 5th of February, and lasts until the 11th. I am unable to leave home earlier than in going to the conference, because I have a great deal of work to prepare before I leave home. All the Swedish Lutheran ministers will be deprived of the opportunity of attending at Humboldt. . . . . Rev. M. A. Gault takes better with my people than any other of those I have heard. . . . . Yours in the work, (Rev.) C. Widen.

CORRESPONDENCE

THEIR OLD TRICKS.

Fairfield, Neb., Feb. 11, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—My "Ten Chapters Against Lodges" are producing something of a sensation in the town where I live. Enemies of the church to which I belong are trying to make capital out of them. They are leaving no stone unturned by which they can create a prejudice against me and my work. Of course they do not come to me with their objections. That would not further their purpose. They find it far more convenient to stab me in the back. They are moral cowards, and this method always suits the cowards best.

Some of these enemies are Masons, and they are trying to turn the members of the Masonic order against me. But it does not work very smoothly. Some of my warmest friends are Masons, and they say that I have just as good a right to oppose secret orders as they have to favor them. This is a free country.

Some of them are members of the Grand Army of the Republic, and they are trying to create a sentiment in the local "post" against me. This works no better. I have enthusiastic friends in the G. A. R., and they know that I have always been a radical friend to the Union soldier. Scarcely a year goes by that I do not deliver addresses to soldiers' reunions and Decoration-day assemblages. Some of these soldiers have sense enough to know that I can be a friend to the soldier without favoring secret orders. Others, I am sorry to say, do not appreciate my position.

There has also been an attempt to arouse the members of the A. O. U. W. against me. It came about in this way: Recently the lodge wanted to hold a "memorial meeting" in honor of the members who had died during the past year. Instead of holding this meeting in their hall, somebody tendered them the use of the church-house where I preach. I did not approve of the use of our house of worship by a worldly organization; hence I refused to announce the meeting. One of our members, who is also a member of the lodge—an excellent gentleman—was asked to deliver the address of the occasion. I did not approve of this, and did not go to hear him, although the church is within twenty feet of my residence. Some of them tried to make a good deal of capital out of this; but I happen to have devoted friends in that order, and they will not forsake me because we do not agree upon the question of secret societies.

All these efforts have been futile. I have no fears as to the outcome. I have had bitter opposition heretofore; but the Lord has been good to me, and has greatly blessed me in my work. I have much the largest auditorium in the town, and it is crowded with people at almost every service. Last night standing-room was in demand. In the long run, the people will respect the man who has the courage of his convictions.

I had hoped to have my "Ten Chapters" put into tract form for circulation among this people; but one of the lodge preachers and some of his secret brethren have saved me the trouble and expense! They have in some way secured copies of the Cynosure containing my articles, and have busied themselves in showing them around among the members of the various lodges. They have my profoundest gratitude. They are very kind!

SIMPSON ELY,
Dean of the Bible College.

ANTI-SECRECY MEETING IN IOWA.

NORTHWOOD, Iowa, Feb. 8, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Last Tuesday night, February 5, I addressed a Norwegian congregation in the church east of Lyle, on the subject of Freemasonry. The adjoining town, Lyle, has a lodge, and has been able to draw some of the church-members into its meshes. The audience was very attentive, as every word spoken seemed to be a revelation to them. In an elaborate introduction I tried to convince them that I knew whereof I spoke. Most people believe that it is impossible to pry into the mysteries without being initiated. A few Masons were present and were challenged to answer, but they preferred "secrecy and silence." Of course they were wise. A bad cause cannot be better defended than by silence.

Hoping that there will be a general stir on the subject of secret orders among the Norwegians, I remain yours truly, O. T. LEE.

A TRIBUTE TO REV. DR GORDON.

ROGERS PARK, Ill., Feb. 12, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The death of Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon, at Boston, is causing sorrow in many hearts besides those who were associated with him in his home and church, for he had been long distinguished for his earnest services in every good cause.

Rev. Mr. Lisk, the student-preacher, who, in the absence of the pastor, conducted the devotions at the Rogers Park Baptist church last Sabbath, referred to the death of Dr. Gordon, and at the close of the services the congregation adopted a resolution of sympathy with his bereaved ones, his church, and (I may add) the large circle of those to whom he was known in his various spheres of usefulness. The resolution was as follows:

"WHEREAS, This congregation was startled by the sad mention of the death of the Rev. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, in the sermon to-day; and we, the members of this church and congregation, desire to express our sincerest sympathy with his bereaved wife and family, and with the congregation in Boston with whom he labored for many years. His name has long been identified with questions of great public importance in their bearing upon the best interests, present and future, of this great nation—already so prominent and influential in the whole world, and destined, as we hope, to measure its moral power according to its own growth and strength in all that is right. We, therefore, gladly bear our testimony and high esteem for the late Dr. Gordon and his oft-repeated, self-denying labors. His teachings and example are a legacy of value beyond that of gold and silver, and his name is richly entitled to a prominent place in the galaxy of noblest American worthies."

This resolution was cordially received and endorsed. T. H.

LETTER FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE.

———, N. H., Feb. 8, 1895.

IT CAN BE DONE.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—When Wm. Lloyd Garrison, almost alone, established his Liberator, in 1831, he made unconditional emancipation his watchword, and added: "I will be as harsh as truth, as uncompromising as justice. I am in earnest; I will not equivocate; I will not excuse; I will not retreat a single inch, and I will be heard."

And he was heard. He made enemies, but many more friends, and his blows told. Everyone knows what was the result. In just the same way must the country be freed from the power of the secret lodge, the deadly incubus that is not only destroying the church, and injuring the whole people, but is rapidly, yet silently and secretly getting control of the very government of the country. For, though most societies are supposed to be clear from any injurious features, in many towns every organization — that is the Grange, Grand Army, and others—have among their leaders Masons enough to influence the whole membership. Nor will it do to believe we are doing all we can, when really our efforts amount to very little. A little is better than nothing, but it is time to make ourselves heard, to come out openly, and fight the monster of Masonry, by exposing its real character, its aims, and its already great influence over not only its members, but over the courts, the church, the government and the people.

DOES IT PAY?

It would pay those who join even the best and most harmless of the "benevolent" secret societies to look below the surface and see how many sharp men make large profits out of confiding members.

Just now New Hampshire granges are being "worked" by smooth-talking "agents," who for $5 cash offer to let Grangers join a Boston Association, which, for cash in advance, propose to supply all goods "at wholesale prices." These agents gather some $50.00 to $75 00 a day, for memberships which really are of no value when one remembers that any man with money can buy staple goods as low as these associations can or will offer, and even at less prices.

MONEY, NOT BENEVOLENCE.

The sham and humbug of the Grange and other similar organizations is the pretence that they are "benevolent." The especial good of the farmer or some other special class is seen when the grange accepts, as members, lawyers, doctors, merchants and others. Is not the real and only end and aim to secure members and money for the benefit of the leaders who alone are benefited? HENRY E. HUNTER.

LITERATURE.

MUTINY OF THE BOUNTY AND STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND—1790–1894. By Rosalind Amelia Young, a Native of the Island. Illustrated. Published by the Pacific Press Publishing Co., Oakland, Cal. One vol. pp. 254. Cloth, price $1.00.

The story of the mutiny of the Bounty, and the settlement of Pitcairn Island by the mutineers, has been often told, and is always full of interest. A new charm, however, is given to it in this comely volume, written as it is by one of the native descendants of the English colonists in that out-of-the-way corner of the world.

Not the least interesting part of the history of Pitcairn Island is the fact that the mutineers of the Bounty became a praying Christian colony, marrying with the natives, raising children and encouraging them to live plain, simple and industrious lives, in the fear and admonition of the Lord. Surely the grace and Spirit of God visited them in large measure, and made them a Christian people in that solitary isle of the Pacific ocean. Such a narrative, told by one of the inhabitants of the colony, is another of the thousand monuments of God's mercy and power to save and govern the unruly hearts of men. No better romance can be found in the annals of truth; and no fiction is needed to appeal to the reader's fancy, for the truth surpasses the limning of any human imagination. It seems to us that no story of the tropics can enlist the interest of the young with more intensity, or convey a better idea of the power and goodness of God, than this.

PRAYER-BOOK AND AIDS TO PRIVATE DEVOTIONS. "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you."—James 4: 8. Tiffin, Ohio: E. R. Good & Bro. 1895. Price, in cloth, 30 cents.

We do not believe in rituals, as such, deeming any devotion not prompted by the pressing needs of the human heart and the Holy Spirit as unworthy of being offered to our heavenly Father; yet as aids, or suggestions, to incite spirituality in the soul it must be admitted that printed prayers may have a healthy influence in assisting us in our meditations and in framing acceptable petitions to the throne of grace. To the letter of these prayers little heed should be given; but whatever tends to fill us with gratitude, praise and thanksgiving, and increases our faith, should be esteemed. This volume first appeared in 1880, has had a wide sale, and, we are assured, has "supplied a real want among young Christians" This, the latest edition, has been enlarged by the addition of sixteen pages of prayers for members of Christian Endeavor societies. It now consists of eight parts: Scriptural Invitations to Prayer; Aids to Private Devotion; Family Prayers; Table Prayers; Prayers For and in Behalf of the Sick; Prayers for the Use of Those who are Sick; Prayers for the Social Prayer Meeting, and for Christian Endeavor services.

THE SEPARATED NATION. By H. L. Hastings. "Lo, the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations."—Numb. 23: 9. Boston: Published at 47 Cornhill, 1895. Cloth, price 35 cents.

The story of Israel never loses interest, because it is among the other nations of the earth, but not of them—a separated people, peculiar—standing as a perpetual witness to the truth of the Scriptures—and awaiting a glorious restoration to its former land and glory. Mr. Hastings has treated the subject with systematic elucidation and given it all the charm that prophecy, fulfillment and divine promises can bestow upon it. The present is a recent edition of this able volume, prepared for careful study and reference, and belongs to his "Anti-Infidel Library" that so effectually meets and disperses the arguments of learned skeptics.

HOW TO CARE FOR A BATHROOM.

Keep Disease Away From This Much Used Room.

In the first place, a sponge is by no means a fit article to use in taking a bath. It is the plumber's best friend, and those who value perfection in their plumbing have none of it.

The sponge, especially after it has been used a short time, is continually shedding little particles of itself. These lodge in the pipes, and in many cases attach themselves to little rough places on the inside.

A good huck towel, with a comfortably wide hem, securely stitched on the sewing machine so that no linty edges are exposed, is quite as agreeable to many people as a sponge. In all bathrooms there should be kept standing a suitable vessel with a quantity of disinfectant. This should be poured through all the pipes and allowed to remain long enough to do its work. Many persons object to potash, and these will find copperas or a strong solution of sal soda the next best means of keeping up to an improved sanitary standard. Hot water, judiciously used, is a good thing, but to have this perfectly safe the plumbing must be good, else the joints, by long continued heat, may become slightly softened. Much of the solder that is used melts at a very low temperature and cannot be trusted to hold a long continued stream of water that is at boiling point.

The bathroom should have an outside window and fresh air wherever it is possible to admit it. In summer a slatted or Venetian blind should be provided so that the window may remain open, except in case of storm. Few things are more disagreeable than a stuffy bathroom, one where the odors of sewer gas and soggy, decaying wood are evident. To avoid this there must be no leaks in the pipes or faucets, and the joints must be carefully looked after.

How to Repair Mirrors.

For repairing mirrors accidentally scratched clean the bare portion of the glass by rubbing it gently with fine cotton, taking care to remove any traces of dust and grease. If this cleaning is not done very carefully, defects will appear around the place repaired. With a point of a knife cut upon the back of another looking glass a portion of the silvering of the required form, but a little larger. Upon it place a drop of mercury. A drop the size of a pin's head will be sufficient for a surface equal to the size of a nail. The mercury spreads immediately, penetrates the amalgam to where it was cut off with the knife, and the required piece may now be lifted and removed to the place to be repaired. This is the most difficult part of the operation. Then press lightly the renewed portions with cotton, and the glass presents the same appearance as when new.

The Christian Cynosure.

WM. I. PHILLIPS, PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1895.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

THE OFFICIAL CALL.

The Pennsylvania Christian Anti secrecy Association will meet in annual session FEBRUARY 25 AND 26, 1895, in the Second Reformed Presbyterian church, Seventeenth street, near Race street, PHILADELPHIA.

The deep and wide-spread discontent of the public mind, aside from the great financial and business distress, have more than a surface source. There is a deep-rooted, wide-spread, generally-unrecognized disturbing cause in every department of life. Moral, spiritual and material paralysis has stricken the entire social fabric. Dread apprehension of worse evils prevails everywhere. "Men's hearts fail them for fear." The reformer, the statesman and the political economist "are at their wits' end."

The moral sense alone may and, to some extent, does see the cause, but is not sufficiently awake to it. It discerns a secret, selfish hand at the throat of church and state, strangling every reform and corrupting every energy. Secrecy thrives and boasts of its thrift and power, while religion and moral and political reform languish and are paralyzed.

What is the remedy?

First. That the evil and ruinous power of secrecy be exposed.

Second. That the public conscience be aroused.

To do this we must use the pulpit, the press, the platform and the council-chamber. During the past year the first and second have done good work.

Brethren, let us come together in the Spirit, in the City of Brotherly Love, that, as last year, and even more richly, we may enjoy the words of wisdom and eloquence, and both take and give sweet counsel on the proper methods of work for another year's campaign.

Some of the ablest speakers of the nation will be present.

The special arrangements for the meeting are under the care of our agent, Rev. W. B. Stoddard.

It is hoped that though, for unavoidable reasons, the time is short, there will be an enthusiastic meeting. Let the friends be present in large numbers. and urge the attendance of others. Let churches and societies send delegates, and those who cannot come, assist others who for want of means would be unable to come. Above all, brethren and sisters, pray that the meeting may be abundandantly fruitful to the glory of God, the good of souls, and the promotion of the cause. Respectfully,

SAM'L COLLINS, Pres't.

Allegheny, Pa., Feb 8, 1895.

THAT "SECRET LYNCHING SOCIETY."

In the issue of the Cynosure for February 7, we gave a summary of the press account of a horrible "lynching" perpetrated by a secret band of vigilantes in Holt county, Neb.

An intelligent correspondent, J. McCleery, writes from Portland, Iowa, the following further particulars of the Holt county tragedies:

"As I am recently from that neighborhood, and am well acquainted with the most of the facts, I deem it but right to make some corrections. Sensational accounts have been sent all over the country to the daily papers. That a secret society may be in existence at times will not be disputed; or even more than one. I don't believe that the society that hung Ralph and John Hills was a part of the society that hung Barrett Scott.

"But what has been the mainspring in bringing these societies into existence? 'Doc.' Middleton, the head of a gang of outlaws, a Mason and terror to the whole country, was captured, tried, and sent to the penitentiary for three years, and then pardoned out before the end of his time. Barrett Scott, a Mason, Odd-fellow and Knight of Pythias, with the help of the courts, had escaped all attempts at reaching justice. His steal is estimated anywhere up to $126,000, and I have no idea that amount would cover the loss and expense. This outfit, that no doubt largely shared in the steal, had done everything in their power to aggravate this lawless element, and the hanging of Scott was not unexpected by many of the best citizens of the county.

"There is no excitement in Holt county over the matter. If Scott's friends know so much about this secret organization, why did they not appear at the preliminary examination, instead of quitting the State without leaving any testimony?"

From a printed slip enclosed in our correspondent's letter—published in a local paper—it would seem that the secret band of vigilantes by whom the Hills were hanged were innocent of the murder of Barrett Scott, the defaulting treasurer of Holt county; but the revelation is none the less horrible, since it very strongly indicates that the county is cursed with more than one secret band of murderers.

THE CYNOSURE AND THE NEW YORK WEEKLY TRIBUNE.

Attention is again called to the advertisement offering the Cynosure and the New York Weekly Tribune together for little more than the price of one paper.

The principal purpose of this combination is to secure NEW subscribers for the Cynosure; but present subscribers can take advantage of the offer, if the full amount stated in the advertisement is sent with their renewals.

Those whose subscriptions to the Cynosure are already paid in advance must pay the $1.60, and then such subscribers will receive the Weekly Tribune one year, and have one year more credited on the Cynosure.

—A brief visit, last week, from Rev. M. F. Keiter, the publisher of the Christian Conservator at Dayton, O., was a pleasant incident in the daily routine of the Cynosure office. Bro. Keiter is hopeful and earnest in his opposition to the lodge and other evils antagonized by the United Brethren and the Conservator, and in harmony with the work of the N. C. A.

—The Pope on workingmen's secret societies: With regard to secret societies it is admitted that workingmen have a right to combine for their own interests, but Catholics should prefer to unite with Catholics and shun the societies that have been condemned by the church, and also any society that is regarded by bishops as "suspicious and dangerous." And further, as presidents of the societies, priests should be preferred.

—News comes from Cincinnati that the National Brotherhood of Painters is divided into two factions, and that two subordinate unions—the latest numbering 800 members—have seceded from it and formed independent organizations. It seems impossible to maintain unity and harmony in oath-bound associations that reduce their members to slavery. The system should be repulsive to every unprejudiced mind.

—A religious form of anarchy, based on politics, and showing little of the spirit of Christ, is reported in one of our exchanges. President Cleveland has a brother, minister of the Presbyterian church at Chaumont, N. Y. Quite recently his congregation divided, the Republican members withdrawing from the church altogether, simply because the pastor is a Democrat and the brother of the chief magistrate of the nation. Poor human nature!

—It is gratifying to find in the religious papers, representing numerous denominations, so many loving tributes to the memory of the lamented Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon. Without exception they bear unqualified testimony to the faithfulness of his Christian character and his abundant works in the Gospel ministry. One interesting feature of his twenty-five years' pastorate was that he so trained and influenced his congregation that their gifts to foreign missions amounted to twice the sum they spent in maintaining their own church. What other pastor has ever emulated this example?

—A fine opportunity will (D. V.) soon be given for our friends living between Chicago and Portland, Ore., to hear the Rev. P. B. Williams, the effective Pacific Coast agent, speak in opposition to the secret lodge system. He proposes to visit Chicago at the holding of the Annual Meeting of the N. C. A., in May next, and if sufficient encouragement is given to him, he will begin his journey hitherward in April, in time to lecture in several places along the road. Mr. Williams has won a wide and well-deserved fame as a lecturer in behalf of our reform, and if those who wish to hear him will make prompt arrangements to organize meetings for him to address, and provide the necessary funds for that purpose, they will be well repaid. For further information, to learn the route over which he will travel, etc., letters should be sent to Secretary Phillips, 221 West Madison street, Chicago, as early as possible.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

February.—Theodore D. Weld.—Doings in the Massachusetts Legislature.—Judge Hoar and his family insignia.—A New England provincialism.—Living pictures.—A solemn thought.

FEBRUARY

is much more of a Janus among months than the one preceding it, which bears the name of that ancient Latin deity; and among the proverbs applied to it, "double-faced February" is quite as appropriate as any, for it certainly does face both ways:—towards the dark, cheerless days of winter, whose sands are so swiftly ruuning out, and towards the spring, with its crocuses and bluebirds, its trill of robins and patter of silver showers. Now, if ever, we have zero weather and chilling blasts, but the days are lengthening at both ends, and there begins to be a very perceptible difference petween the sunny and the shady side of the street. And out in the country there is even now an indefinable swelling and stirring of the buried life that waits to hear the spring's resurrection evangel. I saw in the Transcript, the other day, an idea that will please nature-lovers: Gather a few promising twigs, lilac, oak, maple—or, best of all, from a horse-chestnut tree. Put them in a roomy vase, with plenty of water and sunshine, and in a few days, sometimes two or three weeks, graceful leaves will spring forth and the blossom-clusters expand till you have in miniature a vision of the beauties of May—the daintiest gift one could place on the table of an invalid friend. But spring will come as if shrouded in sackcloth to many mourning hearts in our sea-coast towns. One reads of fishing schooners coming in with sails like plate-glass, with tales of dreadful exposure and suffering, and lives lost in the icy waters; but only they who watch, sick at heart, for the loved one who will never come back, know really what it means, as Lucy Larcom sang of it in one of her early poems that concentrate in a single line so much of the anguish and desolation which are a part of the everyday life of a fishing population.

"The bitter wash of that life-long woe,"

THE RECENT FUNERAL OF THEODORE D. WELD, almost the last of the old Abolitionists, recalls anew the revolt of Lane Seminary, then under the presidency of the venerable Dr. Lyman Beecher, which was mainly inspired by Mr. Weld's magnetic eloquence. On that memorable day, when the students, headed by young Weld, went out in a body to be the apostles of freedom in "the impending conflict," the star of liberty rose never to set again. Mr. Weld and his colleagues did not know that they were making history; probably did not think of it at all. He simply threw his life and all he was into the scales for an oppressed race, and found it true that he who loseth his life shall keep it. He was an ardent woman-suffragist; the husband of Angelina Grimke could scarcely have been anything else. He was an Anti-mason, as a matter of course, like all the old Abolitionists, a part of whose moral grandeur consisted in the fact that their souls kept open-house for Truth, whatever guise she came in; and unpopularity, or fewness of numbers, did not count with them in the least. Sincere advocacy of one reform will always lead on to another, and the true reformer is he who is willing to stand by his convictions to their logical end, even when they carry him where he had no thought of going.

BUNKER HILL DAY.

The Massachusetts Senate, by a tie vote, has refused to make the 17th of June a legal holiday. As we already have the 19th of April, there seemed no occasion to mutliply these battle anniversaries, the tendency of which, as things are going, may be less to foster patriotism than the military spirit. In the House a bill has passed, with but two dissenting votes, that only our national flag shall be displayed on public buildings.

The idea that it was an A. P. A. measure made it the occasion for some bitter personal remarks; but it may as well be remembered, both by our legislators and citizens at large, that all patriotic measures do not emanate from the A. P. A.; that, in fact, this organization might go the way that Know-Nothingism went to-morrow, and there would be just as much patriotism in the land as there ever was.

will tell. No one could see the face of the late Judge Hoar, even in a newspaper cut, without seeing the same strong, independent, thoughtful lines that time has not yet obliterated from the portraits of these old New England worthies. He bore one of their most honored names, yet was utterly without the snobbish spirit that causes so many newly-rich families to ape the English aristocracy by sporting a coat-of-arms. When acting as one of the American commissioners in the treaty with England in 1871, Lord Tenterden asked him, as he signed and affixed his own seal to the document, "Have you no family seal of your own, or any family crest?" to which Judge Hoar replied—and one can imagine the twinkle in his eye: "None, except a sleeve-button; that may answer the purpose, my family being without any other insignia." Whether the English lord had a dim sense of the sarcasm lurking under the gravely-serious reply can only be imagined, but it is probable that ever after, when dealing with a Yankee, he steered clear of all questions of heraldry.

Among our peculiar New England provincialisms which pester Western people who hear them for the first time, is applied to a large land-vehicle designed to carry a considerable number of passengers. I have just learned its origin. Seventy years ago there was built in Salem a vehicle designed for pleasure-parties and excursionists, which was in the shape of a huge boat and called "Cleopatra's barge." Its successors, while making no pretensions to keep up the boat shape, still retain this aquatic name, to the great mystification of those not "to the manner born."

THE TEMPERANCE PEOPLE OF LYNN

are trying something novel in the line of prohibitory instruction, by presenting what they call "Living Pictures of Lynn Life," at their Sunday-evening meetings. These consist in giving the name and address, together with a sketch of the life, of every person convicted of drunkenness in the police court during the week. It may be said that the newspapers every day present us with living pictures of alcohol's effects: for instance, the mother who in this city lately murdered her two children in a fit of delirium tremens. They have grown so common that we have forgotten to shudder; yet it is the public indifference which makes the horror of it.

THE ADVENTISTS' PROPHETIC CONFERENCE, held this week at the People's church, was a gathering of earnest men and women who believe thoroughly what they teach; and, however we may fail to coincide in some of their vlews, no devout mind can help feeling the inspiration of the thought thus expressed by one of their speakers: that "we are living in a dispensation which abuts on eternity." Certain it is that we are walking in the solemn twilight of a century whose record is almost closed; and, as of old, faithful hearts wait for the kingdom of God to come, and hear in all this stir and upheaval of nations the sound of his chariot wheels.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

The cold wave.—Power of removal bill.—Municipal misrule.—A Napoleonic revival.—Ministers' meeting, etc.

THE RECENT COLD WAVE

was attended by many casualties on sea and land, and in some respects was more disastrous than the famous blizzard of 1888. Although but five inches of snow fell in New York City, it drifted so badly that railway travel was effectually blocked for two days, transportation in the harbor was at a standstill, on account of floating ice, and the hospitals were filled with people who had succumbed to the cold and were more or less badly frost-bitten. Thousands of dollars were lost to the big stores, as the usual crowd of shoppers was kept at home, and many business houses will be seriously embarrassed, if not actually forced into bankruptcy, by the interruption of postal and transportation facilities. Sometimes a delay of twenty-four hours in the delivery of a letter makes all the difference between solvency and insolvency.

THE POWER OF REMOVAL BILL

having been approved by the mayor, has just been signed by the Governor, and in a few days more the Tammany office-holders about the City Hall, who have been enriching themselves so long at the public expense, will be obliged to seek a livelihood in some other direction. It is an interesting conjecture, what a man will do who has no trade or profession, and who finds an income of several thousands of dollars suddenly cut off. They cannot dig, they are ashamed to beg, and they will no longer be allowed to steal. The jealous Republicans, who have rushed the measure through the assembly, have not seemed to reflect that the same law will work the same way with a Democratic mayor and Republican office-holders as it does now with a Republican mayor and Dempublican office-holders. The political wheel has a periodic revolution, and, one of these days, the staunch adherents of the present bill will be raising the loudest outcry against it.

American municipal government will never be beneficently and permanently changed till it is divorced from partisanship and machine politics. If the affairs of a city could be intelligently administered on a business-like basis, similar to any great corporation, many of the crying evils which disgrace modern municipal misrule would disappear.

A NAPOLEONIC REVIVAL

is a present striking social and literary phenomenon. "Napoleonic teas" have been fashionable all winter. Bloomingdale Bros. have filled an entire room in their large store with relics and mementoes of Napoleon and the Empire, to which a nominal admission-fee is charged, the proceeds to go to some local charity. Probably more historical literature has been sold upon this subject, during the past year, than at any time since the French Revolution. Pre millennialists who favor the Napoleonic theory of Antichrist will find food for reflection, if not for speculation, in this.

THE METHODIST MINISTERS' MEETING

has practically become a secret society. On the first Monday in each month the exercises are more general; a sermon is usually preached, and the public is admitted; but on all other days of meeting, the most extraordinary precautions are taken to exclude reporters, laymen and visitors, admittance being given only to those who are members and have signed the constitution. It is well-known that some very heated discussions have sometimes taken place, and perhaps because some inkling of these has, from time to time, crept into the daily papers, these efforts are being made to prevent publicity. Some of the most worthy members of the conference have strongly objected; and surely it seems as if a company of Christian ministers ought to be able to conduct their discussions with becoming propriety, so that they need not be afraid to have the public eye upon them. What more can be expected of them, however, when so large a proportion are enthusiastic Masons, even claiming that the church of Jesus Christ is a secret society? What wonder that the sheep are blind and careless about the dangers of the lodge, when the shepherds lead them there! The laity can scarcely be aroused and brought into line along this great moral reform, so long as the clergy are hand-in-glove with secretism.

F. W. FARR.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 13, 1895.

Congress is apparently no nearer reaching an agreement on financial legislation than it was before the President sent in his special message giving it the alternative of authorizing 3 per cent gold bonds or of seeing coin bonds issued bearing 3 and ¾ per cent interest. While the House Committee on Ways on Means will report a bill authorizing 3 per cent gold bonds, the Senate Finance Committee has reported a bill providing for the unlimited coinage of silver, a silver dollar being given for each dollar's worth of bullion at the market price, the difference being retained by the government as seigniorage.

INDIANS

frequently come to Washington, but it is not often that they give our people such a practical object lesson, demonstrating the good work that is being done among them by Christianity, as they did last Sunday. At one church—the Western Presbyterian—five full-blooded Indians, of the Otoe tribe, now living in Missouri, occupied the platform, and one of their number—James Whitewater—delivered an address in broken English, telling of the advance made by his people. He said: "We are sending our boys to school to learn to be doctors, lawyers and preachers." At another church—the Twelfth St. M. E.—Salee Oomaeuyah, a Cherokee Indian girl who has been educated for missionary work among her people, told in perfect and well-selected language the story of her life and conversion and of what she expected and hoped to accomplish in God's name.

A NEW CHURCH.

A handsome edifice was dedicated last Sunday by the People's Congregational colored church. The new church has a seating capacity of 800, and was organized in 1891 with 220 members and now has 427. The dedicatory sermon was preached by Dr. J. E. Rankin, presdent of Howard University.

UNION PACIFIC.

A proposition has been made to the House Committee on Pacific railroads, from New York capitalists, for a settlement of the debt due the government by the Union Pacific railroad, which has been well received by members of the House, and if it were positively, instead of tentatively, made and the session were not so near its end, it might form the basis of a settlement. The proposition is for Congress to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to accept a cash payment of a sum equal to the principal of the debt of the Union Pacific company to the government as full settlement of all claims of the United States.

DR. PARKHURST.

The Anti-saloon League has invited Dr. Parkhurst, of New York, to come to Washington and address a public mass meeting to be held under the auspices of the league upon the date that will be most convenient for him He answered that his health would not permit him to set a date at this time.

CHINA AND JAPAN.

The meeting of the Presbyterian Ministers' Association, held this week at the Church of the Covenant, was unusually interesting. The most interesting feature of the meeting was an address by Rev. Frederick J. Stanley, L. H. D., who has been for several years a professor in Count Ohuma's College, at Tokio, Japan, on "The China-Japanese war; its causes, and the significance to the church of God and the American citizen, viewed through thirteen centuries, retrospective and prospective." He believes the present war largely the result of Japan, which for centuries depended upon China for ideas, having forty years ago opened her gates to western civilization, and to the wonderful progress made by Japan in the last forty years in the adoption of American and European ideas, which are considered "barbarous" by the Chinese. Concluding, the speaker said impressively: "God has exalted us in this last decade of the nineteenth century to a high position of influence in aiding in the development of commerce in Asia and to enter with all the elements of civilization, when the stolid, defiant paganism of China shall be broken down, in God's own good time."

THE POLYGLOT.

The preparations for the great mass meeting in connection with the W. C. T. U.'s monster polyglot temperance petition are about completed and a great success is assured. *

—Washington's birthday, the 22d inst., this week, will be celebrated by all-day religious services at the Salvation Army's hall, on Wentworth Ave. (Englewood, Chicago), between Sixty-second and Sixty-third streets. The first service will be from 10 A. M. until noon; the second from 2 to 4 P. M. and the third will begin at 7 P. M. The sanctification of saints and the conversion of sinners will be the object. Rev. G. A. McLaughlin, Dr. John R. Boynton, Rev. Harvey Calkins and wife, and others, will participate in the exercises. A general attendance is not only invited, but urged.

CHEERFUL RELIGION.

THAT IS THE KIND REV. MADISON C. PETERS FAVORS.

Without the Grace of God Sinners Cannot Be Converted—Make Your Standard of Character High—Christ's Compassionate Spirit—When to Be Angry.

Scripture apprehends civility as an element of success when St. Peter exhorts, "Be courteous." Pour the acid of a crabbed nature on the refined sensibilities of those who come in contact with you and you will starve, while the kindly, differential, conciliating, courteous, chivalrous man will rise to opulence and influence.

Character is stock in trade. The more a man possess the greater are his facilities for adding to it. Character is the great desideratum of life. He who lives for less is mean.

Have a high standard, though you may never be able to realize it.

Disraeli says: "The youth who will not look up will look down. The spirit that will not soar will grovel." In addition to these graces add personal piety, which will give a right exercise to your forces and faculties, dignity to your calling, make your life happy, your death easy, your eternity glorious.

Many young men have been wrecked upon the shoals of recklessness and sin.

Christ's Compassion.

Christ's was a compassionate spirit. "I have compassion on the multitude." For the unfortunate leper he had a friendly look, a kindly word and a deed of tenderness. "Being moved with compassion, he put forth his hand and touched him." Meeting the blind beggar on the Jericho highway, "Jesus stood and had compassion on him and touched his eyes." When the Lord saw the widow's tears at the gate of Nain, bewailing the loss of an only son, he had compassion on her and said, "Weep not." Do the compassionate words and loving deeds of our Saviour find a transcript in our lives?

The Mighty Agitator.

The cross is the most restless and resistless of agitators, and if your religion does not excite you it is because you have no religion. If you believe in the tear compelling story of Jesus and his love, the best feelings and sympathies of your nature will be roused to their highest pitch, and you will love with an enthusiastic love and praise with intensest gratitude him who loved and bled and died for us. If you feel no quenchless love, fiery zeal and glowing enthusiasm for Christ's glory, you may disguise it as you like, but in deed and in truth you do not believe that Christ died that sinners might be redeemed, or you believe in Calvary just as you do in Gettysburg. You believe in Christ as you believe in Washington or in some dead fact which belongs to history and has no vital connection with you or bearing on your destiny.

REV. MADISON C. PETERS HAS BUT ONE TERM FOR FALSEHOOD.

The Farmer Is a Liar When the Top Layer of a Barrel of Apples Is Better Than Those Beneath—Commercial, Mechanical, Social and Varlous Perverters of the Truth.

I hate and abhor lying.—Psalm cxix, 163.

There is no sin against which the Bible protests more earnestly or more frequently than lying. If falsehood always defeated itself, there would be no temptation to lie, but the fact is that lies often pay better than the truth. Liars often get rich, while the man of truth hardly makes a living. Some people call lies fictions, fabrications, subterfuges, evasions, stories, inventions, fables, deceptions, misrepresentations. I call them lies. Among the many lies current let me mention a few:

First.—Agricultural lies. I used to think that nearly all farmers were honest. When the top of a farmer's barrel of apples is an indication of what may be found all the way down to the bottom, when all bushel measures are the same size, and when all the milk is honest, you may look out for the millennium.

Second.—Commercial lies. Custom, however ancient and however widely recognized, can never justify a lie. Sixteen ounces for a pound, 36 inches for a yard and all goods as represented is what we seldom get. I have heard men who boldly maintained that they could not afford to tell the truth; that to tell the truth about their goods and about their business would be the high-road to ruin. During the Moody meetings in Boston a lady said to a storekeeper, "Is this real English lace?" "It was previous to the tabernacle meetings, but it isn't now. It is simply imitation." I believe that upright and down square dealing is the best policy in the long run. He who is honest for policy's sake is not honest.

Third.—I notice mechanical lies. "Things are not what they seem," says the poet. No; I should not think they were. "Almost nothing that man makes now is what it seems." The genuineness of a man's conversion was recently well attested in a prayer meeting by his testimony that he knew that he was a Christian, "for now," he said, "I always paint the tops of the doors," and also by a houseservant who testified that she "now swept under the mats." One day when the subject under consideration in a prayer meeting was, "The Practical Effect of Religion In Daily Life," a man got up and said, "I can't say much about it, but I know that since I was converted I put better work into my shoes than I did before."

Fourth.—I notice lies social. There is a good deal of insincerity in society. Women greet each other with a kiss, with the nose turned upward at the same time. Women are "out" when they are asleep or too lazy to dress. If you accustom your servants to lie for you, don't be surprised if they lie on their own account. People talk about their silverware to everybody except the assessor. On a small income they try to make people believe they are rich—gaudy parlors and meager kitchens, smiles abroad, tears at home, an eternal war with want on the one hand and proud ambition on the other.

Fifth.—Lies ecclesiastical. What jealousies among churches! How many lies are told for running down other churches! Pity 'tis, but 'tis true, it is hard to get one church to tell the truth about another, especially if it happens to be a prosperous church. The field is so large, and there is room for all. Tell the truth, tell it to yourself, tell it about others, tell it to God. Herodotus tells us in the first book of his history that from the age of 5 years to that of 20 the ancient Persians instructed their children only in the three things—viz, to manage a horse, to shoot dexterously with a bow and to speak the truth, which show of how much importance they thought it to fix this virtuous habit on the minds of youth. Every one can enter into the delightful emotion with which Petrarch must have received the gratifying tribute when on his appearance as a witness and approaching the tribunal to take the accustomed oath he was informed that, such was the confidence of the court in his veracity, he would not be required to take any oath, his word was sufficient.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 24. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—To what has Christ opened your eyes?—Acts ix, 1-11, 17-21.

The topical references record the history of the conversion of Saul of Tarsus, who was subsequently called Paul the Apostle. One feature of Christ's appearance to Saul was that he was stricken blind, in which state he remained for three days, until God sent Ananias to him, through whose good offices, under the blessing of God, "there fell from his eyes as it had been scabs, and he received sight forthwith," but not only physical but also spiritual sight. The conversion of Saul may be taken as a model, representing to what Christ opens our eyes when we are converted.

1. Christ opens our eyes to a proper conception of ourselves. Paul's first mistake was that he did not see himself as God saw him. He was a Pharisee of the strictest kind and had the idea that in persecuting Christians he was doing God's will. He did not see the error in his heart and life. But Christ opened his eyes to see that and the consciousness of his personal guilt before God never left him. One of the first steps in conversion is the consciousness of our personal guilt, and therefore our need of a Saviour. We must be convicted of sin before we will turn from it to God. This was the case with David when Nathan pointed out his sin. He saw it and cried to God in sorrow and repentance. The repentant thief on the cross illustrates the same fact. He saw his personal guilt. "We indeed justly, for we suffer the due reward of our deeds." It is the same in all cases.

2. Christ opens our eyes to a proper conception of Himself as the Messiah. This was another error in Saul's character. Raised as a Jew and as a Pharisee he was taught to reject Christ as the Messiah. He himself said it was through ignorance that he had persecuted God's people—through ignorance because he did not believe in Christ as the Messiah. But when the scales fell from his spiritual sight he also saw Christ as indeed the Son of God and was ready to confess Him as such, for he cried, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" The thief on the cross had the same experience. He was led to see his own guilt and also the true character of Christ. "We indeed justly," he said, confessing his own guilt, but "this man" (that is, Christ) "hath done nothing amiss." Christ opens our eyes not only to see ourselves, but Himself. And when we see Him in the beauty and loveliness of His character we cannot but admire Him and desire to be like Him.

3. Christ opens our eyes to the duties resulting from a proper vision of ourselves and Himself. When Paul received his sight, immediately he arose, was baptized and ever afterward did the will of God. To see oursolves aright and Christ aright is not all of Christianity. Conversion is more than turning from evil. It is also a turning to good. We must cease to do evil, but we must also learn to do well. Conversion to Christ results in Christian duties. Christ opens our eyes to these duties, and, like Saul of Tarsus, we should not hesitate to do them. Faith and works are both necessary to salvation.

Human Resentment.

There are occasions when we do well to be angry. There is a meekness which is the gentleness of weakness. A good man's anger, according to an old proverb, is like the spark the steel strikes from the flint—it requires a hard blow to kindle it, and it soon expires. But how seldom is the truth of this saying verified! No fire is so easy to kindle and none so hard to extinguish as our human resentments. If we are hard and severe toward others, our prayer, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors," is only a form and mockery.

THE STORY OF LADY RANDOLPH CHURCHILL'S COURTSHIP.

Horrors of Nagging—A Parisian Model. Art Linens For the Table—New Way In the Home Laundry—Selecting Colors. A Woman's Mission—Vassar College.

Lady Churchill's charming suavity of manner and generous fund of tact and diplomacy have won for her the highest respect of all English women, who have unconsciously grown to consider her an English woman to the manner born.

The story of Lord Randolph's acquaintance and admiration for Miss Jennie Jerome is an old one, but nevertheless interesting, for it was at a dinner that they first met.

Attracted by the beauty and the brilliancy of her conversation, this talented gentleman soon confined his attention to her. Those who sat near him stopped talking and listened to them with undisguised admiration. Miss Jerome was noted as a conversationist, but even to her friends she had never seemed so brilliant as on that occasion. Lord Churchill, however, was her match. He met her satire with sparkling repartee and responded to her wit and humor, which for once had found a fair exchange. When the ladies had withdrawn, Lord Randolph turned to a friend and said enthusiastically:

"That's the brightest woman I ever met," and added with the seriousness of a fatalist, "and I mean to marry her."

Singularly enough, at this same moment Miss Jerome was making a like remark concerning him to one of her sisters. Within a fortnight of this first meeting they were engaged and soon after were married.

The wedding was one long to be remembered by those present. The bride received a dowry of $50,000 from her father, jewels and gold to the value of $10,000 and two houses deeded in trust for her, the income amounting to $10,000 a year, a gift which, it is said, very nearly impoverished the fond father, who was anxious that his beautiful daughter should want for no luxury.—Boston Journal.

Horrors of Nagging.

It is the peculiarity of the nagger to enormously exaggerate everything, even if she do not invent her grievances. Forgetfulness on the part of a husband is annoying, as it is in any one, but it is not a crime. A continual stream of scolding lasting three or four hours over the failure to post a letter will cause any man to consider the effect disproportionate to the cause. If the husband be healthy, if he is not cursed with a highly nervous organization, what happens? The first thing is that any love he may have ever had for his wife dies, drowned in the flood of words. Having murdered his love for her, the wife keeps up the nagging. He speedily begins to look on her as being a nuisance. From this to dislike and then to positive hatred is not a long journey. If there be children, the husband may continue to live with her for their sake, but it is an awful home in which to bring up children.

The man quickly learns that he has in his physical strength something in which he can claim sanctuary. He may not actually beat her, because the restraining influences of his training have not lost their hold on him. Perhaps it would be better for her if he did, for physical fear of a whipping might be sufficient to make her control herself. While he may not lift his finger to her, he will become brutal. In such a contest the woman has no chance. He may not he, he probably is not, able to give the rapierlike thrust of sarcasm which comes so easily to her, but he can use the bludgeon of abuse and profanity with terrible effect. The nervous condition the woman has created in herself by nagging itself renders her powerless before this weapon of her husband. Such a family is hell on earth. It was the son of such a household who said in the simplest and most matter of fact way when he heard of a wedding, "Another life quarrel commenced." What a comment on his parents!—Dr. Cyrus Edson in North American Review.

A Parisian Model.

A well built woman can always get employment in Paris. If she doesn't care to pose in an art school, she can pose in a dressmaking or millinery establishment. Modistes attach importance to a pretty face and a small head, but a perfect figure is all that the dressmakers require. Hair and complexions are easily provided.

A girl who wanted to sell me a 200 franc petticoat to wear with a muslin house dress was a glorious specimen of womanhood. She wore the Frenchiest kind of a costume—blue serge made with a bolero jacket that had lapels, and cravat of green velvet, and a brilliant scarlet waistcoat fastened with brass cadet buttons. Her hair, which was crimped, frizzed, tumbled up, pulled down in curls and shelled with pins, formed a wig that, like the judiciary article, took in her forehead, temples and ears. She had a superbly curved back, and she carried herself as grandly as her stilted shoes would permit.

Every three days she was weighed, and on Sunday, when she took her bath, the bathing mistress measured her. These measurements were preserved for reference. She had, like all the figures in art as well as trade, her own system of reduction. At the first evidence of flesh all liquids were cut off—soups, sauces, wine, coffee and chocolate. She wore no flannel. If the weather got unbearable, she put a fur tail round her throat and her feet in woolen shoes.

She was perhaps 25 years of age and never had had a fire in her room—never, never! In sickness or in winter it was the same thing. This custom is national. Fires are considered bad. They burn up not only income, but the youth, the brains and life itself.

"If you want to keep your figure, keep cool," is the advice given and heeded by these paragons of fashion.—Paris Letter.

Art Linens For the Table.

The demand for art embroidered table linens shows no diminution, and many beautiful styles of work for this purpose have recently been brought out. There's a great variety of styles, shapes and shades, made of fine linen, lawn and edged with honiton lace. Inside of the borders of lace delicate sprays of embroidery are stamped, left to be embroidered by hand in fine silk floss. Another somewhat similar stye is called "ideal honiton." In this honiton lace is basted down and buttonholed by hand in white silk, the designs being made to fit the shape of the different patterns of lace used. Some have only lace embroidered in white, while others have, in addition, an intermixture of embroidery to be done either in white or colors.

Of course in this work the colors must never be pronounced, and the prettiest effect is what is called "opal embroidery." In this the flowers, leaves, etc., are worked in filo silk of various delicate shades of pink, blue, yellow, golden brown and green, blending in the same flower, or even in the same petal, softly shading from one tint to another in a way that makes the name "opal" seem very appropriate. The most popular style just now, because requiring less skill to embroider, is done in white or colors on linen a little heavier than the lawn just mentioned, the edges being formed of the old fashioned buttonhole scallops, which scallops, however, are of every fantastic shape.

The embroidery patterns on these are usually simple floral designs, so that the whole is easily done.

Hemstitched doilies and centerpieces are usually done in the best wash silks and are very pretty and serviceable.—House Furnishing Lineus.

A Drinking Sonnet.

Far under ground in arched and vaulted halls—
Halls dedicate to subtlest alchemies,
And all the secret arts and processes
Whereby a natural science lifts the walls

Of things organic and inorganic
(Whether to swim or fly or weigh the spheres,
Or grace with bud and bloom the fruitful years,
Or crystallize or flame forth volcanic)—

A liquid doth distill, choicer than wine,
Or than the blood of apples or of grain,
Or aught that press or vat or still doth drain
Beside Ohio, Loire or castled Rhine,

Wherein to all the world now drink a health,
With wishes large of joy, and of love's wealth.

HELD IN ADAMANTINE CHAINS.

The Victim of Alcohol Is Powerless to Help Himself.

Drunkenness is the hydra headed demon that not only destroys homes and sunders family ties, but it fills suicides' graves and potters' fields. It fills almhouses to overflowing, workhouses, reform schools, inebriate asylums, insane asylums, jails and penitentiaries that are supported at public expense.

Society must of necessity pay very dearly for the protection that it is compelled to invoke against the victims of drink.

There never was a time better suited for public consideration of this vital subject than the present. To determine the part that intemperance, directly or indirectly, plays among the causes which have produced the exceptional wail of distress that is sweeping over the land today would doubtless result in making this feature very prominent.

If alcoholic poisoning confined its withering blight to the lower classes; if it were only the poor laboring man whose home is wrecked, only the poor man's hard earned dollars that go to feed the flames kindled by the insatiate monster, drink, then society might be indifferent, might complacently fold its hands and pay out of its public coffers for the care of this parasitic element

But it is the brain as well as the brawn of the country that is jeopardized by alcohol. The palace of the wealthy is no more exempt from the visitations of this specter than is the poverty stricken home. Wherever it enters a household it takes joy out of it and fixes upon it a dark, impenetrable shadow. From the standpoint of human sympathy, who is more deserving than the confirmed inebriate? His sufferings are beyond the power of voice or pen to describe. All his most earnest endeavors, all his promises to reform, are as chaff before the wind, with every organ and every tissue of his body and brain saturated with alcohol. The man condemned to wear the ball and chain is no more fettered than one held in the grip of the poisonous power of alcohol.—M. Peck in Banner of Gold.

An Appeal to Irishmen.

No people bury beneath the wreck which alcohol produces brighter and more valued virtues. Were we all sober, for our noble gifts of mind and heart we could challenge the admiration of the world. Our temporal and social prosperity would be at once assured. The pity, oh, the pity that the great Irish race, amid the wondrous opportunities which America unfolds, should not rise to its full stature in the glory of earth and heaven! What are its hopes? The best—if we remember the lessons of Ireland's great benefactor, Rev. Theobald Mathew. What are its hopes? I have none—if we continue to pay tribute to alcohol. Did I not read aright the signs of the times when I believe that the Irish people are determined to give battle to this inveterate foe and to honor themselves by their strict adhesion to temperance I would, for my own part, abandon all efforts to raise them and fold my hands in despair. As we love our race, as we would gain for Irishmen honor from our fellow citizens of other nationalities, as we would brighten the sky over the old island home itself, I beg of Irishmen to labor with me to hasten the day when no Irishmen will keep and no Irishman will patronize a saloon.—Archbishop Ireland.

A Hospital Without Alcohol.

The London Temperance hospital recently celebrated its twentieth anniversary. At first many looked upon the idea of a hospital without alcohol as a veritable craze of a few fanatics, but now the medical journals admit the success and also the importance of the experiment. And this experiment ought to be much better known to medical men than it is, for it gives a serious blow to a still fashionable doctrine regarding the necessity of alcohol in the treatment of disease. This hospital has 86 beds, and last year 1,036 patients were accommodated. In the out patient department 5,104 new cases were dealt with, while the new accident and emergency cases amounted to 4,969. The surgeon, Dr. Collins, who came from St. Bartholomew's, and who has been in the hospital now for five years, declares that, though not an abstainer himself, the 2,000 cases—1,000 of them operations—that have passed through his hands have suffered nothing from the nonadministration of alcohol.—Exchange.

Fewer Saloons In Chicago.

According to the statement of an attache of the city government, there were 1,500 less saloons licensed in Chicago the first 11 days of August—the time for reissuing licenses—than during the corresponding days of 1893. "It's an ill wind that blows nothing good." If these distressingly hard times will succeed in wiping out the saloons, we can endure them with more grace than though they did not affect our greatest enemy—the liquor traffic.—Union Signal.

A Young Man of Good Habits.

A good old gentleman who was strongly opposed to tobacco chewing and to liquor drinking met a lady friend in a car recently, and their conversation was as follows:

"Have you any children, madam?"

"Yes, sir; a son."

"Ah, indeed! Does he smoke?"

"No, sir; he has never as much as touched a cigarette."

"So much the better, madam. The use of tobacco is a poisonous habit. Does he frequent the clubs?"

"He has never put his foot in one."

"Allow me to congratulate you. Does he come home late?"

"Never. He goes to bed directly after dinner."

"A model young man, madam, a model young man. How old is he?"

"Two months."—World's White Ribbon.

The Inebriate Is a Bad Citizen.

In society the alcoholic person plays a part to be deplored. He is a bad citizen either because he is constantly in conflict with authority and in a state of revolt with everything that does not suit the humor he may be in at the moment from the perturbed state of his nervous system, or else inversely at the time of reaction he passively acquiesces in whatever suggestion may be made to him. How large a share these defects have on some of the evils which afflict society only those can tell who have studied the subject long and patiently.—Professor Capitan.

Drunkenness is uncommon in Germany, but it must be remembered that German beer is not American beer, the former containing only 2 and the latter 5 per cent of alcohol. But even in Germany the dangers attending the too free use of beer are beginning to be recognized by the medical profession.—Exchange.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON IX, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 3.

Text of the Lesson, John xi, 30-45—Memory Verses, 33-36—Golden Text, John xi, 25—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

30. It is probable that all the events recorded in Luke x, 17, to xviii, 43, and also in John x, come between the last lesson and this, and that Jesus is now on His way to Jerusalem, shortly before the last passover. While He was beyond Jordan Lazarus took sick, and the sisters sent Him word, but instead of hastening to him He tarried two days in the same place, and not till Lazarus was dead and buried did He set forth to awake him out of sleep (verse 11). When Martha heard that He was coming, she went forth out of the town to meet Him, and afterward calling Mary secretly she, too, went forth out of the town, Jesus tarrying where Martha had met Him.

31. When the people in the house who had come together to comfort Martha and Mary saw Mary go forth hastily, not knowing that her sister had called her, they supposed she had gone to the grave to weep there. They must have been poor comforters, for they knew not the comfort of I Thess. iv, 16-18. How few seem to know it even now, for even at the funeral of a believer we have often heard a portion of the context, but seldom these words wherein the comfort lies, which assure us that any hour our departed loved ones in Christ may join us, and together we meet the Lord in the air.

32. Mary, coming where Jesus was, fell down at His feet, uttering the very same words which her sister had used (verse 21). Now if, as some teach us, the coming of the Lord means death, Martha and Mary should have said, Lord, we are so glad you came when our brother died, but they say that if He had come Lazarus would not have died.

33. He would not be troubled without a cause, and when we hear Him twice groaning in spirit in this lesson (see verse 38) we may be sure the cause was very great. What could it be? His dear friends whom He loved were in deep sorrow, and He felt sorry for them.

34. His inquiry, "Where have ye laid him?" confirms us in the thought that it was the work of death upon this dear friend whom Jesus loved (verse 3), which was in part at least the cause of the Saviour's groaning, and while He knew that He would surely raise up and restore Lazarus to his sisters, yet He felt deeply the work of the enemy and saw it in all its terrors and horrors from Abel to the very end.

35. "Jesus wept." Shortest verse in the Bible, but who can tell its breadth and length and depth and height? On three different occasions Jesus is said to have wept. See Luke xix, 41; Heb. v, 7. In the former text we see His sorrow for those who, by their unbelief, were bringing untold sufferings upon themselves, but into the meaning of the latter we cannot pretend to enter.

36. "Behold how He loved him." God is love, and all the love of Jesus was the manifestation of the love of God. "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent His only begotten Son into the world that we might live through Him" (I John iv, 9).

37. They have not forgotten the unheard of wonder of the opened eyes of the man who was born blind. Possibly they had heard of the two resurrections in the north country, of the little girl and the widow's son. Like Martha and Mary, they feel that, if Jesus had only been present, He might have prevented Lazarus from dying, but it is too late now, for he is dead and buried, and neither of the others had been buried.

38. They are now at the grave, or cave, with a stone upon it, and again He groans within Himself. We are reminded of the words in Rom. viii, 23, "Ourselves, also, which have the first fruits of the spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves waiting for the adoption—to wit, the redemption of our body."

39. The stone is between Him and the dead body of His dear friend, and that they can take away. It is ours to take away everything that may be between Jesus and the soul that is dead in sins. No matter who may object, because of the seeming impossibilities of the case, let us get away all the obstacles and bring the sinner face to face with Jesus.

40. The greatest of all hindrances is unbelief. In one place He could because of this do no mighty works, and it is unbelief that both keeps sinners under condemnation and keeps saints from entering into rest (John iii, 18; Heb. iii, 19). In spite of feelings or circumstances or all that our eyes can see we must believe God. To the man whose little girl had just died, Jesus said, "Be not afraid, only believe" (Mark v, 36). In the storm at sea, when it seemed as if the vessel must go down with all on board, and there was nothing to rest upon but the word of the messenger, Paul said, "I believe God."

41. The stone being taken away, Jesus glorifies His Father by acknowledging Him as the one who was about to work, and He thanks Him beforehand for the answer. Hear Him also thanking the Father in Math. xi, 25; Luke x, 21. He ever made it manifest that the words and works were not His, but those of the Father who sent Him. He would have us to believe and make it manifest to all that "it is God who worketh in us both to will and to do of His good pleasure" (Phil. ii, 13).

42. He always pleased the Father; the Father always heard Him, because He sought only the Father's will and glory (John vi, 38; viii, 29, 50). It is our privilege to be well pleasing in His sight, and so to abide in Him that we may ask what we will and receive it (Heb. xiii, 21).

43. The same voice that said in the beginning, "Let there be light;" that spoke to Israel from out of the mist of the fire on the mount; that spoke and it was done, commanded, and it stood fast; that same voice now cries, "Lazarus, come forth!"

44. The mighty word gave life, and suddenly he that had been dead stood at the mouth of the cave alive and well. What a word it was, what a word it is! There is nothing like it on earth. God is in it. The Bible, the word of God, not only was inspired, but is inspired. It is forever settled in heaven, it is true from the beginning, and it shall stand forever (Ps. cxix, 89, 160; Isa. xl, 8).

45. Many will still believe on Jesus when they see real life and liberty in those who bear the name of Jesus, but a mere name to live where there is no real life will never honor Christ nor win people to Him. But as in the context this miracle stirred up the hatred of those who were merely religious without any reality we may be sure that real life will work just that way still.

ISAAC PUSEY GRAY IS DEAD.

Minister to Mexico Dies of Pneumonia at the Mexican Capital.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 15.—Minister Isaac P. Gray died at 7:05 last evening. He was unconscious when he arrived here and he died without regaining consciousness. United States Minister Gray arrived here yesterday morning with a severe case of pneumonia. The Pullman car conductor found him unconscious at 2 a. m. He was carried from the train on a stretcher to the American hospital. Dr. Bray was in attendance, and informed Mrs. Gray that he would not live the day out. Consul General Crittenden was with him to the end. He had been sick all the way down from St. Louis.

ISAAC P. GRAY.

[Isaac Pusey Gray was born in Chester county, Pa., Oct. 1828. His ancestors all belonged to the Society of Friends, his great grandfather having emigrated from England with William Penn, and settled in Chester county. His parents moved from Pennsylvania to Urbana, O., in 1836; thence to Montgomery county in 1839; thence to New Madison, Darko county, in 1842. There they died. Isaac Gray received a common school education, and being ambitious and of studious habits he early entered upon the study of law.

His poverty, however, compelled him to accept a clerkship in a mercantile house at New Madison. Here his close application and striet integrity soon raised him to a partnership in the business and in a few years he became sole proprietor of the establishment. In 1855 he removed his family to Union City, Ind., where he resided for many years, and where after successfully continuing the mercantile business for a few years he entered upon the practice of law.

Mr. Gray's war record was good. He was colonel of the Fourth Indiana cavalry and recruited the One Hundred and Forty-seventh infantry. He was elected to congress in 1866, and two years later to the state senate. He acted with the Republicans during the war but since 1871 had been a Democrat. In 1876 he was elected lieutenant governor by the Democrats and in 1884 governor. Since then he had practiced law until appointed minister to Mexico. He was influential in Indiana politics and very courteous in address.

CHICAGO, Feb. 18.—Donald H. Chapman, Democratic challenger in the Thirty-fourth ward, has been found guilty on charge of conspiracy to prevent legal voters from exercising their rights at the general election in November last and sentenced by a jury in Judge Tuley's court to a year and six months in the penitentiary. He challenged nearly every Republican voter who offered to vote.

NO MEXICO-GUATEMALA WAR.

The Two Countries Arrive at a Basis of Agreement Without a Fight.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 15.—The Guatemala question is at last amicably settled upon an equitable basis between the two republics. The boundary between the two countries will be definitely determined upon and a war indemnity is agreed to by Gautemala, who will also pay damages for Mexican property destroyed. Guatemala's official acceptance of Mexico's conditions will arrive here next week and will be immediately published. This will permanently terminate the famous jembroglio between Mexico and Guatemala.

Was Short and Blew His Brains Out.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Feb. 16.—A. M. Legg, traveling auditor of the Wabash railway, and W. R. Buckmaster, traveling accountant of the Pacific Express company, arrived at Riverton, this county, to investigate the accounts of the agent, C. J. Bowman, who had been short in remittances. Bowman remarked to them that he was short in his accounts and that he would get the amount from friends, and left the station. Some time elapsed and the officials sent a man to find Bowman. The latter was found lying in a box car with his brains blown out. He had suicided. Bowman was 25 years old and leaves a young wife whom he married two years ago, in Concord, Ills., and a baby. His parents reside at Meredosia, Ills.

MISS FLAGG'S
LATEST NEW BOOK!

"A Prisoner of Hope."

COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.

Price, $1.25.

We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident. In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy, postage prepaid.

RAMSEY'S SHORTAGE.

HEAVY CLAIM AGAINST THE LATE TREASURER'S ESTATE.

Total Aggregates Nearly $500,000, of Which His Bondsmen Come in for $363,539.52—The Recently Failed Selter Banking Firm Gets $243,778.52.

CARLYLE, Ills., Feb. 13.—The people of this place were astounded when it was made public that Rufus Ramsey, who was state treasurer preceding Henry Wulff, and who died suddenly some three months ago, was short to the state $363,539.52. The fact should have become known to Wulff when he took office, but Ramsey's bondsmen suppressed it in the hope of getting their money back from Ramsey's estate. Now within a week over $500,000 in claims have been filed against the estate, including those of the bondsmen, who are five Chicago bankers. To pay this large sum there are 2,000 acres of land which it is estimated will bring $100,000.

When the bondsmen filed their claim in the county court for $363,539.52 the amount was so stupendous Judge Jones refused to allow it until further proof of its correctness was filed. This was done on Feb. 9, when an itemized statement of the amounts abstracted by Ramsey from the state treasury was put in the hands of the court. It showed that Ramsey had begun tampering with state funds seven days after taking office. He was sworn in Jan. 3 and on Jan. 11, 1893, he helped himself to $25,000. One form of his embezzlement was to take cash from the state funds and turn in a personal due bill, having it charged up as cash, all others being much the same.

On Jan. 19 he took $15,000; Jan. 24, $20,000; March 4, $5,000; May 10, $13,000; June 6, $5,600; June 21, $5,000; July 21, $12,000, and so on down the year. His last withdrawal in 1893 was Nov. 11, when he took $4,761. For a whole year, then, there was a total intermission, so far as the itemized statement of the bondsmen shows, and then there comes one more, the last, $10,000 taken Nov. 8. The claim of the bondsmen, $363,539.52, will have to be paid before any of the other sums can be satisfied. It is what is known as the sixth class trust funds, while depositors' claims are in the seventh class.

WAS INVOLVED WITH HENRY SEITER.

The Failed Banking Firm Owes Ramsey Personally Nearly $250,000.

Together with the claim was a paper connecting Ramsey with Henry Seiter, the Lebanon, Ills., banker who failed so disastrously just after Ramsey's death. This paper shows that the banking firm of Henry Seiter & Co. owed Ramsey, personally the sum of $243,778.52. The first note was drawn Sept. 5, 1893, for $181,278.52. It was the largest one drawn. The others ranged from $3,000 to $15,000. The last one was drawn Oct. 31, 1894, and was for $3,400. The first is written in the regular form of a note, but the others are in the form of due bills with no date of maturity given.

These notes and due bills were in the treasury together with his own due bills, representing cash. There were also due bills from the Napa Land company amounting to $4,400. These three amounts made up the sum total which the bondsmen were obliged to make good. In addition to the claim of $363,539.52 made by the bondsmen claims of merchants and farmers of Carlyle and Iron counties have been filed in the county court, the entire indebtedness up to date amounting to $468,278.85, while the estate is probably not worth over $200,000, including the assets of Seiter, which can be held.

Wulff Knew Nothing of the Deficit.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Feb. 13.—Treasurer Wulff was seen and had little to say when confronted with the developments at Carlyle. He said Ramsey's son had accounted to him for everything. If there was a shortage Ramsey's bondsmen made it good before he (Wulff) took the office. Wulff had no other course than to receipt for everything, as the funds in the office were as they should be.

MONSTER PETITION.

White Ribboners Will Present It to President and Congress.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—Devotional exercises conducted by Mrs. Helen M. Barker, the national treasurer of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and other prominent women took up a large portion of the first session of the convention of White Ribbon women under the management of the W. C. T. U. in the Metropolitan M. E. church yesterday. This gathering is to present a petition to President Cleveland—as a starter—asking for the total prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages; that is the pith of it and what it means—governmental prohibition. The petition will also be presented to congress and then it is proposed to take it around the world.

The petition itself is something remarkable. It had its origin in a visit Miss Frances Willard paid to Chinatown, San Francisco, and was gotten up by women who went round the world and obtained signatures in every country thereof (nearly). The petition contains names representing 6,000,000 people, the total number of names actually on the rolls being about 1,100,000. It therefore beats the great Chartist petition gotten up in England asking the repeal of the corn laws, for that had but 1,000,000 names The petition is festooned around the walls of the church and there is altogether about a mile of it.

La Gascogne Is Safe.

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—With three tugs hanging on before towing her to a safe harbor, La Gascogne, the French liner whose missing condition has made so many hearts heavy for a week, swung into quarters outside the bar at Sandy Hook last night at 11:21 with all on board well, and the words "Thank God!" were on the lips of hundreds who had relatives on board and in the hearts of thousands of others who had no interest in the ship's fate save that which sprung from human sympathy. It was 4:15 p. m. when La Gascogne was first sighted off Fire Island and 6:30 before the lookout was sure it was her.

Canrobert Was Out for Blood.

PARIS, Feb. 14.—A duel was fought between Lieutenant Marcel Canrobert, son of the late Marshal Canrobert, and M. Hubbard, a Socialist member of the chamber of deputies. The combat arose from an expression used in the chamber by M. Hubbard during the debate on the credit for the marshal's funeral. The fight was with swords in the outskirts of Paris. M. Hubbard received a deep wound in the chest.

BROOKLYN TROLLEY STRIKE OFFICIALS ISSUE AN ADDRESS.

In Which It Is Claimed That the Companies Are to Blame, Thanks Are Given to Those Who Helped the Strikers and an Appeal Is Made for the Destitute.

BROOKLYN, Feb. 18.—In calling off the strike on the Brooklyn Heights and the Brooklyn, Queens County and Suburban railways, district assembly No. 75 has issued the following address "To the public:"

"Acting in behalf of their employes, we presented to the officials of the Brooklyn Heights and the Brooklyn, Queens County and Suburban Railway companies certain requests for improved conditions of labor on their roads for the year 1895. Subsequently these requests, which were never other than of the most reasonable nature, were modified so as to leave the companies no excuse for a failure to come to agreements with their employes. We have exhausted every honorable means to effect a friendly settlement.

Complains of the Company Officials.

"But the trolley officials assumed a most uncompromising attitude and refused to make a single concession in response to our reasonable requests. They went further, and so far from improving the condition of their employes they insisted upon terms less favorable than they had made without protest in 1894 and previous years. Their exactions forced their employes to suspend labor on Jan. 14 last. Since then there never has been a day on which the men have not been willing to go more than half way in an endeavor to adjust amicably a difficulty that entailed hardship on the employes as well as incalculable loss and inconvenience to the public.

Lack of Consideration for the Public.

"The companies have not had the same consideration for the public; the same spirit of compromise. They started out to starve their employes into submission, and they have finally succeeded. It has been a fight of dollars against empty stomachs, and as was to have been expected the dollars have won the victory, though a dear one. Our people, after a heroic resistance, have at last submitted to the inevitable. The civil, the military, and in some instances the judicial powers have all been used to coerce them. We desire to return our most sincere thanks to the organizations and individuals who have in any way aided our people during the strike, and hope our sympathizers will never feel the power of corporate oppression.

Many of the Strikers Destitute.

"Many of our people still need assistance to keep the wolf of hunger from their doors. A little from the many will suffice, and any citizen, society or newspaper that will help our people in this respect will receive the best thanks of all, with the hope that the time will yet come when equal rights will be accorded to all, special privileges to none, and that all will stand equal before the law.

"We remain most respectfully,

Still On Against Norton.

This action on the part of district assembly 75 will permit the strikers of thirty-three roads to return to work, or at least apply to be taken back. The strike against President Norton, of the Atlantic avenue line, is still on.

What the Trouble Has Cost.

President Lewis, of the Brooklyn Heights Railroad company, said that during the day about 600 of the old men had applied for work. A number of them, he added, had been received back into the fold and others had had their names put on the eligible list. The strike has lasted thirty-four days and a moderate estimate of its cost is $3,000,000. Assembly No. 75, K. of L., had about $75,000 on hand at the start, which has gone, with about the same amount subscribed by sympathizers. The men have lost $350,000 in wages, and it has cost the state $250,000.

FARM FIELD AND GARDEN

SUBSOILING AND IRRIGATION.

Let Deep Subsoiling Precede Irrigation Wherever the Subsoil Is Hard.

One of the great questions of the day, and one which is enlisting the thoughts of many of our wise philosophers, is the question, "How shall we avoid the damaging effects of a drought, such as this otherwise favored country of ours passed through last summer?" While facts and figures apparently prove that irrigation must play an important part in the solution of this question in many sections, Kansas Farmer thinks it will be wise not to ignore the fact that deep subsoiling should precede irrigation wherever the subsoil is hard. Then the facts and figures would be simply astounding for the satisfactory settlement of this question.

As a rule, says the authority referred to, the subsoil immediately underlying the cultivated top soil has become exceedingly hard, rendered thus by action of rain carrying fine sediment into it, and being so short a distance from the surface the moisture has all been evaporated from it time and again, so that finally it has become cemented together, every pore effectually stopped and rendered practically waterproof, except where cracked open by shrinkage. This is largely the condition of the subsoil everywhere, and to irrigate such ground without first subsoiling would be a failure, and worse than a failure if done in a hot, dry spell, with no clouds to protect from the blazing sunshine. It would evaporate so quickly that the top soil would be baked so hard that cultivation would be a most difficult operation, and the soil would be left in a worse condition than before.

But how reasonable and evident is the fact, to every one who will take the time to consider the question to any extent, that deep subsoiling would furnish a storehouse for water, by irrigation or rainfall, in the right place to protect the crops from all damage by drought. The advice is therefore given to buy a good subsoil plow which will tickle old Mother Earth so deeply that she will respond with a bountiful harvest when irrigation follows.

The Farmers' Institutes.

The season for farmers' institutes is here. Of all plans yet tried Wisconsin's is probably the most successful. There the work is under the direction of the college of agriculture, with a competent superintendent in charge. In some states the state board of agriculture has control, while in others a certain sum is given each county society which is used for institute purposes. But in many places this work, if accomplished at all, must be pushed by a few of the leaders in the community. While it is well to rely largely upon home talent, the best interests of the farmers' institute demand a few speakers from abroad, says American Agriculturist, which advises a short session full of brief pointed papers and free enthusiastic discussion.

Much of life's misery is due to indigestion; for who can be happy with a pain in his stomach? As a corrective and strengthener of the alimentary organs, Ayer's Pills are invaluable, their use being always attended with marked benefit.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

Proceedings of the National Lawmakers in Both Houses.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Cullom presented in the senate memorials asking congress to annihilate the train robber and wrecker. The resolution for popular election of senators was reported adversely. The finance committee reported a bill for unrestricted coinage of silver, the government to get the seigniorage. A joint resolution was reported extending the time for collection of the income tax. Peffer wanted a report on his resolution questioning the legality of the recent bond issue, and said he knew more about the law than the attorney general. Stewart made a free silver speech, and Allen discussed the Alabama election. Morgan and Pugh protested against any senate proceedings on the subject. The postoffice appropriation was considered without action, and a number of pension bills were passed.

In the house there was a rush to get action on local bills. Among the bills and resolutions passed were those returning war flags to certain Michigan regiments; donating condemned cannon to Des Moines Iowa; incorporating the National Association of Florists. The legislative appropriation bill was taken up and much debate was had on the question of dismissals of veterans from the pension office. The bill was completed in committee and reported to the house, which struck out the amendment giving members' clerks a yearly salary. The bill was was passed.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—The senate took up the postoffice appropriation bill spending its time on the proposition to have the government own railway postal cars. Vilas offered a bill authorizing the treasury to sell gold bonds and Sherman a bill for gold bonds and temporary gold certificates. A call was made on the president for a copy of the contract with the bankers. The house resolution extending the time for making returns on the income tax to April 15 was agreed to.

The house devoted the day to business relating to the District of Columbia, and with but one exception was featureless. Van Voorhis waned to call on the president for the contract with the bankers for the new loan, when Wilson informed the house that the resolution the ways and means committee would report on the gold bond matter would contain a copy of the contract. Wilson shortly after presented a resolution providing for 5 per cent. gold bonds and with it a report and the desired contract.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The senate in consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill voted against any changes in the railway mail system, but failed to pass the bill. A long letter was received from Secretary Carlisle giving information of the condition of the treasury.

In the house the only business done was the adoption of a rule to discuss and vote on the gold bond resolution and then the refusal to pass the resolution to third reading by a vote of 167 to 120, thus killing the third attempt to relieve the treasury on the basis advocated by the administration.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18. — A storm of financial debate swept over the senate, exceeding in intensity any discussion the upper branch of congress has had in many days. It was brought on by Hill's advocacy of his resolution defining the policy of the government for bimetallism and for paying its obligations in the best money in use. During the debate Wolcott declared the president had injured the country's credit by letting 5 per cent. bonds go at such a small premium. Lodge said the contract with the syndicate was the blackest financial act in history. Teller, Stewart and others talked. The agricultural appropriation was briefly considered.

The house concluded the general debate on the naval appropriation bill, agreed to the senate amendments for the sale of isolated tracts of public lands, reducing the minimum price for such lands from $2.50 to 1.25 per acre, passed twelve pension bills and a bill to give two condemned cannon to the Iowa Historical society. The senate amendments to the postoffice appropriation bill were disagreed to. The remainder of the day was devoted to eulogies on the life and character of the late Senator Colquitt, of Georgia.

Story of Outrage on an American Citizen Told at San Francisco.

He was strung up by the thumbs at intervals from noon until 6 p. m. He fainted several times, but was revived and again put to the torture, until in his agony he told what he knew. A young native was also tortured by being placed in a tank of ice-cold water and kept there until nearly dead.

POOR OF COOK COUNTY, ILLS.

One Hundred and Fifty Thousand People Who Require Assistance.

CHICAGO, Feb. 18.—The condition of the poor in Cook county is most serious according to a report made by the outdoor relief committee at the meeting of the county beard. The report was in the nature of a defense of the county agent's office against charges of dishonesty recently made by a Chicago organization. The report showed that during the month of January there were 1,200 more applications for relief than in January, 1894; that 50,000 persons had been supported at their homes at the public expense, and it was estimated that there are 150,000 persons in Chicago who required assistance to avoid starvation.

Many are said to be industrious persons who have been out of employment until their credit and resources are exhausted. Many more are in danger of being evicted from their homes by landlords who are also hard pressed for money. The county is maintaining 7,022 families, caring for 367 cases of illness, and has relieved 600 cases of individual distress.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.....16

We are unable, this week, to say more about the forthcoming State Anti-secrecy Convention at St. Paul, Minn., than that it will be held (D. V.) March 27 and 28. We hope to present the program and further particulars in next week's Cynosure. In the meantime, let our friends in that State continue to hope and pray that it may be an abounding success, productive of the best results.

The United Presbyterian is not pleased with the Pope's expressed regard for the United States. Quoting Satolli's recent remarks in Philadelphia—"I need not tell you how dear to the heart of the holy father is the church in America. I need not tell you the admiration he has for this great American republic and all her institutions"—it sees in all this "a part of the Jesuitical craft by which it is hoped to gain a stronger political footing here" for the mercenary Roman church. One thing is certain—no nation on earth is safe that does not resist the Jesuits. Germany is manfuliy fighting to keep them out of her territory, and the United States may profit by her example.

With an ambiguity that suggests either ignorance or prejudice, one of our religious exchange papers expresses the opinion that "societies, whether secret or not, are organized for the purpose of raising or lowering the moral standard of humanity." Just so. If a society has no other object than that of raising the moral standard of humanity, it need not resort to secret ceremonies and cruel penalties to maintain its organization and purpose. It is the secret societies that beget suspicion in the public mind as to their aims and practices; and it is safe to say that in nine cases out of ten such suspicions are justifiable, since no work that God and Christ can approve will resort to secrecy, which is only one of the elements of vice.

A case is reported from Green Bay, Wis., which is worthy of the Society of Jesuits, and it would not be strange to learn that it originated in that subtle organization. A Pole had been arrested for some crime not mentioned. He was a Roman Catholic. The sheriff was also a Roman Catholic. The evidence against the prisoner was not sufficiently strong to suit the sheriff, who employed a Roman Catholic friend to personate a priest, go to the cell of the prisoner and induce him to confess. The strategem succeeded. For hypocrisy and meanness we have heard nothing to match this since the days of the Spanish Inquisition.

The recent anti-secrecy convention at Humboldt, Neb., seems to have been far-reaching in its influence. Rev. J. P. Stoddard writes from Boston, last week: "The Cynosure came to us at the dinner-table to-day. We read it with interest, and especially do we rejoice in the report of God's presence in the power of his Holy Spirit in the Nebraska convention. Years have elapsed, but my recollections of that city and the response to my lecture, served up with eggs in regular Masonic style, is still fresh in memory. I rejoice that a brighter and better day has dawned upon Humboldt." It was an occasion long to be remembered with thankfulness and pleasure.

In addition to the particulars of the Holt county (Neb.) lynching affair referred to in our issues of February 7 and 21, the Omaha (Neb.) Christian Advocate, of February 9, supplies the following intelligence: "The preliminary trial of Mullihan, Eliott, Harris and Roy, the men arrested, for the murder of Barrett Scott, was held at Oneill last week. Although the evidence was conclusive, Mrs. Scott and Miss McWhorter identifying the men positively, Judge McCutchon admitted the accused to bail and they were allowed to go to their homes. It is a question whether these members of a secret organization, which has more than once been guilty of murder, can be convicted in Holt county. They should be tried in some place sufficiently removed from the influence of the 'vigilantes.'" The lodge rules.

Word comes from the chairman of the Ohio State Association's committee, Rev. S. P. Long, at Columbus, and also from the Ohio State Treasurer, W. B. Sterrett, at Cedarville, Greene Co., indicating that progress is being made in that State. A meeting of the State committee, it is stated, will soon be called to plan for the furtherance of the cause. Two ladies who earn their livelihood by sewing contributed, from their scanty means, one dollar each toward the State fund; and it is notable that, with few exceptions, the money raised for the support of reforms is given by those who are in very limited or medium circumstances. Our friends in Ohio will be glad to learn that advancement in the work is purposed. To this end funds should be sent to the State Treasurer at once, that progress may be continuous. If each friend who has not recently contributed for this purpose will help a little, with God's blessing much may be accomplished.

A few weeks ago the American Protective Association was made the subject of a newspaper symposium in Boston. Several clergymen of various denominations contributed their opinions. The question under discussion was: "Has the A. P. A. a patriotic mission?" A Jewish Rabbi, a Jesuit priest, a Roman Catholic professor in Harvard College, an Episcopalian minister, and the Rev. Minot J. Savage, all declared the association unpatriotic and un-American. The latter said: "It is animated with the spirit of antagonism, and is antiquated and un-American. That sort of thing does not belong to this age." This is the plain truth.

While it is true that the American Protective Association is un-American, antiquated, and not in accordance with the spirit of the age and the principles of good government on account of its secret plottings, and on these accounts deserves opposition, we must not shut our eyes to the important truth that it has already become a more potent factor in our partisan politics than is generally admitted. In its own wild flights it might not be greatly feared, but in its evident combination with a majority of so-called Republican politicians, the Freemasons and its sympathizing "patriotic" sister societies, it is expected to develop a surprising anti-Catholic influence in the approaching spring elections. There is a general opinion, fostered by these influences and recent events, that Rome has sinister designs upon our government and national institutions that will lead thousands of voters untrammelled by partisan motives or religious scruples to vote with the anti-Catholics; and the contest, whatever may be its results, promises to be exciting, both in Chicago and elsewhere. The signs of the times portend anything but peace.

From the Catholic Review we learn that a new "national organization, called the Protestant Knights of America, has been formed to be to Protestantism—so we are told—what the Catholic Knights of America is to Roman Catholicism." The Review then proceeds to tell us that "the Catholic Knights of America is not a church society. It is simply a mutual insurance company, gotten up by laymen, and having a uniform, with waving plumes and glittering swords and all the other trappings of warriors bold only for decorative purposes for the enjoyment of those persons who are attracted by such pomp and panoply. The Protestant Knights of America, in addition to their fraternal insurance features, seem to be banded together to antagonize their fellow-citizens of Catholic belief, and they proclaim their purpose to defend the public schools and to wave the star spangled banner." On the whole the new society seems to be based on "patriotism" and secretism for revenue only; but why does the Catholic Knights of America adopt militarism for display, if it is only a "mutual insurance company?" It is not in harmony with the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, whom the Catholics profess to worship.

THE TWO RELIGIONS OF THE BIBLE.

BY REV. C. POWERS.

As for the Bacchanalian mysteries to which Paul "no doubt refers," according to Dr. Clarke, Bacchus was the hero-god of the Greeks. But we will let the General History of Freemasonry, by Rebold, tell us what connection Bacchus has with Hiram Abiff in Masonry. On page 392 we read: "A very limited knowledge of the history of primitive worship and mysteries is necessary to enable any person to recognize in the Master Mason Hiram, the Osiris of the Egyptians, the Mithras of the Persians, the Bacchus of the Greeks, the Atys of the Phrygians, of which these people celebrated the death and resurrection."

According to this, when in the Masonic ceremony of pretending to kill and resurrect Hiram Abiff, in the person of the initiate, to the third degree in Masonry, the Bacchus of the Greeks is recognized as well as the other gods mentioned; and from Bacchus came the "Bacchanalian mysteries." Mackey is equally plain in bringing out the oneness of Hiram and Bacchus. "In Mackey's Masonic Symbolism," page 20, we read: "One thing at least is incapable of refutation, and that is that we are indebted to the Tyrian Masons for the introduction of the symbol of Hiram Abiff. The idea of the symbol, although modified by the Jewish Masons, is not Jewish in its inception. It was evidently borrowed from the pagan mysteries, where Bacchus, Adonis, Proserpine and a host of others apotheosized beings play the same role that Hiram Abiff does in the Masonic mysteries."

Some of my readers doubtless know what role Hiram plays in the Masonic mysteries, and Mackey says that Bacchus of the Greeks "played the same role." Is not that making it evident that they are all of one kind? Keep in mind that Paul says of the Bacchanalian mysteries: "It is a shame to speak of the things that are done of them in secret." Notice that in the quotation from Rebold's History he says the worshipers "celebrated the passion, death and resurrection" of their gods Osiris, Bacchus and others. Put that with what Albert G. Mackey says in the books that are open to all, and without going to the opposers of Masonry the evidence is clear that every initiate to the third, or Master Mason, degree in Masonry has to be put through a mock death and resurrection ceremony, as did the initiates into the mysteries of Bacchus.

Thus the proof is overwhelming that the death and resurrection ceremony played on the candidate for the Master Mason's degree in Freemasonry is a continuation and "development of ancient sun-worship," so abominated of the Lord, as we have seen outlined in the eighth chapter of the prophecy of Ezekiel, and was still practiced in the days of Paul: "The Eleusinian and Bacchanalian mysteries which were performed in the night and darkness were known to be so impure (especially the latter) that the Roman senate banished them both from Rome and Italy."

Yet, according to the Masonic authors, the chief or most significant portion of the secret religious ceremonies are the rites in the Master Mason degree.

It is in reference to these ceremonies that we find in Oliver's Signs and Symbols of Freemasonry, page 41: "But in the third degree the veil is removed; we are admitted to the holy of holies; we view the cherubim in all their brightness, and are blessed with a foretaste of heaven, through the resurrection of the dead."

Another Masonic writer, as we find in Sickels' Freemasons' Monitor, says: "We now find man complete in morality and intelligence, with the stay of religion added to insure him the protection of deity, and guard him against ever going astray. These three degrees thus form a perfect and harmonious whole; nor can we conceive that anything can be suggested more which the soul of man requires." Of course, no Christ is needed. Only come on until you go through this death and resurrection ceremony, representing Hiram Abiff, and you have "all that the soul of man requires."

Oliver's Signs and Symbols also says, page 76: "It is an extraordinary fact that there is scarcely a single ceremony in Freemasonry but we find its corresponding rite in one or the other of the idolatrous mysteries." Thus we have the clearest evidence possible to be had of anything, that the whole mass of religious symbolisms in "ancient craft" Masonry is the outgrowth and continuation of the ancient heathenish, legendary, mythical and false worships which the Word of God abominates and calls devil-worship. The satanic ingenuity by which many are led to "call evil good" is yet to be considered.

REVOLUTIONARY PEOPLE.

BY THE EDITOR.

He was a man of pronounced opinions against social and political evils. He was for prohibition, and against the secret lodge system. He kept the Sabbath holy, and worked hard the other six days of the week in honorable service. He believed the Bible and in the Saviour of men; he hated vice and rebuked it. He loved all goodness, and prayed for whatever he needed. He was honest and upright. In a word, he was a Christian and lived a Christian life.

"My experience," he said, "has thrown me, more or less, into association with 'cranks,' and ss I have come to be known as 'an old crank.' I acknowledge the impeachment. I am both old and a crank, and I consider the imputation honorable."

Then he proceeded, as follows, to give us his views of cranks and their mission:

The order of cranks embraces the hosts of the world's reformers—many of whom are now no longer cranks in their home in Paradise, but sons of God and inheritors of his kingdom forever.

When is a crank not a crank? As to this earth-life—never! The gibbet, the sword, or the stake, may claim him and yearn for his blood, but while his pulse continues to beat he does not cease to be a crank. As to his future, he lays off his mortality and assumes the garb of eternal life through Him who has loved us and washed us in his precious blood—cranks no more, but saints of the New Jerusalem.

To analyze the especial elements found in the true crank is a study worthy of a few moments' consideration.

1. Fidelity. Always true to the center-shaft of his existence, whether it be "mother, home, or heaven," the great interests of the human family, either in the household, the neighborhood, the state, the nation, the continent, or the world; in religion, politics, education, or social and intellectual advancement.

2. Strength. The crank is one of the truest emblems of strength. It is a lever with which Archimedes, having room on which to stand, might (with divine help) have set this globe spinning with increased velocity; with God's help, for no true crank would willingly oppose the ruling power of the Almighty. Strong as is the crank in philosophy and structure, without extraneous power applied to it, it is dead.

3 Utility. It moves whatever machinery to which it is properly attached, whether it be a little coffee mill or a world. Its mission may be small or great; but in usefulness it differs only in degree. The machinery, however nicely geared, cannot move without the crank. Hence its utility is established.

4. Stability. A good, well-furnished crank is always in place and ready for work, unless "there's a screw loose."

5. Momentum. "The quantity of motion in a moving body, being always proportioned to the quantity of matter multiplied into the velocity," furnishes the momentum. That is to say: By action it gathers velocity, which imparts impetus and energizes the entire machine. So the human crank, pursuing his vocation, becomes more and more in earnest and manifests increased energy. Hence he is accused of being "peculiar," when he is merely energetic in his revolutionary or reformatory power; and it is well known that revolution must precede true reform.

Ask a truly converted sinner, or a seceding Freemason, what process he underwent before he was saved from his sins or induced to leave the lodge, and you will find that his whole being was transformed by the divine power—a complete revolution—a turning from evil unto righteousness. "When the wicked man turneth away from the wickedness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive." The consequence is a complete change in the man's, or Mason's, whole existence.

6. Far-reaching results. Whether it be engaged in turning only a mill for the preparation of food for the body, or revolving ideas that shall overturn the world and open the floodgates of mighty minds for the outpouring of eternal truth, the crank's work may be productive of the most important and far-reaching results. Empires and thrones may totter and tumble; nations may spring into existence, or be blotted out forever; "men may come, and men may go," as Tennyson sings; but cranks go on forever. Luther's crankiness in his monastic cell brought on the glorious Reformation; John Knox's cry to God to give him Scotland drove terror and Romanism from highland and lowland, and saved that fair land from darkness and oppression. Cranky John Brown of Ossawatomie, with his handful of humble Abolitionists and their home-made spears, precipitated upon the country the war of the Rebellion, which liberated four millions of slaves, while he strove only for the emancipation of the few who came within his reach.

"The day of small things," the day of few cranks, of whispered prayers, of strange expressions, may be the prelude of an age of truth and justice.

But the crank has no power of himself. That must come from God, who alone can cast down Baal and Baal-worship, and by the word and hand of his chosen servant Elijah draw down fire and rain from heaven.

A NEW "LOYAL PATRIOTIC LEAGUE."

The instability and unworthiness of a secret society organized and maintained for selfish and partisan purposes is well-exemplified in the existence and character of the American Protective Association. Starting out as the boasting champion of the common free school and our other American institutions, it soon posed as an antagonist of Roman Catholics, and became extremely sectarian and partisan as a political party, while its secret methods aroused just suspicions as to its integrity and usefulness.

Its one great merit, as openly expressed, is to prevent the government of our republican institutions from passing into the control of the one-man power of the Roman hierarchy—a government to which the American people owe no religious or political allegiance. In this respect the A. P. A. is right; but in nothing else can right-minded American citizens support its claims as an honorable factor in our national polity.

Such partisan schemes, engineered in secret and by men of doubtful character and purpose, are not recognized as wholesome methods of sustaining good government. In the United States, the executive, legislative and judicial departments, representing the whole people, were established to frame just laws and enforce them openly; and it is a bad comment upon the founders of our government that their plans have so far failed that dark-lanterns and secret midnight councils have become necessary to perpetuate the principles of our national Constitution. If we are honest citizens, working for the best interests of our country and its people, let us be manly enough to unite openly and fearlessly to maintain our principles.

Such societies as the A. P. A. have not in them sufficient principle to insure longevity. The public, who cannot know what secret schemes the association, even ostensibly excellent, is plotting in its midnight councils, will consider themselves slighted and outcast, and begin to doubt the integrity of its purposes. Then, again, selfishness crops out in its own membership, offenses are charged, secessions ensue, new factions are formed, and the association eventually becomes emasculated, falls into disrepute and finally sinks into oblivion, as it justly deserves. The old Know-nothing party, the unworthy predecessor and prototype of the American Protective Association, is a case in point.

These reflections are revived by the latest secession from the A. P. A., as announced in the Chicago Times of Wednesday of last week. On Tuesday between eighty and ninety delegates, representing seventeen councils of the A. P. A., assembled in convention in this city. At this meeting, Prof. Walter Sims, formerly national organizer and lecturer of the A. P. A., read a letter making sensational charges against the officers of the parent organization, accusing them of corruption.

The meeting therefore proceeded to form a new society known as the "Loyal Patriotic League," denounced the A. P. A. officers as corrupt politicians, elected a corps of officers, with Prof. Sims for National President, and made a declaration of its principles, as follows:

Equal rights to every true citizen, regardless of color, creed, or former nationality.

The independence of the citizen voter, and to demand a better guarantee for protection thereof from all partisans, ecclesiastical and organized acts of coercion, intimidation and tyranny.

The Constitution of the United States, and of the several States, and the laws based thereon.

The citizen's right of appeal to the lawful courts of the country for protection from the overt acts of organizations, either civil or religious.

The absolute separation of the state from the church.

The protection of a nonsectarian public school system in which the paramount object is an education that will be conducive to the making of patriotic citizens, such citizens as will insure the perpetuation of constitutional government.

The absolute secrecy of the official ballot.

The prosecution and punishment of all offenders against the purity of the ballot.

The disfranchisement of the venal voters and those who buy and sell votes in the interest of persons, parties or organizations.

The naturalization of those foreigners only who can read and write our language and who have a reasonable understanding of our constitution and institutions, and who are willing to swear an allegiance to the government of the United States paramount to the claims of all forms of goverment, either of a social, civil, or religous character.

No foreigner shall be naturalized until he has had a continuous residence in the United States of five years.

No naturulized foreigner shall hold any office in the government of the United States, the several states and municipalities thereof, or the United States army and navy or any military organization of any character whatsoever.

No citizen shall be proscribed because of his religious belief from any of the privileges guaranteed to him by the Constitution of the United States, nor shall any organization, either secular or religious, be permitted to adopt any test whereby its members are obligated, coerced, or intimidated to act in violation of the constitutional provisions for the guarantee of religious liberty.

The indiscriminate immigration of foreigners into the United States to the great damage of the citizen labor class demands the immediate attention of Congress for its restriction.

All appropriations of public money, either by Congress, State Legislatures or municipalities, to sectarian schools, institutes, homes, hospitals, and church establishments of any character is a gross violation of the constitutional provision guaranteeing religious liberty and the severance of the church from the state, and should cease at once and forever.

Legislative enactments which grant privileges to a favored class to their enrichment and the impoverishment of the many is in violation of the constitution and a menace to good government and national prosperity.

Any organization, either civil or ecclesiastic, that violates in its constitution and obligations the independence of the citizen voter, the right of free speech, religious liberty, liberty of conscience, and the freedom of the press is a conspiracy against republican institutions.

Nothing is said of its being a secret society. That can be found out by any one who makes application for membership in it.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Christianity is a universal religion, teaching the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

Republican government means the rule of the majority under a written constitution and laws fairly expressed after due discussion.

If these definitions be accepted, the following questions would seem to be pertinent:

What proper use can be found for secret societies of any sort in a Christian republic?

Is the present tendency to division and subdivision of our people into such societies to go on indefinitely?

Is Christianity, the religion that emphasizes the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, to continue to exhibit to the world the shameful paradox of a social organism, honeycombed throughout all its parts by secret organizations isolated from others, and often warring against each other?

Is the unity of the church a baseless hope?

Is the brotherhood of the human race the false dictum of enthusiasts, the dream of sentimentalists?

These questions are in the thought of thinking men in many places at the present time. The papers of Washington Gladden and W. B. Hale, in recent issues of the Forum, are signs of the times, pointing to a careful and candid consideration of the facts, and we may hope to a reform that cannot come too soon to save our Christian civilization from an evil that threatens its destruction.

If some statistician would give us the statistics of secret societies in these United States of America, the figures would startle the most phlegmatic citizen. It is bewildering even to think of them—the "Unions," so called, the "Lodges," the "Knights of This," and the "Knights of That," the "Brotherhoods" that shut their brother members off from all their brother men who cannot give and take their grips and passwords.

The aggregate cost of these societies, if put before thinking men in round numbers, would be startling. Room rent, dues, regalia, jewels, benefits (so-called), and what not, swell an expenditure almost incalculable—and for what?

This secret societyism is a legacy that has come down to us from an earlier and darker time. Mr. Gladden most pertinently reminded us of the fact that secrecy is an element of success in war. It is out of place at any other time. War itself is a barbarism which the world will outgrow. The time is coming, according to prophecy, when the nations shall learn war no more. To doubt this would be to assume that a true civilization will never be reached on earth.

Secrecy, prima facie, is the sign of sinister intent in a republic like ours. Here we have the utmost freedom of speech and of the press. The resort to secret political organizations is confession that our free institutions have failed. To discard the political methods born of freedom is to surrender that freedom. Have free institutions failed in our country? I am not ready to make that admission. But I solemnly believe that if we carry this craze for secret societies much farther it will bring that catastrophe. There is a limit beyond which the body politic will not be able to survive further dismemberment.

The latest development of this secret societyism on a large scale is the American Protective Association. I do not know what are its secret pledges and purposes. (I "belong" to nothing but the Christian church and the human race). The advocates and assailants of that organization alike differ in their published statements concerning it. Though ostensibly originating in zeal for Protestantism, it seems to many to be a renunciation of Protestantism, the true Protestantism that stands for an open Bible and an open ballot. It is a stab at Protestantism in its fundamental principles.

Such organizations foster a spirit of suspicion inimical to good neighborhood and social fellowship. Darkness magnifies and distorts objects. The imagination runs wild where actual vision is shut out. Our political contests are bitter enough at best; superadd to this bitterness the suspicion and acrimony engendered by secret pledges and plottings, and our elections would sink to a hopeless depth.—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald in Methodist Review.

THE LODGE QUESTION—SPECIAL PLEADING.

Rome stands not alone in specious tactics. Elsewhere also Milanion drops golden apples into the pathway of Atalanta that he may win in the race. Mindful of his profits Demetrius cries: "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" Esau sells his birthright for a mess of pottage. Shall we, too, sacrifice to Diana because the odds seem against us? Did heroes of faith thus win victories of old or martyrs their crowns? Elijah the Tishbite currying favor with a Jezebel, John Baptist with Herodias, John of Patmos with Cerinthus, Luther with Zwingle, Cajetan and the Pope: conceive it—if you can. How befits it their character, profession and calling? As plasticity of clay would the granite, as duplicity toward the Master does a disciple. Preaching an extraordinary gospel, pursuing a policy practice, prophets and apostles would never have been chargeable with turning the world upside down. Much of convenient recourse to Christian liberty, charity, broader liberality, a more evangelical practice, is it not a euphemistic sophism to palliate defection that would screen itself behind a fig-leaf after all?

We seem to read between the lines of late the imputation that positiveness of testimony in the Word and practice against the blightful emanations hailing from deistic lodgery may be overdone; may absorb attention from noting other evils—and more palpably offensive—all round us; that the lodge question, perhaps least vital of all, has been sufficiently agitated and it were time that other matters of reform, especially the drink evil, should now claim our attention instead. The argument seems plausible. The closing suggestion has a show of reason. But is the position well taken, and are its deductions tenable? We think not.

Are we done with the lodge evil? Have we erroneously diagnosed its position and power as an engine of warfare in the kingdom of darkness, and wrongfully overdrawn its antagonism and hurtfulness to the kingdom of light? If so or if not, should discussion cease? If misapprehending, should we not wish to get into the clear, that we may do no injustice and may be freed in our fears from cares that burden? If correct in discernment and stand, must we not, in fealty to God and the cause of his Son, in love to our brother and to keep a good conscience, instruct, confirm and warn, testify and deny not? Did the cause of Christ ever suffer from unflinching investigation and fearlessness of testimony? In either case then the subject cannot be dropped, but the matter must be agitated so long as cause for agitation continues. And the tenor of the argument propounded is evidence in point that discussion is yet in place. Nor does it follow that energetic action in one direction is evidence of laxity in the other. Much less may we infer that that which is the more openly reprehensible is therefore the more uncompromisingly bad. And as to aggressiveness against the lodge or the saloon, is it not more to the taste of the average man to swim with the tide of popular reform than to breast the current of adverse opinion?

But, relatively considered, lodge, saloon and brothel, which is the most masked and invulnerable and subtilly pernicious? Of what cast of sin is it most difficult to convince the world? The Pharisee, righteous in self, the publican and harlot in the background as foil to enhance the excellency of his own moral code, for which had the Master the severer reproof and greater condemtion, for which the more tender hope? Proud, Christless, all-puissant, unregenerate self-sufficiency!—is this not the inner marrow of the lodge system, the secret spell of lodge infatuation, the sinister spirit of lodge arrogance?

The altar of deism, the vortex of drink, the social evil, against whom do they more directly militate, and under which table of the law would you try them? Do they not respectively fall into the category of faith and morals, and is not man the immediate subject of the one and Christ the target of the other? Should we not, in accordance with the provisions of the law, as illumined by the Gospel, make distinction between that which would dethrone Him whom the Father honors and in whom alone God is approachable—who is God incarnate, the only true God and everlasting life,—and that which destroys man made in his image? If the enormity of the latter rises in degree because of the relation of the creature to the Creator (1 Cor. 3, 16-19), what of the former that assails the being of the Son of God? Does it therefore not behoove us most zealously to guard our holy of holies in the sphere of faith as enjoined in the very first commandment of the fountain-head of all the law and of all holy living? Let Antichrist surreptitiously expunge God in Christ from the first table; what is then left to us? Maintain the integrity of the former in the light of the Gospel, and there is hope for the world! For who, speaking by the Spirit of God, makes light of sin against the second table? What apostle or prophet, however, ever pressed the obligations of the second to intercept in aught of its fullness and bearings the paramount first? As a sign of the times note a tendency in this direction: eclat in matters of moral reform, aversion to unpopular questions of faith—in deference to public opinion and as bid for public favor, even when the issue involved affects the Rock on which we stand!—Lutheran Standard.

"LET NOT YOUR HEART BE TROUBLED."

Sweetly floating down the centuries, come to us the tender words, "Let not your heart be troubled." Look up, faint toiler in this work-day life, and catch the music of this sentence as it falls from hallowed lips, "Let not your heart be troubled." Jesus says it to you. What love beams on his face! What tenderness! He knows how weak and frail you are. He sees that the path is narrow and rough. He sees that your feet are bleeding as you press along through the defile of poverty. He sees the parched lips; he hears the tremulous sigh, and he knows if it is for love of him, if indeed you are trying to follow in his way.

"Let not your heart be troubled." The path of life is short. Do you tread on thorns? Each step makes the way shorter; each day you are nearer laying your burden down.

"Let not your heart be troubled." You are going home. The care, and toil, and want of comfort, will all be forgotten as soon as you reach your Father's house. No more homesickness; no more reaching out for sympathy; no more weary, lonely hours.

"Let not your heart be troubled." "Where I am, there ye may be also." Look forward. Thy furnace heats will die away; the tests will all be tried; the gold will appear.

Have you lost friends?—He wishes to be beloved of your heart. Have you lost wealth?—It is that he may support you entirely. Are you sick?—He is the Physician. Are you a helpless widow?—Thy Maker is thy husband. Are you bereft of earthly kindred?—Jesus is your Elder Brother.

Do you suffer?—Lean upon him; he carries in his bosom those who are too feeble to walk by the way.

How tender is his love! "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." Rest upon Jesus.

"Let not your heart be troubled."—Selected.

CHINESE HUMBUG.

Our antipodean neighbors, the better we understand them, furnish us with numerous sources of entertainment by their grotesque peculiarities. We have seldom read anything about Chinese strategy more amusing than the following:

In 1861, when the British and French troops evacuated Pekin at the conclusion of peace: "See that?" said the Chinese, "they had to go away!" You will remember that, recently Chinese soldiers insulted the British flag on board the steamer Chunking. Well, last week the forts at Taku saluted the Chunking with twenty-one shots. But the Chinese declared that the forts fired at the English boat for "Look see" [make believe]; the Englishmen got frightened and made "chin-chin" with his flag. So Chinese "face" was saved again. Everything is for appearance only. The guns upon the ramparts of many cities are of wood, painted black for the sake of "look see," and the walls themselves, heavy and strong in appearance, are often only earthwork covered with a thin layer of stone. I have seen them build a railroad embankment of snow, covered with earth for the sake of appearance, and even the thick planks which the Chinese use for their coffins are often hollow. Whatever the outcome of the war, when peace is concluded, it will be said that Japan asked for peace; "face" will be saved, and that is the main thing to a Chinaman.—Foreign Journal.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Gen. Booth and Joseph Cook —The Geo. Peabody anniversary.—The Gothenburg system.—The Harvard faculty condemns base ball.—John G. Wooley at the National Reform Convention.

TWO REFORMERS.

Gen. Booth of the Salvation Army and Joseph Cook, on the same platform last Monday, was a sight that will be worth describing years hence, when both have gone to a city where there are no slums to reform and no social problems to solve. Vastly different as the two men are in their spiritual as well as physical make-up, they resemble each other in being both fighters, dealing blows against the powers of darkness that are equally telling. Mr. Cook's hymn last Monday — an original one is always sung by the audience to some familiar tune—was well entitled "A War Cry." The fourth stanza is a good specimen of the peculiar incisiveness which Joseph Cook never lacks, whether he speaks in prose or rhyme:

"Wolves within Thy human fold,
Turn Thou from their bloody quest;
Fiendishness in fetters hold,
Serpents slay in East and West;
Let thy lightnings cleanse with flame
All our heights and depths of shame."

GEN. BOOTH IS THE WESLEY OF THESE TIMES, and his band of devoted men and women more like the early Methodists than any other class of religious workers. In fact, it is more than likely that the founder of Methodism would find himself much more at home with Gen. Booth's people than with most of the M. E. churches as they now exist. The Army has become one of the grandest moral and spiritual forces in the world, but its military form, while it has developed and strengthened the movement in certain ways, is at the same time its greatest weakness. The soldier's spirit of unquestioning obedience to his superior officer is not favorable to independent thought and intelligent action. It may win some great victories, and do some magnificent campaign work; but when the man departs who is the brain of it all, then the disintegrating process begins.

THE ONE-HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY of George Peabody's birth has just been celebrated by the town which bears his name. The honors done his memory ought to set some of our multi-millionaries to thinking how much better it would be for them to imitate his example, thus winning the gratitude of their contemporaries, and making for themselves niches in the temple of fame when they die, instead of leaving their property to be squandered by dudish sons or spent by foolish daughters on a foreign count or princeling, to buy the privilege of wearing his name and title. "The Greeks are said to have exacted an oath of each citizen that he would leave the fatherland better than he found it," said Lieut. Gov. Wolcott in the anniversary address; "but it needed not the sanction of an oath to bind the conscience and regulate the will of George Peabody. The impulse came from within. What destiny of unheard-of glory would await our State and nation if all our citizens felt and acted upon this impulse as did George Peabody!" What, indeed?

PENMANSHIP.

The Supervisors' Board of the Boston Public Schools has reported in favor of vertical instead of slant hand-writing. But the wonderful penmanship of our forefathers will not be restored, at whatever angle the pupils are taught to form their letters. The best specimens of old-fashioned chirography may be found in the carefully-kept records of many of our old New England towns. I have seen some dating back to the last century, or the fore part of this, which have all the exquisite accuracy and fineness of an engraving on copper.

THE GOTHENBURG LIQUOR SYSTEM.

Our Swedish and Norwegian fellow-citizens have given us a kindly warning against the specious Gothenburg system. Their earnest testimony, gained from personal knowledge of its workings in their fatherland, ought to vastly counterbalance the report of Gov. Russell's too partial committee of investigation. These views have been embodied in a series of resolutions endorsed by all the Swedish and Norwegian churches in Boston. They state that the Gothenburg system is disapproved of by all the free religious bodies and total-abstinence societies in Sweden and Norway; that the great majority of the Scandinavian clergy (of the established church) themselves use strong drink as a beverage, and therefore their favorable testimony, on which the committee laid so much stress, ought properly to have no weight. And they utterly deny that the Gothenburg plan has had anything to do with the decrease in the sale of intoxicating liquor, but they lay the improvement entirely to "the effect of enthusiastic religious and total-abstinence movements upon the rising intelligence of the people." Shall the old Bay State adopt a license yoke that the Christian citizens even of its birth-place are eager to cast off?

FOOT-BALL DENOUNCED.

One of the most unlooked-for happenings in the educational world has been the recommendation of the Harvard Faculty, following on President Eliot's strong words on this subject, that intercollegiate games of foot-ball be entirely abolished. It is to be hoped that other colleges will follow this example. Let the old ideal of a college as a place for the training of mind rather than muscle come to the front once more. The Sullivan-Corbett ideal has prevailed quite too long, as evidenced by their low standard of literary ability. Not one of the contributions for the annual $100 medal at Yale were considered worthy this year of the prize. Literature and athletics, as a rule, will not combine happily, and the time and strength given to college sports is always so much taken out of what should be expended on brain culture.

THE NATIONAL REFORM CONVENTION

has been a good one in spite of small attendance at some of the sessions. But genuine reformers are never frightened at small audiences, though they may with some reason be alarmed at the reverse, as being contrary to all established rule in such matters. The leaven bears but slight proportion to the lump which it leavens. There was a crowded house, however, for the closing session. Rev. J. M. Foster gave the opening address, which seemed to me the most able among the many which he has given on the subject of "Christ in our Government." The speech of John G. Wooley, which followed, was a reminder of Gough—with a difference. The lips of both dropped pearls and diamonds, but the former has a judicial mind, and all his jewels of speech are as were neatly strung, while the latter, with his more erratic genius, poured them out before his audience, a heap of scintillating brilliants. Yet I doubt if Gough, in the prime of his strength, ever gave a more graphic picture of the horrors of the drink-traffic than I listened to last night. One seemed almost to see the long procession of suicides, of murdered wives and heart-broken mothers; and another "Cry of the Children," more pathetic than Mrs. Browning's, seemed to ring in the ears of the hushed audience as he pictured the dead babes deprived of existence on its very threshold, and lifting up their tiny stiffened hands to heaven in a mute appeal for their "inalienable right" to life, while the government, bound to be their protector, protects, instead—their destroyer.

Joseph Cook gave the closing address. It was brief, trenchant, burning;—full of the white heat of that righteous indignation he knows so well how to voice against the attitude of the miscalled Christian citizen who "prays thy kingdom come, then votes for rum." What judgments may even now be prepared ready to hurl on our guilty nation, fulfilling the worst foreboding of Carlyle, Spencer, and other great thinkers of the old world!

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Municipal politics.—Business prospects.—Social extremes.—Rapid transit.—Dr. Taylor.

MUNICIPAL POLITICS.

The recent appointments of Mayor Strong have given satisfaction to the reformers and good government clubs generally, but they have not pleased the radical Republican politicians because of their unpartisan character. There are several distinct elements in municipal politics. There are the reformers, composed of the best citizens of all parties, represented by the Committee of Seventy and some lesser organizations. They believe that municipal affairs should be kept separate from machine politics. Then there is the regular stalwart Republican element, at the head of which stands ex-Senator Thos. Platt. This element is manifesting a disposition to control the distribution of patronage on the basis of the last election, seemingly unmindful that the results of that election were secured by the co-operation of the best men of all parties. There is, also, the regular Democracy, and also the Tammany Hall Democracy, of ill-repute, that was buried so deep by the ballots of last November. If the old saying is true that the welfare of the world is better conserved by the death of a tiger than by the birth of a lamb, then New York ought to be much nearer the millennium, for by at the polls last fall, the city was delivered from a system of misrule that had been its curse for years. The best citizens of all parties are inflexibly opposed to political "bossism." There is nothing to choose between a Republican and a Democratic boss. They are both "tarred with the same stick."

A great improvement noticeable in the business world this winter is the given to workingmen. Last winter there were many thousands of workingmen idle, which gave rise to the phrase "the army of the unemployed." They were driven to depend on the lodging and soup houses, and unable to find work at any price. This winter little has been heard about "the army of the unemployed," and appeals from charitable institutions are not nearly so frequent.

One night last week two society young men gave

A PRIVATE BALL

at the Hotel Waldorf, which cost eleven thousand dollars. The same night, in a big tenement not far away, the body of a dead child, wrapped in a ragged sheet, lay on a washstand in a dark hall, its unemployed father with a broken arm and its mother sick in bed, unable to pay the expense of its burial, amounting at the most to only a few dollars.

A BIG CHECK.

What was in all probability the largest check in the history of trade was drawn last week in a private realty transaction in which the Wharf and Warehouse Co. of Brooklyn purchased the principal wharve of that city for twelve million dollars. This was the amount of the check.

RAPID TRANSIT.

The air has long been full of schemes for rapid transit, but it seems no nearer than ever. The congested elevated trains are a daily witness to the patience and long-suffering of the public. More people ride daily on the elevated system than there are in the State of Maine. The trains at midnight are as crowded as the trains at noonday. Two different schemes are at present being agitated. One is the underground electric system, recently inaugurated at Baltimore, and the other is the double-deck arrangement on the present elevated track. It is claimed that the latter would be far less expensive and permit of the running of express trains in sufficient number to accommodate, without inconvenience, the suburban travel. In either case many years will be necessary for the full realization of the project.

THE LAMENTED DR. TAYLOR.

Another pillar of the church has fallen. Dr. William M. Taylor died on Friday, Feb. 8, after a lingering illness of about three years. He had been pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle for about twenty years and was one of the mightiest preachers of his generation. He ranked with Beecher and Brooks, and although his sermons were always read from manuscript, his preaching had all the fire and force of extemporaneous oratory. He was always an arduous worker and published a new book every year. His best works are his expository sermons on Old Testament characters. He was a typical Scotchman, and before coming to America held one pastorate in Scotland and one in England.

THE BROADWAY TABERNACLE

grew out of the great revival under President Finney, and has had a noble history of aggressive Christian work. For the past two years Dr. Taylor has been pastor emeritus, and the active pastoral work has been carried on by Dr. Henry Stimson, whom the church called from St. Louis to succeed Dr. Taylor. F. W. OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Temperance.—The polyglot petition.—National council of women.—Opposition to bonds.—Free coinage.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 20, 1895.

TEMPERANCE

has been the uppermost subject in Washington during the past week. Beginning with the great mass meeting in Convention Hall, at which the mammoth polyglot temperance petition was displayed, the greatest women temperance workers of the age have had the floor, so to speak, and the numerous addresses they have delivered would, if published in book form, and they certainly ought to be, furnish temperance workers everywhere with material for many unanswerable arguments in favor of the betterment of mankind by the total abolition of the liquor traffic. Miss Frances E. Willard summed up in a few words the reason why women are bearing the brunt of the great battle for temperance. She said: "We are not in this fight from choice. It has been forced upon us. If all the men were like those we have here in this house to-night, the great wrong of the liquor traffic would not exist, and we who are fighting it might turn our hands to other things. But unfortunately this is not so. The wrong exists, and in the absence of other forces we women have come to the front, and here we intend to remain till the world has no longer any need for our services."

THE POLYGLOT PETITION, which was yesterday formally called to the President's attention, has been carefully packed and stored in a safe place, where it will remain until it begins, early in the coming summer, its triumphal tour of the world, but the good effects of its being brought here and the ceremonies attending and following its exhibition will be felt for a long time to come. One of the most pleasing incidents of the week was a letter addressed to "Miss Frances E. Willard, LL. D., and Lady Henry Somerset, Chieftains of the World's W. C. T. U.," by nine Indians, members of four of the civilized tribes, asking for the privilege of signing the polyglot petition. These Indians, who are here on official business for their tribes, attended the polyglot mass meeting, and were so impressed that they desired to show their appreciation by attaching their signatures to the petition, a privilege gladly accorded them.

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF WOMEN, which is holding its second triennial session in Washington, is composed of representatives from the following organizations: National American Woman Suffrage Association, National Woman's Christian Temperance Association, National Free Baptist Woman's Missionary Society, Illinois Industrial School for Girls, National Woman's Relief Society, Wimodaughsis, Young Ladies' National Mutual Improvement Association, National Christian League for the Promotion of Social Purity, Universal Peace Union, International Kindergarten Union, Woman's Republican Association of the United States, National Association of Loyal Women of American Liberty, Woman's Foreign Missionary Union of Friends, Woman's Relief Corps, National Association of Woman Stenographers, National Council of Jewish Women, American Anti-Vivisection Society, and of fraternal delegates from other organizations. The first afternoon of the session was devoted to a public reception, Mrs. May Wright Sewall, president of the council, heading the receiving party. The addresses have been interesting and some of them instructive.

OPPOSITION TO BONDS.

The feeling in Congress against that contract for the sale of bonds has been and is intense. How intense may be judged by an amendment to the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, closing as follows, which was yesterday formally adopted by the Senate Committee on Appropriations: "And hereafter any U. S. bonds sold or disposed of shall be offered to the public for a period of not less than twenty days under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and shall be sold to the highest bidder, in case such bids or any of them are satisfactory;" and in addition, Senator Mills, of Texas, has given notice of his intention to offer an amendment when the bill gets before the Senate, providing for the repeal of the law under which bonds have been issued. While everybody admits that the contract was a hard one, it is claimed that if it had been deferred forty-eight hours the Treasury would have been thrown on a silver basis.

SILVER.

The Senate adopted a resolution favoring free coinage of silver, instead of the bill providing for unlimited coinage, and that probably ends the financial business of this session. *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

The defection of Rev. James B. Dunn.—The National Reform Convention.

BOSTON, February 22, 1895.

A RENEGADE REFORMER.

This morning's Herald sees an ominous cloud rising on the Republican horizon in Massachusetts, prophetic of division, disaster and defeat in her next gubernatorial election. Congressman Elijah A. Morse is reputed as financial backer, and Rev. J. B. Dunn, D.D., as the henchman of this sagacious statesman. There was a time when this D. D., adopting open methods, had a following of clear-headed, conscientious, patriotic Christian citizens; but since he has departed from the ways of Him who ever spoke openly and always walked in the light, and gone in the way of that renegade prophet who refused to curse Israel directly for hire, but subtilly betrayed God's people by strategetic movements, his following, if not less in numbers, is certainly quite different in kind. The doctor has his own view, doubtless, of a minister who will pose as a anti-lodge man in general, and after having joined a secret oath-bound society, and being confronted with the fact, denies that he is an A. P. A. under the shallow, senseless "Amorean" dodge. If he chance to meet some who differ with him he need not be surprised. Let him, and let us all, credit whatever of frankness and fairness remains among politicians or in society, not to some secret cabal, but to Christ, who would have men "walk in the light as he is in the light."

From a newspaper article I clip the following of special interest to reformers:

Here is where the A. P. A.'s have the advantage. They are well organized, are obedient to authority, and can mass their strength at will. They recently taught the Republicans a sharp lesson in capturing the caucuses in the 2d Middlesex senatorial district. There is no reason why, with equal vigilance, they cannot win victories in other parts of the commonwealth.

This organization has recently chosen its State officers for the current year. According to common report, Rev. Dr. J. B. Dunn of this city is the head official. The Republicans are having greater difficulty in keeping track of the work of this secret order than formerly. It grows more secretive than ever. This excites apprehension. A dozen men working in the dark always seem to be more dangerous than a regiment out in the daylight.

NATIONAL REFORM CONVENTION.

From other sources you will learn of the National Reform Convention, held here during the present week. The New England agent, Rev. L. C. Kimball, has taken hold of the work with a will, and, if backed up and sustained as he should be, he will lead on the host to victory along this line. Considering the distracting forces—the Salvation Army, with General Booth at its head, having possession of the city at the time—the attendance was encouraging, and the addresses, without exception, were worthy of the great theme and cause for which the convention was called. The closing address, by John G. Wooley, defies all description, as the force of his arguments and appeals were perfectly irresistible. Brief remarks and prayer, with benediction by Joseph Cook, closed the first convention held in Boston under the auspices of the National Reform Association. An organization was formed, and arrangements made for more vigorous work in the future and I bespeak a hearty welcome for Bro. Kimball among our people wherever the Lord shall lead him. JAMES P. STODDARD.

FROM THE EASTERN AGENT.

Last words about the Pennsylvania Convention.—Personal work.

457 N. 6TH ST., PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 22, 1895.

PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION.

On the eve of the convention, all appears favorable. Trust I shall be able to report grand results in my next.

As the time is short, I may not accomplish what I could wish in the line of advertising. Friends are working nobly. "If God be for us who can be against us?" Let us read Psalm 2, —and remember that they that be with us are more than those that be with them.

PERSONAL WORK.

Last Sabbath was spent very pleasantly with Rev. A. B. Shelly. I spoke three times to good audiences in country churches near Quakertown and Milford Square. The sleighing was good. We drove through drifts higher than our heads. On Monday some subscribed for the Cynosure. Some expect to attend the convention. Let us keep the ball rolling. All are working as opportunity is presented. W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OUR WORK IN NEBRASKA.

HUMBOLDT, Neb., Feb. 15, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Figuratively speaking, the war is on, with the false gods of this world on one side, and the only living and true God, the Lord of hosts, on the other. The first real and most decisive battle here has been fought. The smoke of it has sufficiently cleared away to see distinctly some positive results.

Never before, on any occasion, has our town been so thoroughly warmed up and moved as during and since the recent anti-secrecy meetings. It is hardly an exaggeration to call it a moral cyclone—a thing needed for many years. The odds—so it seemed at the beginning—the bad weather, the severest of the season, with a snowstorm on the Sabbath—the failure of most of the expected speakers from abroad to be present, etc., were greatly against us. "Man's extremity," in this case, proved to be "God's opportunity," for a goodly number came out on the Lord's side, while the meetings were in progress.

Thus the lines are being drawn. Men, and women, too, are brought, as in Elijah's time, to the point of decision, either for Baal or for God. Because of this, all the secret orders—more than a dozen—having a common interest, and animated by the same evil spirit, have made, and are still making, desperate efforts to save themselves. False statements, characterizing the convention as "a miserable failure in its work," have been published in our town papers and the town and the State Journal. Rev. Mr. Combs, who was holding meetings in the "Christian" church during and after the convention, was employed to defend their endangered cause before the people. Saving the lodge was so much more important than saving souls in his way that he closed the meetings and made his defense in the Opera House, Tuesday night of this week. There can be no better evidence of the effective work accomplished by the convention than this shaking up of the "dry bones" in this "valley of vision." "It is the Lord's doing, and marvelous in our eyes;" for, as in Ezekiel's time, "they were very many in the open valley, and lo, they were very dry." As then, so now; some of them have already felt the life-giving breath of the Lord and now live, and others yet will, for this work of giving life to "dry bones" is his; and we Christians, here in Humboldt, are only instruments in his hand. If we are only willing to be thus used, the work so well-begun by the Holy Spirit will go on and on. The lectures of Pres. Blanchard were Gospel sermons in the very best sense of that phrase—in effect, revival sermons. They have waked and aroused professed Christians as ordinary sermons would not have done.

WILLIAM C. BISSELL.

A REJOINDER TO J. E. WOLFE.

ATOKA, Indian Territory, Jan. 25, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Supposing that you are editing your paper for the purpose of doing good, and also that you desire to publish only the truth, I, for this reason, presume to call your attention to an article in your issue of January 10, from J. E. Wolfe, of Gwenn Dale, Ind. Ter. The article is a thrust at a veteran soldier of Christ who has served as a Baptist missionary among the Indians for over thirty-seven years and is still actively engaged in the same work. Since J. E. Wolfe has brought my name before the public without my permission and represented me as opposed to my husband, it is only just that I be permitted to make a statement of my position.

J. E Wolfe makes several statements which I know to be positively false. 1st. "J. S Murrow is a good-natured, good-hearted, energetic Baptist minister, whose whole soul is taken up, first with secretism, and then, secondarily, with his church." I am the wife of J. S Murrow, and know not only his public but his private life; and I consider myself a more competent judge of what his "whole soul is taken up with" than J. E Wolfe. I feel sure that I speak the truth when I say that the first and greatest desire of my husband's heart is to live to the glory of God, to bring lost souls to Christ and to build up his cause. 2d. "He has joined about every secret society that has ever made its appearance in the Indian Territory." J. S. Murrow was never a member of but two secret orders, the Masons and the Odd-fellows, and of the latter he is not now a member and has not been for years. I am told by good authority that there are many kinds of secret orders in this Territory. 3d. "His main forte, however, is Masonry. He makes it the grand sesame to open the doors all round the nation for his church." J. S. Murrow is Superintendent of Indian Missions for the American Baptist Home Mission Society, New York, and because of this there are a large number of Christian workers who are, in a certain sense, under his superintendency. Of these there are only three whom he has reason to believe are Masons. Many of the others are Anti-masons, and they do not hesitate to let it be known. Of the remainder he does not know whether they are Masons or not, or in sympathy with secret orders, and does not care. All he desires to know is, are they true, consistent, energetic Christian workers, fitted for their field? 4th. "He has a wife who is just as much opposed to secretism as he is prejudiced in its favor." I do not object to secret orders because I consider them vile things of the devil, for I know very many of the best Christians are members of them; but I feel that the church of the Almighty God is sufficient for every Christian. For it I can find more work to do than I am able to perform. In it I can spend all my time and money, and do more than in any secret order of man. I believe that when a Christian joins a secret order he adds one more "weight" to keep himself from being wholly consecrated to Christ and his cause. And we are commanded to "lay aside every weight." I must answer for my own deeds; no other can. I know nothing of Masonry; hence I may be mistaken in this decision. I do not set myself up for an infallible judge, especially of those who are wiser, better, and have done more for Christ than I. 5th. "Both she and her husband are close-communion Baptists." We are not ashamed to be called close-communion Baptists. We know that we are Baptist Bible-Christians, and it matters not what others call us. We live and work together in blessed harmony, peace and love. 6th. "He has never opened doors for me in evangelistic work since then." I am not sure, but think it was in 1886, that J. E. Wolfe made his fight against Masonry in Atoka. "He (J. S. Murrow) was present the night the then Grand Lecturer for the Masonic order of the Indian Territory renounced Masonry." He was not present. It is true the brother referred to did publicly state that he should withdraw from Masonry, and in the same statement he said he had nothing to say against Masonry or his Masonic brethren. In the spring of 1888 J. E. Wolfe wrote to some of his friends here, expressing a desire to come and hold another meeting. His friends wanted him to come, and brought the matter before the members of the Baptist church in a regular meeting. J. S. Murrow then cordially suggested that the Baptist house of worship be offered for his use, and it was done. Respectfully,

MRS. J. S. MURROW.

LITERATURE.

CHRIST THE KING. By Rev. J. M. Foster, pastor of the Second Reformed Presbyterian Church, Boston, and author of "Secret Societies in Church and State," "Reformation Principles," "Romanism—the Evil and its Remedy," etc. With an Introduction by Hon. John Alexander, Philadelphia. One vol., pp. 448. Price, in cloth, $1.50. Address Rev. J M. Foster, 56 Pinckney street, Boston Mass.

Readers of the Cynosure have had ample opportunity, during the past three years, to learn from the contributions of Mr. Foster the zeal, the logic, and the forceful arguments that he has brought to bear in favor of the rule of Christ in all human affairs, and especially in those which pertain to the government of our own and other nations.

Mr. Foster must not be rated as an enthusiast, although he does not lack for enthusiasm. As a Covenanter he would be untrue to the principles of his denomination if he hesitated to claim for the Saviour, the Advocate, and the Mediator of men—to whom all power in heaven and earth has been given—the kingly prerogatives with which His Heavenly Father has invested him. How any true Christian can do otherwise, in the light of Gospel truth and the leadings of the Holy Spirit, is surprising. True, the Lord has delegated sovereign powers to human rulers, but even the most careless observer must confess that these men have not been faithful to the King of kings, but have fearfully perverted his teachings and commands.

It is to bring back the hearts of men to their allegiance to the Saviour-King that Mr. Foster so constantly labors. All through this pious volume its mission is manifest. Christ, the first and last, the Prince of Peace, the Wonderful Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father and his government find a consistent representation. Few works are more comprehensive in this respect. In all its thirty-one chapters it is a glorification of the "One altogether lovely, the chief among ten thousand." Christ as our Melchisedek, our Joseph, our Moses, our Joshua, our David, our Rock, our Lamb, our Master, our Truth, our Leaven, our Suffering King, our Risen King, and our National Life, is placed in the foreground as the most worthy Being in the Universe. Then the author dwells lovingly upon the perfect work of the Redeemer in his various offices and relations to the affairs of men. Thus we have careful consideration, in other chapters, of Christ's Gospel to the Nations; Christ and the Nation; Christ and the Christian Citizen; Christ and the First Reformation; Christ and his Judgment of Antichrist; Christ's Law and the Lodge; Christ's Law and the Saloon; Christ's Law and the Sabbath; Christ's Law and Divorce; Christ's Law and Immigration; Christ's Law and the Labor Question; Christ's Law and the Public Schools—and the Bible in them; Christ's Law and Money; The Holy Nation; Christ's Law Enforced, and the Principles of his Mediatorial Dominion set forth.

Those who fear the dogma of a combination of church and state in Christ's kingly rule will find it in this volume only so far as God himself approves it, as set forth in the Scriptures, and thus commended to all men.

DICTIONARY OF SCIENTIFIC ILLUSTRATIONS AND SYMBOLS: Moral Truths Mirrored in Scientific Facts, Designed for the Use of the Senate, the Bar, the Pulpit, the Orator and the Lover of Nature. By a Barrister of the Honorable Society of the Inner Temple. One vol., pp. 420. New York: Wilbur B. Ketcham, 2 Cooper Union, 1895. Cloth, $2.00

A book covering hundreds of distinct topics—an assemblage of striking and interesting scientific facts, arranged so as to be of immediate use to men who require a suggestive theme, a forcible analogy, a cogent symbol, or a suitable illustration.

In its construction the author has grouped all kindred topics together; an arrangement which, with the two copious indexes, makes rapid reference to any subject an easy matter. For lecturers and preachers there are anecdotes with which to illustrate moral truths, making science and history subservient to deeper lessons. Deriving his facts and suggestions from multifarious books and authors, the compiler draws his own deductions.

The work is unique in its arrangement, and while all the opinions of the compiler may not be admired, he will receive due credit for his ingenuity, as well as for the scope and aptitude of his selections from many noted writers. Many of its paragraphs are of a striking character, and well illustrate the value of analogical teaching. Whether we consider the work as a whole, or as a collection of isolated passages for special reference, it will be found a convenient companion for literary men and journalists.

LIFE AND IMMORTALITY. By Rev. Edward W. Gilman, D. D. Neatly printed in booklet form. Price 10 cents, postpaid. Published by Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bible House, New York.

The Secretary of the American Bible Society, Rev. Dr. Edward W. Gilman, has added another booklet to his series which treat in a simple, luminous style of the passion, crucifixion and resurrection of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. They are excellent expositions of the Scripture history of these great events, and are filled with that deep devotional spirit which illuminates most thoroughly the sacred story.

OBITUARY.

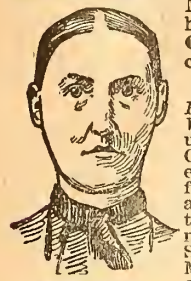
died at the family residence, in Geneva, Neb., Monday, January 21, 1895, aged 80 years, 11 months and 18 days.

Of his early days we have no record at hand. In 1835 he emigrated to what is now Livingston county, Illinois, where he began life as a farmer in the town of Newton, experiencing the privations of a pioneer. At that time he found employment at 25 cents a day, taking his pay in store-goods. The nearest market was Chicago, 100 miles distant, where the best wheat brought from 25 to 50 cents a bushel, and oats were worth 10 cents a bushel. Mr. Houchin secured 600 acres of land, and proceeded to improve it. His estimate was that he had split fully 100,000 fence rails with his own hands. His was among the first cabins built in the county prior to the fall of 1835, and he also built the second cabin in Newton.

In 1865 he removed to Odell, and, later in life, to Nebraska, residing in the town where he died.

On the 16th of January last he was walking along the street in company with a friend when he was thrown down by a loose board in the sidewalk, receiving such injuries that he was able to speak but once during the five days which he lingered on the brink of the grave.

The funeral took place from the Congregational church, January 23, at 2 P. M. The sermon was preached by Rev. J. E. Brereton; after which his remains were interred in the cemetery at Geneva.



Mr. Houchin was an anti-secretist, for many years a constant reader of the Cynosure, and his widow continues upon our books as a subscriber.

Peace to his ashes.

How to Clean Black Dresses.

Take 2 parts of soft water to 1 part of alcohol, or, if there be paint spots on the stuff, take spirits of turpentine. Soap a sponge well, dip in the mixture and rub a breadth at a time on both sides, stretching the material on a table. Iron on the wrong side, or that which is to be inside when the stuff is made up. Sponge off with water hot, but not scalding, before you iron. Iron while damp. This proceeding will make the material appear like new.

How to Ventilate a Church.

The proper ventilation of churches is a subject that ought to receive more careful attention, especially during the season when fires and closed windows are in order. Church auditoriums are, to all practical purposes, hermetically sealed immediately after the Sunday service and never opened again until the following Sunday. Meanwhile all the bad air incident to the massing together of any number of people is left to stagnate and work its baneful influence upon the next congregation.

This is all wrong. Churches should be thoroughly aired after every service. Open the windows and let pure air have free circulation during the week, an abundant supply for Sunday. There is more true worship in a well ventilated church than in a surpliced choir, and in a great many instances the sexton is more to blame for a drowsy, inattentive congregation than the parson. Vitiated air is neither conducive to the health of the body nor to the soul.

How to Prevent Insomnia.

To prevent insomnia curl the body up beneath the bedclothes so as to reduce the amount of fresh air. Lower the supply of oxygen in the blood, produce a little asphyxia, breathe and rebreathe only the respired air, and you will reduce the stimulating oxygen, soon falling asleep. There is no danger. When asleep, you are sure to disturb the coverings and get the fresh air.

How to Make Claret Punch.

Mix thoroughly claret and old whisky in the proportion of half a gallon of the former to a pint of the latter. Sweeten to taste by mixing the sugar with a little water before it comes in contact with the alcohol. Chop a fresh pineapple into small pieces and put juice and all into the punch. Set the mixture on the ice for at least three hours before using. Serve a portion of the pineapple with each glass.

How to Wax Autumn Leaves.

Autumn leaves may be prettily and readily waxed by placing them in a soup plate containing a very little benzine in which a small quantity of paraffin has been dissolved. Add benzine until any surplus of the paraffin disappears, or add the paraffin until the tip of the finger nail shows an almost imperceptible film of the wax upon it when dipped in the solution. Dip the leaves quickly, drain and pin up through the stem. The benzine evaporates and leaves the wax in the leaf. Keep this away from fire or artificial light, as it is dangerous.

How to Cure a Sty.

Take some stale bread, and after soaking in milk squeeze it out not too dry, then add a little olive oil. Apply to the eye with no cloth between. Renew when it becomes dry.

Troubled with Rheumatism.

"I have been troubled with rheumatism for seven years. I was taken sick last February and could not walk a step, and was advised to use Hood's Sarsaparilla. After I had taken three bottles I was able to go around and do a good deal of work. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all who suffer as I have suffered."—Elizabeth Crane, Mumford, Mo.

IDEAL AND REAL MASONRY.

The difference between ideal Freemasonry and the real is a study of hypocrisy on the one hand and downright cruelty and wickedness on the other.

"Truth is a divine attribute," says an ideal defender of Masonry, "and the crowning glory of innocence. It is the great safety-valve of human action—the compass to guide the immortal spirit to the haven of bliss—the brightest ornament in the Masonic diadem." So wrote the author of the "Masonic Advocate." This is ideal Masonry.

Real Masonry: "The applicant for Masonic light is required to declare, even before he enters the lodge-room" (to become an Entered Apprentice), "that in his application he is prompted not by mercenary motives, but simply by the desire of knowledge and the sincere wish to be serviceable to his fellow-men."—Morris' Dictionary of Masonry.

"It is false that the candidate is 'uninfluenced by mercenary motives.' As a rule, the motives are mercenary;" and probably no man ever became a Mason without expecting that pecuniary benefits would accrue to him in his new relation. Thus we may believe that ideal Masonry, while claiming to be the embodiment and promoter of truth, encourages its members to enter the lodge with a lie in their hearts and hypocrisy on their lips.

In the opening ceremonies of the Entered Apprentice's degree, when the Senior Warden is asked by the Worshipful Master from whence he came, instead of replying that he came from his home, or his grocery, or his saloon, he says: "From a lodge of St. Johns of Jerusalem." Now it is false that there ever was a lodge at Jerusalem dedicated to the Saints John, or that the Senior Warden ever heard of it outside of Masonic books and lodges. Ideal Masonry teaches the excellence of truth, and real Masonry utters falsehoods. "Lies told in joke, and sworn to, add blasphemy to falsehood."—Doesburg, p. 153.

More ideal Masonry: "The Apprentice, when he enters the lodge, first listens to an earnest prayer to Almighty God in his behalf, and unless he professes full confidence and places his trust in the great Supreme, he can proceed no further—hence no atheist can be a Mason."—The Masonic Advocate, p, 20.

Real Masonry: "Worshipful Master, placing his hand on the candidate's head, asks: 'Mr ——, in whom do you put your trust?' Candidate: 'In God.' "—Initiation, Entered Apprentice.

Does anyone suppose that any man, a true atheist at heart, having lied his way into the lodge, and instructed to say "In God," would hesitate a moment about uttering a second falsehood rather than be turned out before going further into the mysteries of his initiation? Masonry thus teaches him to lie, and requires him to do it, whether he actually believes in a God or not.

There is considerable difference between ideal Masonry and the real, hypocritical sort.

OATHS, JUDICIAL AND LODGE—AFFIRMATIONS.

A writer in the Gospel Messenger (Brethren), of Mt. Morris, Ill., contributes an explanation of the difference between a judicial oath and an affirmation, which suggests a thought or two. We cannot follow the writer in his denunciation of the legal or judicial oath as contrary to the spirit of the Sermon on the Mount. If all men were Christians, we believe that the oath would be unnecessary at any time, or in any place, because their simple "yea," or "nay," would, with them, possess the solemnity of a special appeal to the Almighty for the truth of their statements. The establishment of courts of justice as a part of our human government by divine authority gives the magistrate power to secure truthful evidence by the use of a solemn oath as commonly administered, since any infraction of the truth under such an oath properly subjects the perjurer to severe punishment on earth as well as in the hereafter. Were it not thus, when wicked men are called upon to testify in court, who could believe them unless their falsehood rendered them liable to deserved penalties? All the wickedness of a judicial oath would seem, therefore, to exist only in disregarding its solemnity and breaking it.

Very many people refuse to take even the judicial oath, preferring to make a solemn affirmation, which is only a specific form of uttering "yea" or "nay," and, if the witness, for conscience sake prefers to make an affirmation, instead of taking an oath, the courts leniently accept it. But it is observable that the people who prefer to make affirmations instead of taking oaths are those who have religious scruples or are professed Christians. Whoever heard of a wicked man asking to be excused from taking a judicial oath? It is safe to believe that the class of persons who prefer to affirm rather than swear are those who would refuse to lie under any circumstances.

So much for the distinction between judicial oaths and affirmations. But there are forms of oaths, and even affirmations, that are wicked in the sight of God and forbidden in his Word. The first, fourth and fifth verses of the fifth chapter of Leviticus contain the divine law upon this subject, and apply very aptly to the usual forms of obligations required of applicants for membership in many secret lodges before they are made acquainted with the duties which they promise to perform. This is forswearing, which is a very different thing from testifying under oath to facts already known to a witness when called upon for his evidence in a lawful tribunal. The seventeenth verse of the same chapter of Leviticus also confirms the wickedness of the lodge oath, as follows: "If a soul sin, and commit any of these things which are forbidden to be done by the commandment of the Lord, though he wist (knew) it not, yet is he guilty, and shall bear his iniquity."

In the initiation ceremony of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows, the candidate is not forsworn, as in the Masonic lodges, but fore-promises "upon his sacred honor" not to reveal the secrets with which he may afterwards be entrusted. The difference is not very great, however, and the sin is the same in importance; for supposing the novice to have made this solemn promise, or affirmation, in advance of being informed of the duties required of him, he does not know to what he may have pledged himself; and as the lodge demands the closest obedience to its commands, he might be promising to commit some terrible crime.

This is the danger in allowing certain organizations unconnected with government authority to administer extra-judicial oaths or affirmations, misleading the blind and ignorant into unknown practices and fellowships; while the novice is too weak or too ignorant to consider himself in moral or personal danger from those with whom he designs to associate in future.

The lodge oath is an abomination, which ought to be frowned down by religious public opinion and by government enactment.

OBJECTIONS TO THE G. A. R.

P. Woodring, whom we suppose to have once been a Union soldier, and then a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, contributes to the Christian Conservator the reasons of his present opposition to that organization. He believes that there are many men who served in the Union army during the rebellion, who have since become professed Christians, yet retain their membership in the G. A. R., while others who never joined it are not fully persuaded as to the character of its principles. He has studied the order, as we understand, from without and from within, "with malice toward none," and these are the conclusions at which he has arrived:

"I feel constrained to give my reasons, as a Christian, for being no longer an adherent of the order, hoping and praying that others may see that what is wrong for me, as a Christian, would also be wrong for them.

"1. I cannot belong to the G. A. R. because it is a worldly institution, having religious rites, such as the reading of Scripture, prayer, burial service, etc. It has its chaplain and its altar. It has its ritual, which, as other rituals, is to be used to the exclusion of any other form of conducting the ceremonies. Thus, should any Christian undertake to conduct the post by any other, or more Christian like manner, it would be unauthorized.

"2. It is a secret society, and as such it makes its members endorse the system of secret combinations of men which are now in existence, such as Freemasons, Odd-fellowship, etc. It is not necessary here to argue as to whether these are evil institutions. I only wish to show why I cannot belong to the G. A. R. I believe them to be religious institutions, and as they are not Christian, they must be anti-Christian institutions, and I cannot oppose them as such when I am myself a member of a similar order. The rule holds good in most of such orders as the G. A. R., that wicked men may be and often are elected to the office of chaplain, whose duty it is to read the Scripture, offer prayer and conduct the religious ceremonies of the post or lodge.

"I cannot sit in and be one of a lodge where such mockery is enacted. Scripture teaches that 'the prayer of the wicked is an abomination unto God.' Several years ago a Masonic funeral procession passed on the street. Near the head of the procession walked a man clad in the regalia of an officer of the lodge carrying on a board suspended by a cord from his shoulders the open Bible. The man was so drunk that he really staggered as he went. Need I comment? But, friends, is it any worse than for any wicked person to offer the prayers of the lodge for them? We are taught in the sacred volume that it is wicked to 'handle the Word of God deceitfully.'

"I cannot be with the G. A. R. because it is a secret society and because it tries to deceive. You and I have often heard it asserted by members that it is not a secret society, to get those to join it who are conscientiously opposed to secrecy. This is often told; but I find that they meet secretly with closed doors guarded by sentry, and have secret signs, grips and passwords. All members are pledged to keep secret all such and the transactions of the post. What more do other orders require?"

These are the reasons assigned by Mr. Woodring for leaving the G. A. R., but not all of them. He adds that he has not a word to say against soldier organizations that are simply such, but when they become secret, oath-bound societies, and religious at that, he has no use for them.

And he is right.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS.

Frederick Douglass is dead.

A slave-boy, a fugitive from slavery, the friend and companion of the old-time Abolitionists, the eloquent lecturer, the faithful servant of government, and the genial gentleman, he has been for half a century a prominent character in the growth and progress of American institutions; and the story of his life is the revelation of what a poor, neglected boy may become if he respects himself and strives to win the respect, also, of the great and good.

Despite the cruel opposition to which his mulatto color subjected him before the Southern rebellion, his natural talents enabled him to successfully overcome all impediments. He might be sneered at and snubbed as one of a despised race in steamers and hotels, but he always rose above such contumely and left his mark indelibly upon the age. It is doubtful whether any other man of modern days has done as much by his personal exellence and influence to elevate the Negro character and win for it the consideration it deserves.

The life of Frederick Douglass is a vindication of the principles of the Christian religion and the Declaration of American Independence—the assertion of equal rights under the law for the government of all men. Under the law and the Gospel he was a true freeman, serving his age and nation to the best of his ability, and overcoming circumstances that to thousands of other men would have been insurmountable barriers to progress and honor.

A sufferer from the infliction of wrong and oppression, he became the enemy of these elements of barbarism, and the champion of moral and physical freedom and right. Hence it was that he entered into the spirit of any reform that would serve to make men and women independent and better citizens; and it is not strange that in one of the conventions organized by the N. C. A. at Washington, several years ago, he delivered an address in which he gave a cordial endorsement to the anti-secrecy reform. The moral and physical slavery of the oath-bound, secret lodge could have no charm for one who had escaped from slavery and enjoyed the blessing of untrammeled manhood.

Despite the weight of his 78 years, up to the day of his death, on the 20th inst., he retained a fair degree of health. In the afternoon he attended the National Council of Women in Washington, chatting with Susan B. Anthony and other delegates. Returning home, he complained of exhaustion, but not of illness, and in a few moments passed away.

His death is attributed to heart-disease. His loss affects the nation and the cause of human freedom in all lands.

SONS OF TEMPERANCE.

The Pope's encyclical, denouncing the Oddfellows, Knights of Pythias and Sons of Temperance, is being gradually made the basis of general orders to their respective churches from ruling Roman Catholic prelates. The rituals and obligations of the first two of these interdicted organizations have been published for years; but that of the Sons of Temperance seems not to be so well known. It is as follows:

"The Worthy Patriarch, addressing the initiate:

"Respected Friend: Are you still willing to adopt our principles and assume our obligation? If so, place your right hand on the heart, and each member will do the same as a token of fidelity. You will now repeat after me our pledge.

"I, without reserve, solemnly pledge my honor, in the presence of these witnesses, that I will neither make, buy, sell, nor use, as a beverage, any spirituous or malt liquors, wine or cider.

"I also pledge myself to promote the harmony, advance the interest, and preserve unsullied, on my part, the reputation of the Sons of Temperance.

"I furthermore pledge myself faithfully to observe the constitution and by-laws of this division, and the rules and usages of this order; and never to divulge any password, ceremony, or other private matter of the order, except to those legally authorized to receive them—and whether my connexion with the order shall continue or not, to consider my obligation, in this respect, binding to the end of life."

The foregoing obligation is, like Pope's "Universal Prayer," designed for "saint," for "savage," or for "sage;" a Druid, a Mohammedan, a heathen, a Christian or an infidel; and "all sorts and conditions of men" may take it without a single scruple of conscience, and with only the pledge of a weak and shadowy "honor" to stand between the tempter and the tempted. That is all. Where is the meek and lowly trust in God, in Christ, in the power of the Holy Spirit, to restrain the initiate in the hour of trial? The divine help is not appealed to, is not even deemed worthy of mention; but the newly-made "Son" is left to grope and fight for "Love, Purity and Fidelity" without a ray from the "Sun of Righteousness" to light him on his way.

REV. DR. CARRADINE.

Rev. Dr. Carradine, whose wonderful sermon on secret societies has had a wide circulation, and has undoubtedly proved itself a potent protest against the secret lodge system, is experiencing the usual fate of reformers in the way of annoyance and vituperation.

For several days in the early part of this month, by invitation, he conducted evangelical revival services at Greenville, Ill. The editor of the Free Methodist, who was present, makes the following report: "Everything seemed forbidding when he came. The weather was the coldest known here for twenty years. Counter-attractions were introduced into the town, and worked for all they were worth. Difficulties of a grave character had broken out in the church where he was to labor. Chicago newspapers were brought here and circulated, accusing Dr. Carradine of such extravagance and wildness as had driven some insane in other places. In short, the devil was much alarmed and unusually busy."

Despite these untoward circumstances, however, "the preacher was undaunted and full of faith. He shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God, and God owned and blessed the truth. Over fifty professed to be fully sanctified, and quite a large number sought the pardon of sin. The work spread into the college, where much of the best fruit was borne. . . . Dr. Carradine is not afraid of people getting blessed, but is childlike enough to let God bless both himself and others as he will. He shouts, and laughs, and even jumps for joy, and says 'Amen' most heartily when others do the same."

Dr. Carradine has in him the elements of a great Christian worker.

TESTIMONIES AGAINST THE LODGE.

MONANGO, No. Dak., Feb. 3.—I have succeeded in getting several strong articles against the lodge published in our local papers, this winter; among other things was Stephen Merritt's experience, as published in the Lodge Lamp. If we were not so financially embarrassed in No. Dakota, I would labor for a State organization of the anti-secrecy forces.—(Rev.) C. G. FAIT.

One page of the Cynosure saved me from entering the Masonic lodge. My petition was handed in by a friend, and my first fee was paid, but before the initiation could take place a friend handed me a copy of the Cynosure. By the time I had glanced over one page, neither friendship nor money, nor boasted favoritism, could induce me to enter its tyled door.—E. G. Cooper, Albany, Mo.

A Past Master, who is at the present time a chaplain of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, said, in the Cynosure office, last week, that the temptation to go to the saloon with the members after lodge was very great, and that for some time after he united all manner of sport was made of him because he refused to go, and that in fact very few young men could resist the guying which they received for being "soft-heads," and hence, as a rule, followed the majority into the saloon.

Rev. I. J. Rosenberger, of Covington, Ohio, writes: "May not Dayton, Ohio, have the honor of the next Ohio convention? Let all who are in favor of that movement say 'aye,' and may there be no 'nays.'"

Rev. Charles P. Jones, pastor of the oldest colored Baptist church in Jackson, Mississippi, writes: "Please allow me to say that I have read the Cynosure with much pleasure and profit now for a number of years. I would like very much to get it widely read among the black people."

—Reformed Catholic church services on each Sabbath have been established by ex-priest Seguin and ex-monk Sullivan, at the hours of 3 and 8 P. M., in Star Hall, 378 South Western avenue. Admission free. A cordial welcome is extended to both Roman Catholics and Protestants.

—We have underlined, for reprint in next week's Cynosure, a scathing review of the Grange and its operations as a "beneficial" organization for the agriculturalists who have been duped into it. It is from the pen of George W. Staley, and appeared in the Christian Conservator for Feb. 20, 1895. It is interesting reading.

—We are indebted to Messrs. Jas. J. H. Gregory & Sons, florists and horticulturists, Marblehead, Mass., for a copy of their excellent catalogue (series of 1895) of home-grown seeds for field and garden. Its 72 broad pages teem with information useful to gardeners and cultivators, copiously illustrated, and otherwise attractive. It is sent free to all applicants.

—The Swedish Augustana Synod forbids members of secret societies to be received into connection as church members. It defines such associations as follows: "Secret societies are oath-bound organizations which use religious ceremonies, while denying the Trinity, together with Christ's person and acts, and exact vows from their members." This is the truth in a nutshell.

—To a correspondent of the Free Methodist, who asks: "where is scriptural proof found against secret societies?" the editor replies: "The whole Bible is opposed to the principle of worldliness and selfishness on which secret societies are based. The following scriptures are especially explicit: 2 Cor. 6: 14–18; Eph. 5: 8–13; James 4: 4, and Romans 12: 1,2." See, also, Lev. 19: 12; Rom. 13:12, and many others.

—Rev. Francis J. Davidson, one of the most faithful of anti-secrecy preachers in the South, and editor of the Tribune, published in New Orleans, finds that "the age of persecution is not past." Towards the last of January a gang of white "hoodlums" in the "Crescent City" burned the St. Andrew (colored) school-house. He also complains that the white students of Tulane University, in New Orleans, daubed the property of the (colored) Leland University with tar. Altogether the "race prejudice" in the South does not appear to be extinct.

—The father of Geo. T. Angell, President of the American Humane Society, had a narrow escape from being buried alive after his supposed death, and the good man is moved to ask the editors of about 20,000 American publications throughout the country to kindly bring this important subject before the legislatures of their respective States. The object of this agitation is to ask for the universal enactment of laws requiring competent and careful inspection, before burial, of all persons who are supposed to be dead, but who may only be in a trance. Anything more horrible than being buried alive can hardly be imagined, and the suggestion of Mr. Angell is so replete with reason and humanity that we willingly urge it upon the attention of our readers.

—P. A. Seguin, ex-priest, and ex-monk Sullivan, report rough usage during their attempts to lecture on Romanism at Turner Hall in Ottawa, Ill. While on the platform, relating their experiences in the Roman Catholic church, they were attacked by a gang of hoodlums, who wildly threw chairs, bottles, eggs, etc. The speakers describe it as a fearful night. In addition, the opposition had Seguin twice arrested—once for not having a license to lecture, while he had the document with him—but in both instances he escaped imprisonment, having fallen into the hands of a just magistrate. He had the ringleader of the hoodlums arrested for assault, but, owing, as Seguin alleges, to a packed jury, the prisoner was acquitted. On the whole the lecturer considers himself as happily delivered from worse injuries. It was a narrow escape from death.

—Rev. J. M. Foster recently contributed to the Christian Statesman a paper on "The Effect of the Secret Lodge System on Good Citizenship," in which he says: "The effect of the secret lodge system upon this citizenship is to stunt and stifle, pervert and pollute, alienate and destroy that which God hath made. (1) It transfers the allegiance of its members from God to Satan; (2) it administers disloyal oaths, and (3), it is the enemy of the family, the church and the state. . . . The man who goes to lodge meeting ininstead of prayer meeting, Sabbath lodge parades instead of God's house, and uses the Lord's portion in paying lodge fees and purchasing degrees and outfits, is a sacrilegious robber of the church of Christ. And the man who takes these shocking oaths is a menace to the state and should not go unpunished." This is strong language, but none too strong to rebuke the evil which it exposes.

—A good man—at least we have no reason to believe that he is otherwise—has written a tract entitled "Lessons from Secret Societies." As the "general evangelist" of a State Christian organization, we should judge that he ought to be a good man. There are hundreds of such "good men" in the oath-bound lodges, and, like him, they uphold the secret system as a beneficial institution. He warns us at the outset that he "hopes to strike the golden mean, avoiding alike bitter denunciation and extravagant eulogy of secret societies." In other words, he is half a lodge advocate and half a lodge opponent. Hear him: "It might be wise to join one lodge, and foolish to join another; or it might be wise to join under some circumstances, and foolish under others." Following out this style of reasoning only serves to confuse one: "It is right to go to one saloon, and wicked to go to another." "It is wicked to dance, but not to go to a theatre and see fancy dances." "It is wise to risk your money in one gambling house, and not to play in another." "It is harmless to commit one favorite sin, but hurtful to indulge in a hateful one." Does the reader see where this sort of logic would soon lead a man? Yet it is the gist of all the "good man" arguments in favor of the lodge. But the God of the Bible has so signally set the stamp of his displeasure upon ALL secret, oath-bound organizations, as inimical to his church and kingdom, that even the arguments of all the "good men" in them cannot make them right in his sight, or in that of any true Christian.

EDUCATION OF WOMAN

TEACH HER SELF RELIANCE, SAYS REV. MADISON C. PETERS.

Appeals to Mothers to Look Higher Than Exterior Polish For Their Daughters. Train Girls to Support Themselves—Woman's Position In the Home.

Man and woman are unlike, each incomplete without the other, and it is in their unlikeness that their power over each other lies, and against every attempt to destroy that unlikeness the instinct of either sex will forever impose an insurmountable barrier, making every manly man recoil from a masculine woman with a repulsion equaled only by that which a sensible woman feels for an effeminate man.

I believe in the highest education of woman—that is, training woman to do woman's work, to fulfill a woman's mission, in a woman's proper place.

Women, as a rule, think of education as a schooling that has to be endured until the age of 18, the object of which is to make them appear well in society and give them a chance of success in marrying well—that is, rich. This low standard of education reduces everything to outward appearances. But the education needed to make her think, to make a woman of her, to teach her self respect and self reliance, is comparatively neglected. This, I believe, to be the great error by which, more than anything else, woman is prevented from taking her rightful position in society and from exerting her full influence. All true reform must begin by educating woman to a better sense of what is due to herself and through her to the world.

Mothers, I appeal to you, look beyond the drawing room of your friends, where your daughters are to be sometimes seen, perhaps shown. Look higher than to get them married off. Prepare them not merely to dazzle in the circle of fashion and the gay party. Seek to polish the exterior by what are called accomplishments, but give them also a solid substratum of intelligence, good sense and social virtue. I ask not the sacrifice of anything that can add grace and elegance and ornament to the woman, but I demand for woman an education that will make her man's helpmeet and not simply his help eat, his coworker and not simply his doll to be dressed or his toy to be played with.

I would force upon every woman the thought of a serious life. She should be trained to do some useful thing well enough to support herself by it if necessary, and this exigency often occurs, and the helplessness of many a woman of refinement under such circumstances is something painful to contemplate. Learn some one thing, no matter what, so thoroughly that you can make your services in that occupation valuable everywhere. How enviable the independence you would thus attain! How more calmly could you then face threatened misfortune! How much higher the plane on which you would approach the question of marriage. It would cease to be a burden taken off the hands of parents or a mercenary shift resorted to for support. Any woman of fair looks and ordinary sense can marry some sort of a man, but is not a life of loneliness more honorable than a loveless marriage? All honor to the woman who makes her own way in the world rather than live a life with a man for the sake of being kept, and not until women become self reliant and independent will marriage become what it ought to be—a union on equal terms, a free and glad surrender of the heart.

A marriage for convenience, for position or title, a marriage without love, is a humiliating stoop to the dust, a mockery that blushes to the skies. Matrimony is now looked upon as a mere matter of money, and Cupid, having grown old, has changed to cupidity. I never knew a marriage expressly money made that did not end unhappily, yet managing mothers and heartless daughters are constantly playing the same game. And until a higher mission awaits the school-girl than that of being taken from the schoolroom to the auction block and placed on exhibition in the marriage mart, where showy accomplishments enhance the value of the ware and draw a higher bidder, no better education than that which meets the flippant demands of society is possible.

I would add to the curriculum of studies in all our schools and colleges for women special courses in cook-ology, boil-ology, bake-ology and stitch-ology. I would make all the improvements of the manners and the accomplishments of education subordinate to the duties of the home, the means to make home happy. Woman is the God ordained queen of the home. In the home is embosomed God's own trust, the glory of the state, the hope of the church and the destiny of the world.

Is there a place that can impart
Blest visions to the aching heart?
Is there a place whose image dear
Can soothe our grief, dispel our fear?
That place is home.
Of hardships we may bear our part.
Still home's the touchstone of the heart.
Whatever may our bosoms cheer,
Whatever we regard as dear,
That place is home.

A Soul Saving Church.

I have always been blessed with crowded audiences, but the joy of my ministry has been that hearts have been healed; that tears have been seen streaming from the eyes of the penitent; that homes have been made beautiful and lives happy. It shall be my ambition to make this a soul saving church. With all its magnificence of architecture it would be but like the old Greek corpse—it was lifted, but fell, because "it lacked something within." A church lacks something within if the grace of God does not work in it in the conversion of sinners.

Thou must be true thyself
If thou the truth would'st teach.
Thy soul must overflow if thou
Another's soul would'st reach.
It needs the overflow of heart
To give the lips full speech.

Christ's Textbook.

Christ's textbook was everyday life. He spoke up to the times. He did not read off any dry theological abstractions. He spoke to the men who lived around him doing all kinds of mischief. We find him in the market places, in the streets where the people congregate. We find him in all the activities of life. He lived in an age of corruption, and he never shut his mouth concerning it. He never used language of diplomacy, of expediency, of policy. He called everything by its right name.

Table Prayer.

Table prayer is a plain, Christian duty. Our Lord always gave thanks before eating. So did the early Christians. So should we. It is one mark of a Christian family. It is confessing Christ before men. It is an easy duty. Who can not say, "Dear Father, we thank thee for our daily bread and pray thee bless it to our use?"

An Antidote For Frivolity.

Culture is the best antidote for frivolity. We hear of dancing circles, etc. How many reading circles do the young women of high society maintain? Figures would present a sad commentary. Is it not sad that the feet should be educated at the expense of the head and heart?

Thrice Blessed Is She.

The daily luncheon procession at Delmonico's presents to the eye of the impecunious male foreigner the most gilded vista of hope to be unrolled within any quarter of New York.

A young Englishman was the guest the other day of two women of fashion, who, as the various women of society passed to their tables, posted him promptly on their names, fame, and, above all things, fortune. Not one woman passed within an hour who was not either the heiress or the mother to the heiress of a seductive harvest of gold.

"Ah, there goes Miss Caroline Duer!" said one lady at last. "Beautiful, isn't she? Good, charming, clever, a writer of no mean ability, a maker of the daintiest verses, artistic, pretty—everything."

"And rich," said the Englishman, "of course?"

"No," interposed the other lady. "Caroline Duer has simply everything which money cannot buy. She comes nearer physical and mental perfection combined than any other woman I know in New York society."—New York Herald.

Parental Indulgence.

Absalom's father, David, spared the rod and spoiled the boy. How many such wrecks as Absalom lie stranded on the beach of time! They are shattered on the same rock—parental indulgence. Oh, parents, will you not forestall these unavailing lamentations, these moans of blasted hopes and broken hearts, that are darkening and burdening the earth? Tell your children exactly what to do and then make them do it. "Correct thy son, and he shall give thee rest." "Chasten thy son while there is hope." Judicious, steadfast authority exalts the parent and makes his love inestimable.

False Measures.

There is a great deal of stealing nowadays by short weights and measures. This sin is lamentably common. The sealer of weights and measures showed that in one year, in one of our large cities, nearly 7,000 weights and measures were found incorrect. When all the measures get to be the same size, you may look out for the millennium. Give some of our merchants the right to sell the Atlantic ocean by the quart, and they would cheat you in the measurement.

Love Is Not All.

Love is not all. It is quite possible to love one wholly unworthy of you. It does not follow that because two are uncomfortable apart they will be happy together.

A False Charity.

Many people so divide the sermon out among the congregation that they keep none for themselves.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning March 3. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Spiritual death and spiritual life.—Rev. iii, 1-3, 7-13, 20-22.

Spiritual death and spiritual life are actually represented in the references from God's word to illustrate the topic. The importance of the topic as well as its solemnity can be clearly seen. Spiritual death! What a solemn thought that there can be such a thing; that the soul may die to the duties it owes to God and to the blessings that it receives from God in Christ! Spiritual life! What a joyous, happy thought that the soul may live in vital connection with Jesus Christ, as the branch to the vine, and may receive life from Him. Spiritual death should be earnestly shunned, while spiritual life should be anxiously desired and sought.

1. Spiritual death (Rev. iii, 1-3). Death is here represented in the church of Sardis. "Thou hast a name to live, but thou art dead." Sardis was one of the churches that received unmixed reproof. It received no praise at all. It was spiritually dead. It had not always been so, for Christ reminds it of a better condition in times past. Nor was it necessary at this time. Spiritual death in church or individual is a sad condition. It is unnecessary, unnatural, is dishonoring to Christ and to ourselves, and a stumbling block in the way of many who might by a better example be led to a better life. But there is pointed out in connection with Sardis the things that may be done to bring us back again to a state of life. 1. Be watchful. Guard carefully against continuing further into the state of deadness. 2. Strengthen the things which remain. All was not hopeless. Some even in Sardis had not succumbed to the general spiritual apathy, and some works were not entirely dead. These men to be strengthened and others would rise around them. 3. Remember the past. Recall better days that you may earnestly covet them again. 4. Repent. Turn from evil. Turn back to God. But Sardis disregarded these injunctions, and her candlestick was removed. Let us be warned by her fate against her example.

2. Spiritual life (Rev. iii, 7-13). This is exhibited in the church of Philadelphia. We know less of the church of Philadelphia than some of the other seven, and yet we love it. It was alive. It did its duty faithfully and well. Christ had no reproof for it at all. It had strength. It was trusty. It had been faithful. It had not denied the name of Christ. It had trouble with those who claimed to be Jews, and yet were not, but it had been patient and loyal to Christ. It was abundantly rewarded. Its enemies were to be humiliated before them. It was to be kept in time of temptation, and these promises were crowned by one of the noblest pledges to him that overcometh in verse 12. These are the characteristics of spiritual life, ecclesiastical or personal, and some of their rewards. They are open to all and free to all. No one need be spiritually dead. Life is offered to all. "Behold I stand at the door and knock, and if any man hear My voice and open the door I will come in and sup with him, and he with Me" (verse 20). If we let Christ in the church or heart, we may have life. To exclude Him means spiritual death.

Bible Readings.—Isa. ix, 2; Math. vii, 21-23; John vi, 53, 54; Rom. v, 14-19; viii, 6, 7; Gal. ii, 20; Eph. ii, 1-5; iv, 17, 18; v, 14; Col. ii, 13; iii, 3, 4.

The Christian's Hope.

The imagination will sometimes fly up to God with such a power that eagle's wings cannot match it. It sometimes has such might that it can almost see the King in His beauty and the land which is very far off. But if it is potent one way it is another, for imagination has taken us down to the lowest planes of earth. But I rejoice and think of one thing—that I can cry out when this imagination comes upon me. So it is with the Christian. If he cries out, there is hope. Can you chain your imagination? No, but the power of the Holy Ghost can.—Christian Work.

The Endeavor Spirit.

A degree of importance is to be attached to Endeavor methods. The plans under which Endeavor work is conducted are not all equally wise and efficient. Some effort should be made to become acquainted with and to adopt the best methods. But more important than this, more essential to success, is the possession of the Endeavor spirit. If we are animated by the affections and motives of the true Endeavorer, the ordinary methods will be invested with great efficiency, and a great work will be accomplished.—National Presbyterian.

The Growth of Christian Endeavor.

The new year begins with more than 37,000 Christian Endeavor societies, representing not far from 2,225,000 members.—John Willis Baer.

Thy Way, Not Mine.

Thy way, not mine, O Lord!
However dark it be!
Lead me by Thine own hand,
Choose out the path for me.

Smooth let it be or rough.
It will be still the best.
Winding or straight, it leads
Right onward to Thy rest.

I dare not choose my lot.
I would not if I might.
Choose Thou for me, my God.
So shall I walk aright.

The kingdom that I see
Is Thine; so let the way
That leads to it be Thine,
Else I must surely stray.

Take Thou my cup and it
With joy or sorrow fill
As best to Thee may seem.
Choose Thou my good and ill.

Choose Thou for me my friends,
My sickness or my health;
Choose Thou my cares for me,
My poverty or wealth.

Not mine, not mine, the choice
In things or great or small.
Be Thou my guide, my strength,
My wisdom and my all!

—H. Bonar.

The Model Kitchen.

The kitchen should be—for health's sake if for no other—the brightest room in the house, excepting only the nursery and the room where the children sleep. It should have every convenience for saving labor and steps and be well ventilated. It need not be a very large room if everything is compactly arranged in it, and it should have the walls lined with cupboards, built in the house. The sinks should not be inclosed, or if they are a bit damp they will get smelling bad in a very short time, and nothing will ever overcome it. You will find on inquiry that in old houses, where the kitchen is poked off under the back stoop and has but one window facing on a walled up area or north, the people of that house had always some member of the family sick. Microbes and infection love dark kitchens. Powdered borax scattered freely about the kitchen pantry and bathroom will exterminate roaches.—Philadelphia Times.

Helen Gould's Uninteresting Babies.

The words, "Reserve the cots for the two most uninteresting babies," always accompany the check Miss Helen Gould sends each year for the support of two beds in the babies' shelter connected with the Church of the Holy Communion in New York. She is especially interested in hospitals for children and in day nurseries and likes to take under her particular charge the little ones whom others would be likely to find unattractive. At her lovely home of Lyndhurst at Irvington-on-the-Hudson, where Miss Gould lives most of the time, she has each Saturday morning a sewing class of little girls, the children of the workmen on her place. The gates of Lyndhurst always stand open, except on Sunday, and any one may enter and make the round of the grounds and the extensive greenhouses.—New York Letter.

Education of Girls.

Lady Frederick Cavendish, presiding at the annual meeting of the Yorkshire ladies' council of education at Sheffield, England, said there were two opposite tendencies noticeable in the theories respecting the education of girls—one a strong desire for higher instruction in literature and science and the other in favor of the home arts and domestic science. Both should be welcomed, for if they claimed their proper share of attention fair play would be given to the capacities of girls.

A Precise Princess.

The Princess of Wales attaches great importance to the ceremony of 5 o'clock tea. She brooks no delay in the routine and attends a church on Sunday afternoons, situated at some distance, instead of going to the Chapel Royal, St. James, because the subdean could not change the time of service to allow her to drink her cup of tea at the usual hour.

Lady Florence Dixie.

Lady Florence Dixie, the English writer and woman with convictions, has certainly the courage of them. In a set of "Confessions" which she filled out for a London paper she frankly replies to the question "What is your favorite story?" "My own, because it alone reflects my ideas." More authors may feel that way, but not many calmly announce it.

Care of the Hair.

Proper respect for one's hair makes two stiff bristle brushes a necessity. The woman whose ambition is to have her locks positively satiny parts them in the middle and brushes both sides vigorously at once. Why this method is superior to the old one of successive brushing is hard to say, but it is so regarded at present.

When the paper tears off or wears off of your Japanese screen, the frame is still the foundation of another quite different. Paint it with some enamel paint of any tint you prefer and make it elegant with brocade, or, more simple, with pretty cretonne.

TYPES OF DRUNKARDS.

The Habitual and the Hard Drinker—How Babes Are Made Inebriates.

The smallest quantity of alcoholic drink, taken habitually, will cause a corresponding inebriety. If a man drinks a glass of beer three times daily for three months, he will have a corresponding inebriety. If he stops, he will have a craving for his beer. He has the disease of inebriety, which corresponds to the amount of his indulgence. He will say that he can drink beer or let it alone, just as he pleases. Very likely he can let it alone, but he seldom does, and if he does he succeeds by overcoming the crave for the drink by effort of his will. The craving, however, remains.

The deep drinker is another type. This type did not begin by taking a small drink three times a day, but he began by a drunken debauch, followed by remorse, reform and a period of sobriety. In a few weeks or months he indulged again in the same manner, and now he repeats the debauch, repentance and period of sobriety at regular intervals. This man has a corresponding inebriety. He has a crave for liquor which comes on periodically. When it comes, the inebriate will drop everything and drink. He will drink himself dead drunk in six hours and be put to bed. The next morning he resumes the agony and continues usually until his stomach rebels and rejects everything, and then he repents and ceases to drink, and after a few days of melancholy he gains an appetite and enters upon another period of sobriety, swearing he will never drink again.

Babes are made inebriates in the nursery and cradle by alcoholic drugs and opium preparations given them for children's diseases. It is not uncommon to find babes a few months old who are confirmed opium inebriates and can endure a dose of cordial or soothing syrup containing morphine enough to narcotize a man. Children treated for diphtheria with whisky or whose indigestion and little troubles are dosed in the same manner are inebriates. The stamp of alcohol is put upon the little brain and remains there. When the child grows large enough, it some day finds liquor, and the consequenee is a debauch and the beginning of a career of inebriety.—New York Voice.

Advance of the Temperance Movement.

There is no good reason why any one should be discouraged over the progress of the temperance cause. The harvest seems painfully small sometimes in comparison with the plentitude of the seed sowing, the church at large cold and apathetic and thousands of men and women whose hearts ought to be on fire strangely unmoved and callous. Yet when a full and fair account is taken of all the things accomplished in the past 50 years in the way of public education on the temperance question and antiliquor legislation it will be seen that, after all, a great and marvelous work has been done. The church at large may seem cold on this question now, but it is vastly warmer than it was half a century ago. Thousands of otherwise good men and women may seem indifferent, but the number of people who are not indifferent are much larger in proportion to the whole than they were even 10 years ago. In social and business circles the sentiment in favor of temperance has been steadily and rapidly increasing. These are only a few things to be mentioned as reason why the workers in this cause should take heart and go ahead.—Christian Work.

Alcohol In Heredity.

Of the 4,000 criminals who have passed through the Elmira reformatory 38.7 per cent were the children of drunken parents, with the probability fairly established of 11.1 per cent to be added, making 49.8 per cent of the criminals who had been prisoners there the victims of hereditary alcoholism.

Marro found that 41 per cent of criminals which he studied were children of alcoholized parents, and Rossi, out of 71, found 31 per cent of the same hereditary taint. This includes those who were criminals from direct intemperance only in so far as they were children of drunken heredity.—Selected.

Ruins the Health, Spoils the Intellect.

"It is one of the commonest things in English society," says Sir William Gull—and his words are equally applicable to American society—"that people are injured by drink without being drunkards. There is a great deal of injury done to health by the habitual use of wines in their various kinds and alcohol in its various shapes, even in so called moderate quantities. It leads to the degeneration of the tissue, it spoils the health, and it spoils the intellect."

Inebriates Are Liars.

One influenco it has on the morals which stands out pre-eminent. One of the most distinetive features of habitual and periodic inebriety is an utter disregard for truth on the part of many inebriates. Females lose the sense of truth even more completely than do males. Seen in the very act of laying down the just emptied glass, lady patients have coolly and solemnly denied to me that they had partaken of the contents. The perception of truth seems to be destroyed by alcoholic indulgence; the consciousness of truth seems lost in the devotee of Bacchus. Even when temporarily sober the brain may be so dominated by the alcoholic obliquity to truth that no reliance can be placed on any statement made by the man or woman whose sole being has, as it were, been steeped in alcohol.—Dr. Norman Kerr.

An Unfortunate Error.

Then, again, by the excessive quantity of fluid which the heavy beer or wine drinker takes, he imposes a much severer task upon his kidneys and bladder than does the drinker of distilled liquors. It is a statement frequently made that it is not the moderate use of alcohol which does harm, but the abuse of it. This is as foolish an error as it is an unfortunate one. In these United States thousands of people are annually made victims of the very worst forms of organic disease simply by the moderate but habitual use of alcoholic drinks, such as beer and light wines, containing only a very small percentage of alcohol, and they are people who have never known the slightest sensation of drunkenness in their whole life, and never will.—Dr. Wade.

Drink Notes.

The following statistical fact will encourage all temperance workers: In the United States 20 years ago there was a liquor dealer to every 192 inhabitants. Now there is one to every 272 of the population.

New York state stands first, Pennsylvania second, Wisconsin third and California fourth in the number of breweries and distilleries in the United States. In the entire country there are now 1,930 breweries and 4,791 distilleries.

Rev. Robert Dawson of Great Britain's Congregational Total Abstinence association has recently donated to the London Missionary society the sum of £1,000, the "result of 40 years' practice of total abstinence."

The American National Congress of Friendly societies, which makes life insurance a chief feature, recently passed a resolution declaring it unadvisable for benefit societies to admit to membership men engaged in retailing liquors.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON X, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 10.

Text of the Lesson, Mark x, 17-27—Memory Verses, 21, 22—Golden Text, Math. vi, 33—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

17. "And when He was gone forth into the way there came one running and kneeled to Him and asked Him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" This event is also recorded by both Matthew and Luke. It is in each immediately preceded by the saying of Christ that we must become as little children in order to enter the kingdom, and it is followed by Peter's remarks about their having left all, and the question as to what they should have, and the Saviour's reply. By comparing the three accounts we find that this earnest, anxious soul was a young man, a ruler and very rich. These facts, coupled with that of his running after Jesus and kneeling down before Him in the street, seem to indicate very great earnestness on his part in reference to this great matter of eternal life.

18. "And Jesus said unto him: Why eallest thou me good? There is none good but one. That is God." As if He said, "In calling me good, do you confess that I am God?" He does not, as we might heartily receive the young man, saying, "I am so glad you have asked me. Sit down with me quietly, and I will show you in a few minutes, for it is very easy." He does not think in His heart: Now, here is a splendid catch. I must get him by all means. Think what his social position and influence will be to us and think what his money will do for us. We must have him.

19. "Thou knowest the eommandments. Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honor thy father and mother." Thus in answer to His question He takes Him, as he did the lawyer, at once to the law, and to what we call the second table, his duty to man, for we can only prove our love to God by our love to our fellows. Before we can know the way to life eternal we must have our eyes opened to see our guilt and inability to do anything to obtain this eternal life.

20. "And he answered and said unto Him, Master, all these have I observed from my youth." We will suppose that he was thoroughly honest in this reply and actually thought he had not failed in any of these commands, but it is evident that he neither knew his own heart nor the spirit of the law as Jesus had taught it (Math. v, 21-28), or he would not thus have justified himself. Paul speaks of this kind of righteousness which this young man had as "mere own righteousness which is of the law," but he learned to count it all as dross when he saw the righteousness which is of God by faith (Phil. iii, 9).

21. "Then Jesus, beholding him, loved him and said unto him, One thing thou lackest, go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come, take up the cross and follow me." There is no one whom Jesus does not love. He loves those who are dead in sins (Eph. ii, 4, 5), but His heart went out with a special love to this young man. The one thing he lacked was just this knowledge of the love of Christ.

22. "And he was sad at that saying and went away grieved, for he had great possessions." Jesus had now put His hand upon the sore spot as when He said to the woman of Samaria, "Go, call thy husband." Empty and dependent as a little child we must come if we would know Him and His love and grace and fullness.

23. "And Jesus looked round about and saith unto His disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God." The kingdom of God meant more to Jesus than it meant to His disciples or than it means to many Christians now. I this day listened to a sermon preached to about 2,000 people in St. Giles' cathedral, where once the voice of John Knox rang out the truth, in which the real kingdom which Jesus and all the prophets preached was wholly set aside.

24. "And the disciples were astonished at His words, but Jesus answereth again and saith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God." There is not necessarily any sin in money. It is the love of money (I Tim. vi, 10), or, as Jesus here puts it, the trust in or reliance upon riches, instead of upon the giver of every good gift, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy. Abraham was rich, and David and Zaccheus and many others whom the Lord saved. It is not said that "Not any mighty or noble is called," but "not many mighty, not many noble" (I Cor. i, 26). One has well said, "Thank God for the letter M.

25. "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." It is simply impossible for any man, rich or poor, to enter the kingdom without being born from above (John iii, 3, 5, 7), but that is not probably the truth taught here. If there was in a large city gate a small gate which only a camel could go through with difficulty by unloading, and if this small gate was called "a needle's eye," it would help us to understand these words of the Saviour. Whatever illustration He had in mind, it is plain that He teaches us that it is next to impossible for one who is rich to enter the kingdom of heaven, but God, who is love, has made full provision for whosoever will receive His love (Rev. xxii, 17).

26. "And they were astonished out of measure, saying among themselves, Who, then, can be saved?" It would seem that to the minds of the disciples Jesus had spoken, not of a bare possibility, but of an impossibility, at least as far as all the rich were concerned. This, with many other passages of Scripture, such as I Tim. vi, 9, 17; Zeph. i, 18; Ps. xlix, 6, 7, should certainly teach us not to covet riches, except as they may be used for Him and His kingdom. It is possible to be poor, yet make many rich, to seemingly have nothing and yet possess all things (II Cor. vi, 10). Think of Him who, though He was rich, yet for our sakes became poor and let Him be our durable riches as well as righteousness (II Cor. viii, 9; Prov. viii, 18).

27. "And Jesus, looking upon them, saith, With men it is impossible, but not with God, for with God all things are possible." There is nothing too hard or too wonderful for the Lord, for His name is wonderful (Gen. xviii, 14; Jer. xxxii, 17; Judg. xiii, 18, margin; Isa. ix, 6). When simple faith receives the wonderful Saviour and Lord, the most commonplace life will become wonderful by His indwelling and outworking. The great thing on our part is to know our nothingness that we may not seek to bring Him anything, but our poor worthless selves. Then He will glorify Himself in us.

FRED DOUGLASS DEAD

FOREMOST LEADER OF THE NEGRO RACE IN AMERICA.

Stricken with Heart Disease While Chatting with His Wife, He Passes Away in Twenty Minutes—Story of His Life—Born a Slave in Maryland.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21. — Frederick Douglass, the distinguished freedman, orator, and diplomat, died a few minutes before 7 o'clock last night at his residence in Anacostia, a suburb of this city, of heart failure. His death was entirely unexpected, as he had been enjoying the best of health. During the afternoon he attended the convention of the Woman's Council, now in progress in this city, and chatted with Susan B. Anthony and others of the leading members, with whom he had been on intimate terms for many years. When he returned home he said nothing of any feeling of illness, though he expressed himself as being a little exhausted from the climb up the stairs leading from the street to his house, which is on a high terrace.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS.

Died While Talking to His Wife.

He sat down and chatted withhis wife about the women at the convention, telling of various things that had been said and done. Suddenly he gasped, clapped his hand to his heart and fell back unconscious. A doctor was hastily summoned, and arrived in a few moments, but his efforts to revive Mr. Douglass were hopeless from the first. Within twenty minutes after the attack the faint motion of the heart ceased entirely and the great ex-slave statesman was dead. Mr. Douglass leaves two sons and a daughter, the children of his first wife. His second wife, who is a white woman, survives him.

His Marriage of a White Woman.

The story of his second marriage is a romantic one. Miss Helen Pitts, whom he married, was a New England woman of middle age, a clerk in the office of the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia when Douglass was appointed to that office. She was a member of a literary society to which he belonged. They were thrown much together and finally became engaged. Her relatives opposed the union bitterly on account of his color, but finally yielded to force of circumstances. Some of them have for some time been living near the Douglass home on Anacostia Heights.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF DOUGLASS.

Begins as a Slave, Whose Master Gave Him Opportunity to Run Away.

Frederick Douglass was born in Tuckahoe, Talbot county, Maryland, in February, 1817. His mother was a negro slave and his father was a white man. At the age of 10 years he was sent to Baltimore, where he learned to read and write.

In 1859 the John Brown riots took place in Virginia. He was supposed to be implicated in these, and Governor Wise made requisition for his arrest upon the governor of Michigan, in which state he then was. To avoid difficulty Douglass went to England, where he remained for six or eight months. He then returned to Rochester and continued the publication of his paper. When the civil war began in 1861 he urged upon President Lincoln the employment of colored troops and the issuance of a proclamation of emancipation.

In 1863, when it was at last decided to employ such troops, he gave his assistance in enlisting men for such regiments, and especially the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Massachusetts. After the abolition of slavery he discontinued the publication of his paper, and applied himself to the preparation and delivery of lyceum lectures. In September, 1870, he became editor of the New National Era, in Washington. This was afterward continued by his sons, Lewis and Frederick.

In 1871 he was appointed assistant secretary to the commission to San Domingo. On his return President Grant appointed him one of the territorial council for the District of Columbia. In 1872 he was elected presidential elector at large for the state of New York, and was appointed to carry the electoral vote of the state to Washington. In 1876 he was appointed United States marshal for the District of Columbia.

After this he became recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia, from which office he was removed by President Cleveland in 1886. In the autumn of that year he revisited England to inform the friends whom he had made while a fugitive slave of the progress of the African race in the United States. After his return to the United States he was appointed minister to Hayti by President Harrison in 1889. He was sent to Hayti in a United States man-of-war. He arrived in Hayti on the 8th of October, 1889, just as the country was emerging from one of the most exciting revolutions that country had witnessed for years.

Inland Press Association Meets.

CHICAGO, Feb. 20.—The Inland Daily Press association met here with about twenty members present representing country town papers in Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and Iowa. After transacting routine business the following officers were elected: President, W. H. Narvis, Muscatine, Ia.; vice presidents—S. W. Grubb, Galesburg, Ills.; J. E. Sutton, Logansport, Ind.; F. R. Gilson, Benton Harbor, Mich.; W. V. Tufford, Clinton, Ia.; H. F. Bliss, Janesville, Wis; secretary and treasurer, Ira S. Carpenter, Michigan City, Ind. W. C. Kegal, of Dubuque, was elected a member of the executive committee.

TRIED TO KILL THE FAMILY.

Bloody Work Done by a Young Man Who Was Disinherited.

PEKIN, Ills., Feb. 21.—Albert Wallace, a dissipated, reckless young man living with his sister and her husband, O. B. Bolby, twelve miles south of here, shot his sister, her husband, and a boy living with the family. The shooting was done with a double-barreled shotgun, and the wounds inflicted are thought to be fatal in the case of the husband, who is shot through the head.

The trouble leading up to the tragedy is of long duration, growing out of the disinheriting of Wallace by his father, who was killed in 1890, in favor of Mrs. Bolby. The murderer came to Pekin after the shooting and surrendered to the sheriff, who placed him in jail.

Report on Illinois Militia.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Feb. 23.—Lieutenant D. J. Baker, Jr., of the Twelfth infantry, United States army, has completed the report for the war department at Washington of the action of the Illinois National guard, during the labor troubles last year. The report, which has been forwarded to Washington, deals exhaustively with the circumstances of the miners' and railroad men's strikes in the state last summer, and gives the militia much credit for the efficient manner in which they handled the unruly elements that destroyed life and property during those troublous times.

Has Had All He Deserved.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Feb. 22.—The governor has pardoned William Cozzens from Joliet penitentiary. He was sent from Champaign county in 1876 for life for complicity in murder. The governor says the ends of justice have been subserved. A man named White, who committed the deed, only received twenty-five years and has since died.

That Illinois Legislature.

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 25.—Only four members were present when the house met Saturday. Without transacting any business they adjourned till today. In the senate there were only three members present, and adjournment was taken till tomorrow morning.

Ex-Governor Oglesby Seriously Ill.

LINCOLN, Ills., Feb. 21.—General Oglesby suffered a relapse, being attacked with heart failure. The family physician pronounced him in a critical condition. Fears are entertained that he will die suddenly, although the veteran scouts death and hopes to recover.

MISS FLAGG'S
LATEST NEW BOOK!

"A Prisoner of Hope."

COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.

Price, $1.25.

We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident, In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy, postage prepaid.

LIVES LOST AT SEA.

UNKNOWN NUMBER OF SAILORS GO DOWN IN THE STORM.

Philadelphia Shipping Men Do Not Remember Its Rival—Pitiable Sights at the Maritime Exchange — Three Vessels Given Up.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 25.—The loss of life at sea this winter has been greater than during any corresponding period within the recollection of the oldest shipping men along the wharves. It has been years since so many Philadelphia vessels have been lost, and the local underwriters cannot attempt at this time to figure out just what number of policies they will have to pay, as it is contended that the full and worst results of the recent storms have not yet come to light. It is a pitiable sight to stand at the entrance gate to the Maritime exchange as the doorkeeper is besieged by anxious wives and other relatives of seamen who went to sea previous to the great storm of the 7th instant, and have not yet been heard from.

Eight Souls Aboard One Shcooner.

The friends of Captain Oliver, of the Philadelphia schooner Emma J. Meyer, which sailed from Charleston fourteen days ago with a cargo of railroad ties and has not since been heard from are almost prostrated with grief, as they believe the vessel has foundered and that all hands, eight in number, have been lost. The vessel would in all probability have been about off the Jersey coast at the time the storm raged. Her agents here have, however, not given up hope, claiming that she may have been driven off to the eastward of the gulf stream and being crippled has not been able to work back.

Two Others with Sixteen Men.

On Jan. 29 the three-masted schooner Marooshen, Captain F. S. Brown, laden with 325 tons of coal and manned by a crew of seven men, sailed from this port bound for Wiscasset, Me., but since that time no tidings have been had of her and it is thought likely that she, too, met with the gale of the 7th instant, and foundered with all hands. Nothing has ever been heard from the schooner Governor Ames, which sailed from Salem early in the month for Philadelphia or Baltimore. She is manned by a crew of nine men and is the best known vessel on the coast, being distinguished by being the only five-masted schooner afloat.

Probable Fate of the Dalling and Others.

The family of Captain Dalling, of the Philadelphia schooner Maggie Dalling, which was passed at sea on the 13th inst. in latitude 33:08, longitude 75:05, abandoned, water-logged and with the foremast gone and mizzen and main masts gone by the deck, has given up hopes of his safety, and many other vessels are missing and, there is little doubt, foundered in the same gale.

ROLLED DOWN AN EMBANKMENT.

One Person Killed in a Fearful Wreck on the Louisville and Nashville.

GREENVILLE, Ala., Feb. 25.—The southbound passenger train on the Louisville and Nashville was derailed three miles below Greenville and a fearful wreck resulted. The cars rolled down an embankment and caught fire. Five of them were burned, including two passenger coaches, the baggage and express cars, and one sleeper. The engine tore its way along the road-bed for some distance, tearing up the rails. A large number of passengers were on board, many of them en route to the Mardi Gras at Mobile and New Orleans.

When the extent of the damage was ascertained it seemed little less than a miracle that only one life was lost, that of C. R. Walsh, of Birmingham, who was killed outright. Several were more or less seriously injured as follows: Mrs. G. H. Armstrong, of Buffalo, N. Y., left shoulder and arm broken and badly cut; Mrs. G. W. Morey, of Shelbyville, Tenn., arm broken, left ankle sprained; Margaret Moody, of Shelbyville, Tenn., badly burned and cut; Mr. W. H. Johnson, of Newcastle, Ind., seriously hurt in back and groin; Mrs. Sallie Johnson, of Birmingham, Ala., right leg scalded; Mrs. W. C. Thomas, of Montgomery, Ala., knee sprained; Mr. C. R. Johnson, of Toledo, O., hip cut; Mrs. W. H. Schoolcraft, of Montgomery, Ala., head cut and hand mangled. About forty others received slight bruises, but were able to resume their journey.

IN MEMORY OF WASHINGTON.

Anniversary of His Birth Kept All Over the Country—At Chicago.

CHICAGO, Feb. 22.—The anniversary of the birth of George Washington is being kept today with more universality all over the country than ever before. Telegrams from everywhere show that business is generally suspended and that this afternoon and evening will witness observances in every city and town of any size in the country. The morning in most places was given up to the school children.

It was so here. Patriotic programmes were arranged and executed this morning in a large number of schools. Addresses were delivered calculated to fire the young American heart and patriotic songs were sung. This afternoon there will be a number of celebrations, the principal one being at the Auditorium under the auspices of the Union League. Tonight there will be a number of banquets, and other entertainments.

American Newspaper Publishers.

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—The American Newspaper Publishers' association held the final session of its annual meeting at the Brunswick hotel in Fifth avenue, and last night closed up with a banquet. The officers chosen were: President, C. W. Knapp, St. Louis Republic, to succeed James W. Scott, Chicago Herald; secretary, W. C. Bryant, Brooklyn Times; treasurer, H. F. Gunnison, Brooklyn Eagle. Resolutions congratulating James W. Scott on coming into possession of three papers "all daily," were adopted.

Bills Signed by the President.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—The president has approved the following acts: Authorizing the expenditure of a portion of the appropriation for St. Joseph harbor, Michigan, to complete the connection between that town and Benton Harbor; to return to Michigan the flags of certain volunteer regiments.

Populist Nomination at Chicago.

CHICAGO, Feb. 23.—The People's party of Chicago has nominated Bayard F. Holmes for mayor.

HOLOCAUST AT HOT SPRINGS.

Six Persons Perish in a Fire Which Destroys Much Property.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Feb. 23.—As far as known six people were burned to death and four and a half blocks of the residence and business portions of the city, on Ouachita avenue, were destroyed yesterday. The fire originated in the Ledger wood bakery. The residence of H. M. Hundgkins and the bakery were destroyed and in ten minutes the fire had spread to half a dozen buildings, and fanned by a strong wind from the north swept everything as tinder before it. The flames crossed the street and the Ouachita hotel and Oaklawn were next burned. Out of nearly 100 houses burned in only half a dozen cases was the furniture saved.

As far as known there have been six persons burned to death, but rumors are rife of others missing and the number of fatalities may be increased to a score when the death roll is called. Among the dead are: Mrs. Mary Sammonson, 70 years old, who was living in the Ledger building; D. W. Wing, of Glenn Falls, N. Y., who escaped the flames at first, but remembered that he had $1,800 in the hotel and rushed back to get it. Before he reached the door his clothing was on fire and he burned to death in sight of thousands of people.

A man named Hill, whose hands were paralyzed, from Chicago, is reported as among the dead; also a negro, name unknown. Mrs. Maggie Hiscock, housekeeper at the Oaklawn, ran out from the rear door, a sheet of flame, and shrieking sank down before help could reach her. How many were lost remains to be seen. The total loss of the conflagration will reach hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Poisoned $1,500 Worth of Pups.

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—Eight "toy" dogs, the property of Mrs. F. Senn, were found poisoned in their box at the Madison Square garden dog show. Six of them were dead and the other two will die. The dogs were valued at $1,500. The miscreant who did it is not known, but no stone will be left unturned to find him. Another dog, a bull terrier, was poisoned while in the ring.

Oregon Elects a Senator.

SALEM, Feb. 25.—George W. McBride, ex-secretary of state, was elected Saturnight on the thirtieth ballot as United States senator to succeed Dolph. This was the last act of the legislature, as it adjourned sine die at midnight. McBride got every Republican vote.

Chicago Republican Ticket.

The Magic Touch

OF

Hood's Sarsaparilla

You smile at the idea. But if you are a sufferer from

Dyspepsia

And Indigestion, try a bottle, and before you have taken half a dozen doses, you will involuntarily think, and no doubt exclaim,

"That Just Hits It!"

"That soothing effect is a magic touch!" Hood's Sarsaparilla gently tones and strengthens the stomach and digestive organs, invigorates the liver, creates a natural, healthy desire for food, gives refreshing sleep, and in short, raises the health tone of the entire system. Remember

FARM FIELD AND GARDEN

Restoring Run Out Pastures.

The nature and food of our common grasses are not so well understood as they should be. On nearly all soils all of the common grasses that make up the turf of our permanent pastures will in time grow less luxuriantly on account of the decrease in the soil of one element of plant food, nitrogen. These grasses make use of the nitrogen already in the soil, and in time this stock gradually becomes depleted. These plants cannot gather nitrogen. They can only use what some other plants have stored up for them. It is extremely fortunate for the American farmer that he can grow abundantly another class of forage plants which restore to the land more nitrogen than they take from it. Because the clovers make use of the nitrogen of the atmosphere they are particularly suited to restore to the soil this element that has been exhausted by the grasses through long continued growth. As a rule, whenever permanent pastures show signs of failure, through lack of fertility, new vigor may be introduced, if a slight stand of clover can be secured. This, of course, will be of short duration, only a year or two at most, unless it be white clover, but this short growth will be sufficient to leave enough nitrogen in the soil to sustain permanent pasture grasses for several years. If clover can be introduced, the benefit will likely be lasting, as this plant is a perennial.—Rural New York.

Wheat Experiments.

At the Illinois station in 1894, as in former years, it was found that different thicknesses of seeding had less influence on yields of either grain or straw than is commonly supposed. Where a small quantity is sown a larger number of stalks are produced by each stool. One advantage of thicker seeding is that if the season is unfavorable and part of the wheat is destroyed there is greater probability enough will remain.

An interesting fact is that different varieties of wheat differ greatly in size and weight of kernels, making a vast difference in number sown even when a like quantity is sown by weight or measure. At the Illinois station the wheat averaged about 800,000 kernels per bushel, but some varieties had only 600,000, while others had about 1,130,000. At the Iowa station even greater differences were found, the extremes being from 490,000 to 1,184,000 kernels per bushel.

News and Notes.

The 1894 corn crop is as poor in quality as in quantity.

The crop of onion seed is short both in this country and in Europe.

If you want a list or particulars of government land now open to the public for settlement, address "Commissioners Land Office, Department of the Interior, Washington."

Professor Roberts estimates that the value of the manure produced on a small farm carrying 4 horses, 20 cows, 50 sheep and 10 pigs during the seven winter months amounts to about $250.

The entering wedge of a fatal complaint is often a slight cold, which a dose or two of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral might have cured at the commencement. Therefore, it is advisable to have this prompt and sure remedy always at hand to meet an emergency.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.....16

Congress adjourned this week. Not much was expected of it, yet it has produced a few measures that may result in benefit to the nation. Among these were the admission of the territories of Utah and New Mexico to Statehood, the killing of the railway pooling bill, and the act giving Chicago a new Government building. Otherwise it did little of merit.

Odd-fellowship is inconsistent when it instructs the initiate that the order presents a broad platform upon which mankind may unite, when he has just pledged his sacred honor to conceal all that he knows of it from the men outside of the lodge who would like to stand on a nice, friendly, universal platform of that sort. But the secret system could not exist without inconsistency.

We yield considerable space, this week, to the proceedings of the Pennsylvania State Christian Association's Convention at Philadelphia. Notwithstanding several disappointing circumstances, the proceedings were full of interest and the spirit of progress was manifest in all. Those who had the convention in charge are in nowise to blame for any failures in carrying out the program, but are deserving of the utmost credit for the zeal and energy displayed in bringing it to certain success.

There is one place where the majority do not rule. That is Uganda, in Eastern Africa. The majority consists of Roman Catholics, the minority are Protestants. The way of it is this. The British Commissioner is a Protestant, and represents the controlling government of the country. Mwanga, the nominal native king, formerly a Roman Catholic, was forced, it is alleged, to secede from his religion, and not allowed to return to it, and his nephews (also Catholics), his rightful heirs to the throne, have been kept out of their inheritance by the commissioner. A British division of the kingdom gives the Protestants two-thirds of the territory and the Catholics the other third. The latter object, but are powerless, although in the majority.

Chicago's Civic Federation for the physical, moral and political cleansing of the city held two mass meetings, last Sabbath—one an overflow—and both were attended by reputable citizens. The need of thorough regeneration was deeply felt, and there was also an enthusiastic expression of determination to secure a genuine reformation this spring. If this enthusiasm shall be infused into the future action of the Civic Federation and its friends, the corruptions of the city will be purified. All that is needed is prompt, energetic work, like that which overthrew Tammany in New York, and Chicago will put on renewed strength and glory, which in her present political condition is impossible.

The retirement of Rev. Simeon Gilbert, for more than twenty years editor of the Advance, in this city, is an event that will be regretted by the readers of that paper and his many personal friends. During his term of service, Mr. Gilbert has been a pillar of strength to his denomination, and the Advance under his guidance has become its ablest exponent. Bringing into his work a large share of natural tact and talent that fitted him for his duties as a journalist, a thorough classical and theological education, and refined tastes, he has maintained a position that it will be difficult to fill. Business changes in the paper, owing to the sad death of Mr. Harrison, last fall, have led to his retirement. He will be missed.

General Booth, who arrived in America last September, and has traveled almost incessantly since his coming, returned to England on Wednesday, having spent twenty-five weeks lecturing and inspecting the Salvation Army from ocean to ocean. His journeys in and across the continent covered 18,543 miles, 847 hours on railroad trains, night and day, 340 meetings in 86 cities, and audiences numbering 437,000 persons. Not the least gratifying of his experiences was the bringing, during his meetings, of 2,200 penitents to the altar. For a man of sixty-five years this is a remarkable record. But Gen. Booth is in every way a remarkable man, and has originated, controlled and promoted one of the most remarkable bodies of Christian workers that the world has ever known. Every lover of the Lord Jesus Christ and his Gospel has reason to bless him for the advent, work and success of General Booth. May he live years longer to labor and enjoy the progress of his mission among the sinful and neglected.

A bill is before the Illinois Legislature, appropriating $6,000 to be expended in holding farmers' institutes in this State, under the direction of the trustees of the University of Illinois. This is but a small sum, since other States have given more largely for the promotion of these useful institutions, but as the necessity enlarges the appropriations will probably be increased. These institutes, when properly managed, are extremely beneficial in the advancement of diversified agriculture, and by enabling farmers to make intelligent experiments, they encourage the introduction of greater variety in farm products. With more attention paid to diversity of crops, the failure of one or two in a season will prove less disastrous to the farmer than if he depends upon but one or two staple productions. Whatever encourages energy, intelligence and perseverance in agriculture, is worth more to the poorest farmer than all the secret, useless granges in existence.

Details of the terrible assassination of Armenians by Turks, a few weeks ago, are gradually coming to light and add horror to the atrocities previously reported. The correspondent of the Associated Press sent to Armenia to thoroughly investigate the massacre has forwarded his report, dated Tiflis, Russia, January 25, covering an interview with an Armenian patriarch, from whom he derived his information. In the Sassoun massacre thirty-one Armenian villages were destroyed and 11,000 of the unfortunate inhabitants were slain. Among the inhuman incidents of that terrible affair, it is stated that when the Armenians had surrendered to the overpowering Turkish troops, 150 of them, including three priests, were thrown alive into a ditch, and although they were not wounded, the soldiers buried them alive. More than 2,000 Armenians, it is estimated, are immured in dungeons in Turkey as "political" prisoners, among whom are forty or fifty prelates of the Armenian church. The prison life is described as heart-rending. Is it not the duty of the civilized world to interpose and prevent these terrible deeds?

'A Pilgrim" writes to one of our friendly exchange papers from a little town in Kansas, where he had been assisting in a religious revival, as follows: "This is a town of about 350 inhabitants. There are four church buildings, with a good membership, and four or five secret societies. Almost every man in the town and the surrounding country belongs to a church or secret society, or both . . . The congregations have increased in numbers and interest. . . . . Pride, formality and secrecy have received a moral shock. . . . We devoted one day's meeting to the exposition of secret societies. After we got through we invited them to correct any false statements that were made; but Masons and Odd fellows 'answered never a word.' Much prejudice and opposition have been removed. Souls have been clearly saved and are walking in the light; some have given up their secret societies." The best evidence that the lodge is not in harmony with Christianity is the eagerness with which converted sinners forsake the secret orders as soon as the light of the Holy Spirit falls upon them. It is almost a universal experience, and may be accepted as the keynote to a convert's spiritual condition. A church may tolerate secrecy in the lodges, as many do, and lodge-members may be prominent in the affairs of such a church; but it is safe to say that no true follower of the Lord Jesus can fellowship with such a church or the lodges at which it winks.

A LEGEND OF SCOTLAND.

BY MRS VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

It was early morning in a little hamlet among the highlands of Scotland. At the foot of a high cliff was a little thatched cottage. The only door, which faced the street, was wide open, for it was midsummer, and the bees and butterflies flew in and out. But the house was not empty; no, for on a low pallet in a corner lay a young girl. Her frame was wasted by disease, and her eyes glowed with unnatural brightness. She looked longingly around the plainly-furnished room and said: "Three months have I lain here, three long months! and no one has given me one word of cheer or help in need but Dame McDonald. Ah, noble friend! But why does she not come? And my father lingers long on the mountains."

A footstep sounded outside on the gravel, and soon a young woman entered. She greeted the sick girl cordially, saying: "I have come for a friendly chat with thee, my lass, for sad indeed are the days we have fallen on. Ah! child, witchcraft is a sad evil, and no one is safe."

"Dost thou believe such foolish notions, Joan McGregor?"

"Ay, Jessie McLeod, and so does the clergy. Doth not Holy Writ say, Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live?"

"But that does not apply to these times," said the sick girl; "that was given to the ancient Israelites: we are wiser."

Joan McGregor rose, saying, "Did I not tell thee that none were safe? Have they not seized upon Dame McDonald as a witch? ay, and have lighted the death-fire for aught I know. They have gathered south of yonder mountain a mighty crowd—ay, betake thyself to prayer, lass. for a horrid deed will be done this night."

She departed, and Jessie McLeod listened until the sound of her footsteps died away down the hill; then she sat up in her bed and wept like one distracted.

"O Dame McDonald," she cried, "my friend, my dear friend! thou who hast taken the place of my dead mother, can I do nothing to save thee? I must, I shall; and they have lighted the death-fire, Joan tells me. Now, may God give me strength!" She stepped from her couch, arrayed herself in a long plaid cloak, crept feebly across the room, passed out and shut the door.

It was indeed as Joan McGregor had said. A mighty crowd had gathered south of the mountain. Men, women and children were there. The death-fire was not lighted, but it was ready, and near it stood a comely dame with a dark, coarse, but kindly face, and dark eyes and hair. Her hands were bound, and her dark, bright eyes wandered searchingly among the crowd as if seeking a friendly face.

A tall man stepped forward near the death-pile and said: "Friends and neighbors! it has been decreed that Dame McDonald shall die. She is a witch. Who says nay? Shall we light the death-pile?" Not a voice was raised in that vast throng; not a hand was lifted.

The tall man was about to speak again when there stepped forward facing the multitude a fair, comely maiden. Her face was ghastly in its pallor, but her eyes were bright and her voice rang like a trumpet as, lifting her hand, she cried: "I protest against this murder!—ay, it is murder! Friends, Scotchmen! are ye mad? She a witch? Nay, she is an angel. Listen: for many weeks I have lain helpless upon my bed. Who came to me when I was lonely and in pain? Who held the cooling draught to my lips? Who read the words of Holy Writ and sang the songs of Zion to comfort my longing soul? She a witch! Nay, my brothers, she is one of Israel's saints. Dare to shed one drop of her blood!"

At this his heavy hands were laid upon the maiden's shoulders and, turning, she saw the powerful form of her father. "Thou art brave, my daughter," he said; "thou art thy father's own child. The blood of a brave ancestry courses through thy veins. Canst thou do this?" He placed a knife in her hands and she stepped forward and severed the cords which bound the wrists of the condemned woman. The dame clasped her arms about the maiden, and the girl led her where her father stood.

Then Sandy McLeod, lifting his right hand, cried: "Men of Scotland! what is it ye do? A base, a cowardly deed! Would ye put to death a woman whose whole life has been full of good deeds? Hear me! Shed but one drop of her blood, and the clans of Douglas and Cameron will sweep down from yonder mountains and every home in this valley will be burned to ashes. They are even now mustering their forces beyond yonder mountains. Be warned, and do no more. I have said." And he led away his daughter and Dame McDonald, and the crowd dispersed.

It was night in the cabin of Sandy McLeod. Overhead the stars shone, though the mountains were veiled in shadow. The death-pile yet stood, but no hand had fired it, no flesh had scorched and shriveled beneath its blaze, and no cry of agony had rent the soft summer air. Within McLeod's cabin, upon her couch, pale but peaceful and happy, lay Jessie McLeod. By her side, her dark brown hand clasped in Jessie's thin one, sat Dame McDonald. Her dark face showed traces of recent suffering, but a sweet smile played upon her lips as she watched the face of the maiden whose hand she held. By the heavy oaken table on which was a lighted taper, his leather-covered Bible open before him, sat Sandy McLeod, and his voice rolled like muffled thunder through the silent room as he read the words of the prophet Isaiah: "Fear thou not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness."

MASONIC ALLEGATIONS OF FALSEHOOD ANSWERED BY EDMOND RONAYNE.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—The following letter was handed me a day or two ago by one of the Board of Directors of the National Christian Association, and as the writer seems desirous that some statements about Freemasonry, printed in the Lodge Lamp of September and December, 1894, be either proven or retracted, I shall here endeavor, with your kind permission, to gratify the brother to the best of my ability. Here is his letter:

453 Fourth St., Brooklyn, N.Y., Feb. 1, 1895.
Messrs. National Christian Association,
221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill:

Gentlemen:—I take it, from your title, that you are Christian people, meaning, by that term, Christ-like. Am I correct?

There have come to my notice recently two copies of your little paper entitled the Lodge Lamp. I am a Past Master of my lodge of Masons, and at present High Priest of my chapter, and I challenge you to prove the correctness of several statements made in your paper, and to print this letter in your paper.

On the 4th page of the September, 1894, number, at top of first column, it states that "my oath requires me to give up my prayer-meeting and go to the lodge." I denominate this a falsehood, and if you are honorable Christian men, you will investigate from Masons who know what they are talking about, and ascertain that it is false, and retract the statement in a subsequent issue of your paper.

On the 4th page of the December number, 1894, in what is alleged to be the oath of a Royal Arch Mason, it is stated that "I will assist a companion Royal Arch Mason," etc., "whether he be right or wrong."

I denominate this language a falsehood, and if you are honorable Christian men, attacking lodges and secret societies for the sake of God and Christ, you will investigate this matter, and find out wherein you have allowed to appear in your paper a gross falsehood and misrepresentation; one for which you are as guilty as though you actually told a lie to some person of your acquaintance.

There is nothing in Masonry to oblige a member to attend his lodge. If he be summoned, he can "answer or obey." He can answer the summons and excuse his absence by letter or by word of mouth to another brother.

There is no obligation in Masonry which compels a member of the order to help, aid or assist an unworthy brother, and one who is in the wrong as regards the laws of the country would by that fact forfeit his right to help, aid or assistance.

Attack us honestly and you may perhaps accomplish something, but attack us dishonestly and by falsehood. such as that to which I have called your attention above, and you must fail, for that God whom you profess to serve and which all good Masons revere and adore is always on the side of right. Yours respectfully,

C. S. Maynard.

Now in the foregoing letter it will be noticed that while Past Master Maynard alleges that the papers above referred to contain "several false statements," yet he specifies only two—one a garbled quotation of his own from the September number, and the other an extract from the oath of a Royal Arch Mason. With regard to his first point of objection, these are the true facts: In 1889 Col. Geo. R. Clarke, a seceding 32-degree Mason, delivered an address on secret societies in a neighboring city, in which he made the following statements: "If my church had a prayer meeting on Friday night, and the lodge had a certain meeting on the same night, it makes no difference how much the cause of Christ requires my attendance, if the lodge says 'I demand you to come here,' my oath requires me to give up my prayer meeting and go to the lodge." This statement Bro. Maynard "denominates" a falsehood, and challenges proof. Col. Clarke, however, knew what he was talking about. He did not consider himself bound by any iron-clad Masonic oath; neither did he stand in awe of any Masonic death-penalty, and hence he could and did speak the truth, while Mr. Maynard is bound by his oath "always to conceal," and therefore, when discussing Masonry with " a profane," he is bound, as a good Mason, to hide the truth; and so he makes the assertion as above. "There is nothing in Masonry to oblige a member to attend the lodge," etc. There is nothing in Masonry to oblige a member to attend every meeting of a lodge, but, as Bro. Clarke states, he must attend "a certain meeting," under penalty. Look at the Master Mason's oath: "Furthermore, that I will answer and obey all due signs and summons sent to me from a lodge of Master Masons, as given to me by a brother of this degree, if within the length of my cable-tow." Now observe the language of this oath: Here the Master Mason is sworn, under penalty, to do two things. He swears to "answer" and he swears to "obey." To "answer" and to "obey" what? He swears to answer "all due signs" given to him by a brother, and to "obey all due summons" sent to him from a lodge of Master Masons. Obedience to the summons is one of the cardinal principles of Masonry, and is of such binding force that when a lodge issues a summons with the seal of the lodge attached, the member to whom it is addressed is bound under oath to attend, whether he be a member of that lodge or not. This is good Masonic law and usage, and Mr. Maynard, as a Past Master, knows that it is. This was the kind of meeting—"a summoned lodge"—that Col. Clarke referred to when he made the statement which has caused our "worthy brother" Maynard to lose one of his "precious jewels" by revealing a part of the Master Mason's oath, only substituting the word "or" for "and." No, my dear Bro. Maynard, "the one unpardonable crime in a Mason is disobedience"—disobedience to a summons—and you know it.

And now as regards the second objection. Mr. Maynard goes on to say: "There is no obligation in Masonry which compels a member of the order to help, aid or assist an unworthy brother, and one who is in the wrong as regards the laws of the country would by that fact forfeit his right to help, aid or assistance."

In direct refutation of this statement, I want to quote the Master Mason's oath as bearing specially upon this very point: "Furthermore, that I will not give the grand hailing sign, or sign of distress, of a Master Mason, except in real distress in case of the most imminent danger within a regularly constituted lodge of Master Masons, or in some place for Masonic instruction; and should I see the sign given, or hear the words accompanying it, I will immediately repair to the relief of the person so giving it, should there be a greater probability of saving his life than of losing my own." Here, then, we have two Master Masons supposedly placed in two opposite conditions. The one "in real distress," or "in imminent danger," giving the distress sign, and the other, without any "distress" or "danger," seeing the sign given; and notice, further, that in this oath there is no question involved as to the worthiness or unworthiness of the one giving the sign. It is simply enough that he is a Master Mason "in real distress" or "in imminent danger," and the oath absolutely requires that under such circumstances "immediate relief" be afforded him to the very fullest extent by his brother Master Mason who sees the sign given.

But right here another question arises. Under what combination of circumstances can a Master Mason be ever "in real distress" or "in imminent danger?" Is it when he is engaged in a street brawl or a bar-room fight? Not at all. As a general thing, Freemasons do not engage in such acts of rowdyism. To what condition, then, does this clause of the Masonic oath apply? It applies simply and solely to that condition where the Master Mason finds himself a criminal before the bar of justice, and where the big doors of the penitentiary or the hangman's rope are looming up gloomily before him. Bro. Maynard speaks very glibly of a Mason "in the wrong as regards the laws of the country and forfeiting by that fact his right to help, aid or assistance," when the real truth is that this very clause of the Masonic oath applies to Masonic criminals and to none else, and demands recognition and immediate relief from the Masonic juror. It applies to Masonic boodlers in public office, to Masonic defaulters, to Masonic postoffice thieves, and to Masons in various other stages of criminality. All these different classes we have had right here in Chicago, and we have them with us yet, as they were never punished for their crimes. The Master Mason's oath saved them either through the sheriff or the jury box.

But, again, one of the lessons sought to be impressed upon the mind of an Entered Apprentice at his initiation is that "as he advances in Masonry his obligations become more and more binding." Bro. Maynard will readily remember this quotation, he being a Past Master. Let us leave the Master Mason's oath, then, and examine for a moment the oath of a Royal Arch Mason. Of course, we may expect to find this latter "more binding," though it seems rather difficult to determine how any oath can be "more binding" than that already quoted from the third degree; but here is the clause to which M. E. High Priest Maynard objects: "Furthermore, that I will aid and assist a companion Royal Arch Mason when I find him engaged in any difficulty, and will espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same, if in my power, whether he be right or wrong." Now, one word with regard to this portion of this most abominable oath. In no two jurisdictions in this country is the Masonic ritual literally alike; indeed, there is no such thing as "uniformity of work" among the lodges and chapters of even the same jurisdiction. Verbal differences will be found among them all, and hence in many chapters the last words of the above clause of the oath are omitted, so that it reads: "I will aid and assist a companion Royal Arch Mason when I shall find him engaged in any difficulty, and will espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same if in my power." But where is the difference? They are both virtually the same, and both are in direct conflict with the proper execution of the laws of our republic.

But may I ask, what right has the abominable system of Freemasonry, with its horrible oaths and revolting penalties of death, to demand any recognition at all under the stars and stripes, and in our republican form of government? It is an aristocratic and an autocratic institution, suitable for crowned heads, petty princes, monopolists, capitalists, trusts and schemers of every order in high places, and ought to be legislated out of the country and back again to where it came from. Just think of it! C. S. Maynard, of 453 Fourth st., Brooklyn, N. Y., sworn to have his "throat cut and his tongue torn out," his "left breast torn open and his heart plucked out," and his "body severed in twain and his bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes!" Who is to perform all this human butchery? And having all these horrible death-penalties as part and parcel of its constitution, may I ask my Bro. Maynard, what real difference is there between Freemasonry and the "Mafia" of New Orleans or the "Highbinders" of California? Very respectfully,

E. RONAYNE,
Past Master Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago.

WHAT HAS THE GRANGE DONE FOR FARMERS?

It has taught one thing and at the same time it has practiced another. The Grange assumes to teach economy, but in practice it is an organization of extravagance. In the years 1873 and 1874 the Grange reached its culmination as an organization. During these two years the farmers paid to this order about $3,000,000 as initiation fees alone. This vast sum does not include money paid for charters, regalia, quarterly dues, rent and fuel, or for building houses suitable for such an organization. Neither does it include the vast amount paid to the national and State Granges and for worthless farm implements which were sold to farmers at enormous prices. Add these items to the above and you have a sum or amount almost beyond computation. Now the great bulk of this money has been drawn from the productions of the farm by a little company of swindlers whom farmers have no control over whatever. Think of $4,000,000,000 annually coming from the honest products of labor to satisfy a few men of greed, and is it any wonder that we have depressions? The fact is that farmers should organize and co-operate to break the grip the Grange has upon them, for it has utterly failed to make good its promises to farmers. The national Grange in 1874 at St. Louis said in its declaration of purposes that "we will labor for the good time coming." Twenty years have come and gone and thousands of farmers have died without the fulfillment of this promise. When this declaration was made, land here was bringing from sixty to seventy-five dollars per acre; now the same is offered for thirty to forty-five dollars. Then, wheat was selling for $1.10 per bushel; now it is selling at forty-seven cents; and so it is with other things on the farm in proportion. It is utterly absurd for farmers to expect that the Grange will ever bring about the era of good things.

Another thing the Grange has done. It has caused farmers all over this country to spend many hours and even days over a silly and deceptious ritual which never did and never will give any farmer a particle of practical knowledge of agriculture, no matter if it does assume that its "teachings are the loftiest that a man can seek." All who have sought the teaching of the order have learned by experience the silly monotony of its performances.

One more thing the Grange has done. It has taught farmers that they can organize for co-operation in keeping with our principles of government. Hence, hundreds and thousands are leaving the Grange and uniting with the farmers' club, which offers every benefit that can be obtained by organization. The farmers' club offers no encouragement to schemers and swindlers. Demagogues and speculators find no inducements here; and the only reason that some continue to co-operate with the Grange is that the order has grown rich and they remain hoping to reap where they have not strewn. But for this, the Grange would have been buried with the things of the past, and that, too, without a mourner. —George W. Staley in the Christian Conservator.

THE BIBLE AS THE BASIS OF LAW.

Rev. D. S. Faris, of Sparta, Ill., wrote the following radical definition of law for one of his local papers:

Law rests in the bosom of God. The moral law, which is the will of God for the direction of his rational creatures, is revealed in the nature of man, and discovered by the eye of reason, and so is called the law of nature. It is more clearly revealed in the Bible, and there is called the law of divine revelation. Blackstone affirms that these are parts of one original, but that the law of divine revelation is infinitely more authentic than the law of nature, as coming directly from God himself.

The moral law is the foundation of all human law. Blackstone says that no human law has any validity except as it is based on the will of God. Civil law corresponds to the judicial law of Moses, and is the moral law adapted to men living in society. Ecclesiastical law is the same adapted to men in their relation as church members. The foundation is the same, while the object and the method differ. As to the object, civil law is designed to establish peace and order, without which, owing to the practices of sinful men, society would be impossible. Ecclesiastical law is designed to reconcile sinners to God and fit them for their duties in life and happiness after death. The civil law is enforced by the sword; that is, by bodily pains and penalties, the last of which is death. The church law is enforced by various spiritual censures, the last of which is exclusion from the body of Christ. The officers of the law are God's ministers, and are limited by the conditions he prescribes.

God never designed that the punishment inflicted by men should be conclusive and final. In the nature of the case they cannot be. They are necessarily partial and imperfect. God allows men to punish only by process of law, that is by judges and officers elected from among the people for this purpose. They are limited to those cases that can be proved by two or three witnesses. The punishments are prescribed by himself, and nothing more horrible is permitted in the state than death, nor in the church than exclusions. How wicked the executions of law by the irresponsible mob, without trial or proof, and often by terrible tortures!

Over and above the punishment inflicted by man, God will punish in this life and in the judgment day all sins and transgressions according to the claims of absolute justice. This punishment will include sins of thought, word and deed. God only can judge the heart and punish the motive as well as the deed.

In this sense, then, God administers the moral law, that his punishments satisfy the claims of divine justice, while civil and ecclesiastical rulers vindicate justice only in a limited degree. Their right to punish is delegated from God, and limited to a narrow circle of crimes, because their knowledge of facts is limited. Both the civil and ecclesiastical should vindicate the overt transgressions of all the precepts of the moral law. The civil power shouldpunish the gross and palpable violations of both tables of the law, such as atheism, gross idolatry, blasphemy, Sabbath breaking, as well as overt offences against human rights. The church law should proceed against those sins that scandalize the Christian religion, though they may not disturb the peace of society.

Neither civil nor church rulers can judge the heart; they can deal only with those sins that are capable of proof.

The moral law is the foundation of all law. God is the Judge of judges, and puts a final punishment upon the sins of men, and renders to every one fully according to his deserts. Earthly rulers by God's will punish crime for certain reasons pertaining to our present state; while God, the judge of all, holds in reserve his sovereign right to vindicate law in all violators by thought, word and deed.

"CHRISTIAN SCIENCE" UNVEILED.

"Science and Health," a book by Mrs. Eddy, the apostle of the "Christian Scientists," is the Bible of that misled and misleading religious sect, and its sales are alleged to have reached a fabulous number, showing its capability of antagonizing true Christianity. How it does this may be seen by a review of its false doctrines by Rev. Wilson T. Hogg, editor of the Free Methodist, who says:

On pages 377, 378 and 393 of "Science and Health" Mrs. Eddy positively and repeatedly denies the existence of a personal God. Her teachings concerning Jesus are, that he is a man, while Christ is the divine principle of the man. This divine principle however is common to all men, according to her system. Hence Jesus was simply and solely a perfect man, yet no more perfect than is every man in his essential being. The only difference is, he exemplified the divine principle more fully than others in his life. This is a most refined and subtle denial of the true divinity of our Saviour. (Ibid, pp. 408, 501, 530.) She defines the Holy Spirit as "Divine Science" (p. 538), and the baptism of the Spirit as being baptized with "Divine Science" (p. 513), another denial of a fundamental Christian doctrine. Throughout the whole work she repeatedly denies the existence and even the possibility of sin. The denial of vicarious atonement follows, per consequence, the denial of sin (p. 528). The doctrine of pardon is ridiculed (p. 490). Prayer to a personal God is declared to be unavailing (pp. 492 and 489). "There is no death," according to this system (p 531), and a future probation is positively asserted (p. 528). Thus the text-book of this whole system, written by its founder who is still living, emphatically denies every fundamental doctrine of Christianity, and substitutes in their stead the rehabilitated but long ago exploded idealism of the old pagan philosophers, combined with the heresies of the ancient Gnostics and the absurdities and vagaries of the corrupt oriental religions—a conglomeration at which it would seem as if Satan himself must stand aghast. Such is the system which is alleged to have "led an army of well-meaning people to believe in God," etc.

Bigotry is always detestable and charity is everywhere to be praised, but charity never requires one to wink at error or to fellowship evil; and the Scripture says, "Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A climatic change.—The death of Frederick Douglass —Secret societies prohibited in the high school of New Haven.—A conundrum.—Military training in the schools —Antiquarian treasures.

Southern politicians, in ante-bellum times, used to talk of "leaving New England out in the cold." With the Florida "freeze," and snow two feet on a level reported in Houston, Texas, while we in Massachusetts have been enjoying bright, sunny weather for over two weeks, with an atmosphere only just sharp enough to be enjoyably bracing, it looks as if it was the "Sunny South," instead of New England, that was passing through this unpleasant experience.

The death of Frederick Douglass naturally calls up many reminiscences of that exciting period. One of the strongest and brightest novels that this epoch called out from a New England writer was J. T. Trowbridge's "Neighbor Jackwood." It still holds its own, after a lapse of forty years, and by good right. There are those who read it when it first appeared who have not yet forgotten the racy humor, the blending of fun and pathos, in its characters, which were as thoroughly of New England soil as are the huckleberries and sweet fern that grow in her pastures. No wonder it was dramatized, like "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The reception it met with on the first night, as told by Mr. Trowbridge in the last Atlantic Monthly, is a comment not only on the changes which forty years can make in moral sentiment, but on the backbone which characterized New England's literary guild at that time, conspicuously lacking as this quality was in some of her politicians. The pro-slavery element in the audience were greatly disturbed, and began a perfect pandemonium of howls and hisses, answered by a counterstorm of cheers and clappings from the other side, one party being bound that the performance should not go on, the other being equally firm that it should. And the latter won the day. "You will cut out those objectionable speeches?" whispered a timid friend in Mr. Trowbridge's ear. "No; I will strengthen them," was his fearless answer.

If ever a man rose superior to circumstances, that man was Frederick Douglass. Had his been a smaller, a less grandly proportioned nature, he might have been soured and embittered by his early experience in the school of slavery; but it is to the eternal credit of him and the colored race he represents, that he never allowed his sense of human injustice to eclipse his belief in Christianity. White men who plead the wrongs of labor and the indifference of the churches as an excuse for drifting into infidelity, may well be reproved by the example of Frederick Douglass. Born in the very lowest social strata, who of those to whom liberty was their legal birthright ever used their freedom better? He knew its value too well, and held it as too precious a pearl to give into the keeping of a secret society. The men who despised Frederick Douglass on account of the color of his skin are very generally forgotten, South and North, while his name, now that he has passed to the silent majority, is on all lips; nor will it cease to be remembered while there is a colored race to take pride in the record left by their great leader.

The New Haven Board of Education has prohibited all secret societies in the High School. How prevalent secret societies are in our high schools generally I do not know, but if they exist in New Haven they probably do in other places, and must be productive of the same mischievous and harmful results that make them the bane of college life. Parents who do not approve of such associations for their boys and girls would do well to make inquiries in their own particular township, and boards of education in other places will be very likely to follow suit.

The Intercollegiate Association, whatever that is, has voted for an international intercollegiate contest on English soil—not a contest in literature, but in athletics. A leading authority in such matters states that if such a contest should be held, the representatives of American colleges who participate in it would have to go through more than seven months of consecutive training. One meekly wonders when, where and how these aspirants for athletic honors propose to study their Greek and higher mathematics, or whether they will procure a demit for the time being, and drop these with other similar and secondary matters altogether. Harvard, by the way, proposes to have a professorship in Russian. Judging from the criticism made by our foreign visitors from Oxford, Harvard had better give more attention to our noble English tongue, and let the Russian professorship wait.

The Massachusetts Legislature has rejected the bill to make the 17th of June a legal holiday. It is said to have been defeated at the last by saloon influence, an amendment having been made to the bill providing that the saloons should be closed on that day. If this is really what killed it, we have another humiliating instance of the power which the liquor interest has in our legislature, particularly in the senate. Whether, in itself, it was a wise movement, or otherwise, is open to question. The movement to make a legal holiday of Lincoln's birthday seems preferable to adding another battle anniversary, and thus increasing the present craze for everything military. One of the greatest menaces to our country's future lies in the training of our young people by the military drill in schools, to delight in war and its accesories. It is simply astonishing that Christian people do not see where this system is tending. If we ever have a military despotism, as Herbert Spencer and other deep thinkers on the other side of the water predict; or if classes and religions should ever interlock in one death-struggle for supremacy, by thus fostering militarism in the rising generation we are planning for just such a state of things. The love of military display is an essential part both of Rome and Masonry, and facts tend to show that both have a finger in promoting the present military boom, so contrary to the genius both of Christianity and of Protestantism.

There are many antiquarian treasures scattered about in New England homes. A citizen of New Britain, Conn., has in his possession a pair of old saddlebags that once belonged to Nathan Hale, the young martyr of Revolutionary fame. The watch owned by Roger Williams, after having been kept in the family for several generations, was sold and is now in the Downer collection of curiosities in New York. It is said to still keep fair time. But perhaps the most interesting antiquity of all, obtained by accident at a second-hand bookstore, is a copy of the famous "Breeches" Bible, now in the possession of a citizen of Hartford. It was brought over in the Mayflower by William White, and contains the family record, including the birth of his son Peregrine, the first white child born on New England soil. Eyes dim with tears have pored over those sacred pages, and hearts homesick for the dear English shores, left behind forever, have been comforted, "even as one whom his mother comforteth," by its visions of "a better country, even a heavenly." God give to New England a revival of the Bible loving spirit of old, and she will be again the New England of old.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The Congressional Temperance Society —Progress of the Christian Endeavor movement —Miss Willard and Mrs. Cleveland —Other matters.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 27, 1895.

It is true, as Representative Dingley, of Maine, president of the Congressional Temperance Society, said in his address at the sixty-third anniversary of that organization, that it was a subject for congratulation that the society was the oldest of its kind in the United States, and probably in the world. But there would be more reason for congratulations and much increase of heartiness in them if the society would be active enough to be heard of occasionally between its anniversary meetings. Men should be encouraged for talking temperance, or any other reform, even once a year. But I must say that Mr. Dingley was taking, in my humble opinion, a rather rosy view of the influence of the Congressional Temperance Society in citing the conditions existing when the society was organized and comparing them with existing conditions, leaving the impression that the society had accomplished much in this remarkable progress. Perhaps it has, but I believe that this progress is due to the work of those who advocate temperance and other moral reforms 365 days in every year. I fully agree with Mr. Dingley that "the standing of the society, because of its membership at the Capitol, where it can bear the standard of temperance aloft, is a reminder that the movement is national and world-wide," and trust that the society will see the wisdom of rallying around that standard oftener than once a year. This is not a disparagement of the Congressional Temperance Society. On the contrary, its members are worthy of the highest commendation, and deserve to be praised for the good example they are setting their fellow members of Congress. But there are not enough of them. In the new Congress there will be an unusually large number of new men, who will face the dissipation and temptations of official life in Washington for the first time. The Congressional Temperance Society should be able to do some good missionary work among these new men and to largely increase its membership.

Just before Christmas the '96 Christian Endeavor Committee recommended that members of the organization contribute $10,000 of the money required to entertain the delegates to the International Convention to be held in Washington next year, and proposed a plan to make the raising of the money easy upon individual Endeavorers. Both recommendation and plan were adopted with enthusiasm, and members from each society in the District were appointed to canvass their members for subscriptions, ranging from $1.20 to $60, payable in twelve monthly installments. At a meeting, held this week, to ascertain how the work was progressing, it was shown that $4 758.10 had been subscribed in the societies in forty-six churches, and that eighteen societies had not yet reported. Members are confident that the $10,000 will be raised. The largest subscription from one society was that of Mount Vernon Place M. E church—$405; the First Congregational following with $326.40, and the New York Avenue Presbyterian with $300.60.

Miss Frances E Willard had the pleasure, during her present visit to Washington, of enlisting a valuable recruit to the ranks of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—no less a personage, in fact, than Mrs. Cleveland. Temperance and reform workers have always found Mrs. Cleveland ready to sympathize with them in their efforts for the betterment of the world, but much as her sympathy has been appreciated, her services as a co-worker will be more appreciated.

Several temperance workers of national reputation were speakers at the mass meeting held in the First Congregational church Sunday afternoon, under the auspices of the Anti-Saloon League. Among them were Mrs. Lillian Hollister, of the Michigan W. C. T U.; Ex Gov. Sidney Perham, of Maine, and Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, of Indiana. With such speakers, it is needless to add that the meeting was an interesting one.

A special service in the interest of the Society of the King's Daughters was held Sunday night at the Metropolitan M. E. church, and Mrs. Gibbs of Canada and Mrs. Davis of New York delivered addresses on the history of this excellent organization, which Mrs. Gibbs declared to be "one of the great feeders of the church."

Rev. S. L Beiler, vice-chancellor of the new American University, who has a reputation as a maker of beautiful word-pictures, addressed the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon on "The Religion of the Times."

Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, of New York, has been elected president of the National Women's Council, which is still in session here, and Rev. Anna H. Shaw, of Philadelphia, vice-president-at-large. *

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Strike of the Electrical Workers' Union.—Foreign flags on public buildings.—Gen. Booth and the Salvation Army.—Boys' Brigades.

The Electrical Workers' Union has just inaugurated a strike which bids fair to involve all the building trades and eclipse in magnitude any other labor trouble of the year. It does not directly affect the public convenience as did the Brooklyn trolly-strike; but if the sympathetic strike includes the building trades, it means that not the sound of a hammer will be heard in the entire city, and that 80,000 men will either strike themselves, or be obliged to quit work as a result of others striking.

The immediate cause of this trouble is the refusal of the Electrical Contractors' Association to grant the demand of the union for an eight-hour work-day. Many large buildings are in process of erection, in different parts of the city, on which the work has already ceased. The contractors are relying on the Master Builders' Association to stand by them, and propose to fight the matter to the bitter end, as they declare the strike to be unnecessary and unjustifiable.

Although the Brooklyn trolly-strike has been practically broken for several weeks, it has been only recently declared off officially by the strikers, by the very narrow majority of twelve. Nearly every day, however, acts of violence are perpetrated in various sections of the city by the disorderly element, for which the strikers have disclaimed all responsibility.

The Legislature has just passed the Lawson bill to prohibit the display of foreign flags on public buildings. This will relieve our city officially from much embarrassment and at the same time admit of suitable decorations in entertaining foreign visitors. While the city was under the control of the Irish Romanists of Tammany Hall, the Irish flag was flying from the flag-staff of the City Hall every St. Patrick's day, and all the public buildings were covered with green bunting. Modest and reasonable requests from societies representing other nationalities for similar privileges were howled down with derision and disdain. Indeed, a few years ago, when a loyal British-American, in a certain quarter of the city, thought to honor the Queen's birthday by displaying an English flag from one of the windows of his private dwelling, a mob gathered and threatened to wreck the house unless the obnoxious banner was removed. It is a fact often commented on by students of contemporaneous history, that the Irish are practically ruling every country on earth but their own. May that day be far distant when either the yellow flag of the papacy or the green one of the Emerald Isle shall be seen above the stars and stripes!

Monday and Tuesday evenings, February 25 and 26, the farewell meetings of Gen. Booth were held in this country, prior to his sailing for England. They were largely attended and most enthusiastic. The Salvation Army has won its way to a warm place in the regard and confidence of the community. Much adverse criticism, on account of its unique methods, has been silenced by the phenomenal success which has attended its philanthropic enterprises, as well as through the ability and wisdom of its leaders. Mrs. Maud Booth is a welcome and frequent visitor in many a palatial mansion, and nearly every week conducts drawing-room meetings and parlor conferences among elegant ladies of leisure and fashion, and on Sunday night addresses crowded meetings of working people in Cooper Union. The Army is building a large and thoroughly equipped structure on Fourteenth street which, when completed this spring, will be the national headquarters.

Another organization which professss to be military and semi-religious is the Baptist Boys' Brigade. This has sprung up within the past two or three years, and has had a marvelous growth and popularity. Nearly every Baptist church of any size in New York and vicinity has companies of boys enrolled. Anti-liquor, tobacco and profanity pledges are taken, and so-called "Bible drills" engaged in, in connection with the military drill, which, it is claimed, are most helpful in solving the perplexing problem of how to interest the boys in spiritual things and secure their attendance on church services. The military element, however, is the chief attraction, and this emphasized as much as possible, and steps are now being taken whereby the officers of this organization shall become regularly commissioned. While recognizing certain incidental religious benefits which may accrue from this movement, it is certainly open to very grave objections. Not to speak of its tacit encouragement of secrecy and exclusiveness, the tendency of the entire system is to create and foster a warlike spirit of militarism which is fundamentally and eternally opposed to the Gospel of the Prince of Peace. The boys are bright enough to understand that the guns they carry are for the express purpose of killing their fellow men. A generation that has been trained in the art of war is likely to embrace any opportunity that may be afforded for its exercise. Notwithstanding the fact that there have been, and are now, many noble Christian men who have adopted the profession of the soldier, yet in any sense war is brutal, bloodthirsty and devilish, and any scheme or movement that tends in the remotest degree to glorify or perpetuate it, can not be too deeply deprecated and deplored. It does seem as if the Peace and Arbitration societies have good ground for their animadversions upon the Boys' Brigades. They are not calculated to hasten that long-looked for and much-prayed-for time, when the nations shall learn war no more.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

Willimantic, Conn., Feb. 23, 1895.

Dear Cynosure:—Word received from the Eastern agent requires my presence at the Philadelphia convention. After filling Sabbath engagements, I take the first Monday express for New York.

Bro. Conant is not grieving over his defeat as a candidate of the American party for Vice President, but is in good health and heart.

Brother and Sister Buck, of Putnam, are feeling the infirmity of years and the effect of the severe cold as they look out from the tribulations and shadows of the life that now is to that which is to come.

The recent death of Postmaster J. W. Webb, of this city, furnished occasion for advertising the several crafts to which he belonged. The "Ancient Order of Freemasons" led off in the parade. A largely attended service was held in the Congregationalist church, in which believers found a crumb of comfort in the Scripture reading and prayer by Pastor Dinsmore, while spiritualists and unbelievers were highly edified by the sermon. The preacher imported for the occasion from Tennessee is the Rev. S R. Tree, with whom Rev. Mr. Barlow crossed swords when both were pastors in this city. Whether a member of the lodge, or not, Mr. Tree's remarks, reported in last evening's Journal, are acceptable alike to the "true Mason" and other rejectors of Christ who rely upon ceremonies and morality for salvation. "Jesus," he said, "talked about the kingdom of God; the spirit of love and kindness in this world lays the foundation of that kingdom; the eternal life is in the man here, and if we have a life governed by affection, we have eternal life." Did the author of this statement ever read in God's Book: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent?" or, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God?" Such a preacher can readily yoke up with Freemasons, but such preaching is no more in harmony with the teaching of the apostles than is Christ with Belial.

To the clipping I sent yesterday we have an addendum in to-day's Boston Herald Yesterday's communication asserts that the A. P. A. "captured the caucuses in the second Middlesex senatorial district." To day's issue scouts the idea that this secret lodge may try a similar game in capturing caucuses for gubernatorial nominations. The writer asserts that "so absurd and impolitic an action is almost incredible," adding that a nomination by a secret society would jeopardize the success of the Republican party. Has the Ethiopian A. P. A. changed its skin since the Middlesex secret underhanded procedure occurred? We are told that it was done then, and why may it not be repeated? We are told that the A. P. A. has become more secretive and difficult to trace along its slimy path, and may may not the "hidden hand" strike a fatal blow when the crucial moment comes? Like every assassin, its work is in the dark, and can never be trusted. The fact is that this whole scheme of conniving and capturing by secret emissaries is un American, *un*patriotic and grossly fraudulent. It is of a piece with the schemes of the Jesuits, which it professes to oppose, but of which it is, in reality if not intentionally, a part.

Certainly it looks a little queer when a foreigner, who may or may not have filed his intention to become a good citizen, is placed at the head of a movement in Massachusetts, to resist the encroachments of a foreign power upon our domestic institutions. How much would such a leader have to change his tactics to become a first-call Jesuit? How much does he come short of out-Satolli-ing Satolli himself, who has at least the virtue of openly avowing his allegiance to the Pope and the policy of Rome? I knew a man who refrained from becoming a citizen before the late war, because he anticipated a conflict and wanted to claim protection from the British government when the fight was on. His patriotism was not unlike to that of the man accepting leadership in a political movement, and who is not a citizen de facto. He exposes himself to suspicions of disloyalty to the American flag, or to a lack of courage equal to meet the responsibilities of citizenship, and facing the consequences like a man. He is just the specimen of manhood that training in a secret lodge produces, whether he masquerades before the people as a D D. or a Jesuit, or an A. P. A champion. When weighed in the balance of true patriotism, he is found wanting.

The prayer of every loyal citizen of Massachusetts should be: From all such slimy, slippery, double-faced, under-handed political demagogues and tricksters, good Lord deliver our grand old commonwealth. James P. Stoddard.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST AGENT.

Mt. Tabor, Ore., Feb. 20, 1895.

From Canby I came to Portland again, preaching and laboring a few nights in the meeting, which was still in progress. Through the combined influence of sectarian, lodge-ridden churches, secret societies, and a lack of moral backbone in a few who profess to oppose the lodges, much good was prevented that otherwise might have been accomplished.

It was thought advisable by the pastor to have me speak on the lodge question in the new church. After the announcement had been made, a few timid souls thought it might injure our influence as a denomination to have it in the church; so I hired the Piedmont Hall, near by, and spoke there. The hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, with many Masons and Odd-fellows on hand to hear what could be said against them. I spoke of the orders from the Christian standpoint, not forgetting to show how they interfere with the home and government. The "boys" heard what they did not expect, I am sure, by the way they winced. For one hour and a half I held the audience, and I think good was accomplished. It tended to show up, in their true light, such men as continually say, "I would leave any church before I would leave my lodge." Such persons prefer the lodge to Jesus Christ and his church, and have no more business with the church than has an unconverted Hottentot. I believe in presenting the church of Jesus so pure and spotless before the world that it will attract men and cause them to desire it above any worldly institution.

From there I came yesterday to North Mount Tabor, where Rev. John T. Watson is holding a series of meetings in the Wesleyan church. I got here just in time for the afternoon Bible-reading on the subject of Separation. Secret societies were as freely discussed and condemned as any other evil. This people are alive to God, and dead to the world, and their influence is felt in the community. At night I preached. A deep conviction was on the congregation. We hope to hear of many turning to God.

The Bible-reading (same subject) is to be continued to-day.

To-morrow I go to Sherwood for two nights, and then return here to arrange my trip to the Sound. Pray for me. P. B. Williams.

CORRESPONDENCE.

UNCHRISTIAN CHURCH UNION.

Chicago, Feb. 28, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—I have been reading in the Gospel Trumpet, of Grand Junction, Mich., an account of a very remarkable movement of a religious character, which was inaugurated at Bay City, in that State, quite recently, and to which I desire to call the attention of your readers as an important sign of the times, and a significant token of the great apostacy in the Christian church during the last days of this dispensation.

The facts in the case are as follows:

As far back as November 29, Thanksgiving-day, the Protestant and Roman Catholic ministers of Bay City inaugurated a scheme looking to a ministerial union, having for its object the promotion of Christian unity and including all so-called Christian denominations.

This was the avowed and plausible scheme then broached. In pursuance of it, a meeting was held in the rectory of St. James' Catholic church (one day in January), at which nearly all the Catholic priests and a number of the leading Protestant ministers were present.

During the discussion of the proposed union, the following declaration was discussed at length and then adopted:

"The aim of this meeting is to instill into every Christian heart the necessity of mutual love and respect among the members of the mystical body of Christ. It is unnatural that the members of the same body should tear one another to pieces. They should protect and assist each other. The means to attain this end are of two kinds: (a) Fraternal meetings of the ministers of the different churches, with a view to becoming better acquainted, and for devising means whereby to carry on our mutual work; (b) public lectures on Christian unity, Christian tolerance, Christian charity and kindred subjects, to be delivered alternately by priest and minister. It must be well understood that the presence of a minister or a priest at one of our meetings does not in the least affect his distinctive religious principles. Each remains what he is, prejudice and its consequences excepted."

This declaration was signed by five Catholic priests and eight Protestant ministers, representing Presbyterian, Reform, Episcopal, Baptist, German Reform, Methodist Episcopal, Congregationalist and German Methodist churches.

The comments of the Gospel Trumpet on this declaration are bitterly denunciative. It sees in this movement the fulfillment of the prophecy: The healing of the wound that Rome received in the Lutheran Reformation by corrupted Protestantism, and the reconciliation of the two great powers, leading Protestants to re-associate and confederate with the enemies of Christianity. Protestantism has thus ceased to protest longer against the heresies of Rome or to separate itself from the papal domination: for it is certain that in any union like that at Bay City, Rome will either withdraw or eventually dominate over those who stoop to associate with it. It is the nature of Rome to rule whenever and wherever it can, and Bay City will be no exception.

Rome is crafty, treacherous to whatever opposes it, and unrelentingly the enemy of Protestantism, and in religious and political matters is not to be trusted, even under the guise of the most flattering overtures. Absolute separation from Rome is the only safety of our Protestant institutions.

FLY IN THE OINTMENT.

Andover, Conn., Feb. 21, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—Our dear Bro. Kimball adds to his editorial work at home strong and valuable help through the Cynosure. Its very strength is a reason why a slip of his pen is a more serious matter, since it is liable to be more influential. He will, I hope, receive in the thoroughly friendly spirit in which it is offered, what may reluctantly assume the form of a criticism.

I take much the same view as he does of a lodge insurance, though perhaps not exactly the same. It is usually of the "die to win" type common to all "assessment" schemes called "insurance." Such organizations, whether related to orders or not, issue certificates only and not policies. Strictly speaking, they do not offer to insure. They only admit to membership and to a chance of sharing in prospective or possible benefits.

An order, or an assessment asssociation, is not, technically speaking, an insurance company.

I doubt whether Bro. Kimball has, like myself, made a special study of life insurance. I have no connection of any kind with real life insurance, but I understand it, and am very sure that a remark of his needs revision, not to say erasure, in the interest of accuracy.

He says: "An honest, temperate, well man stands no fair chance in any insurance company." Such a statement has the air of the summing up of an investigation; but I have heard similar language before, from an objector who knew practically nothing about the methods of genuine insurance companies.

Life insurance should receive as clear an examination as is accorded to the orders, before suffering so sweeping a condemnation from so strong a hand. Bro. Kimball has a thorough knowledge of his subject when he writes about the lodge. He has the same when he reports the wretched condition of Odd-fellow assessments. But he passes outside the range of painstaking and careful examination, I am sure, or else states a point strongly to the extent of overbalance, when he speaks as he does of "any life insurance company." It reminds one of the way skeptics like to saddle on evangelical Christianity some features of the history of Roman Catholicism.

It is quite true that much has been done under the name of life insurance that would be against the interest of an "honest, temperate, well man," or any other sort of man. I am sorry that anything of the kind suggests and justifies a limited application of our valued brother's criticism. But this does not justify a charge so sweeping, and the facts of the case disprove it emphatically. The subject of life insurance is unfortunately much misunderstood. The misunderstandings result in misfortune. No one who knows the facts ought to be willing to see the errors reinforced or augmented. I am not discussing the subject itself here; neither am I indicating the safe and correct method. I am, however, trying to do my part to prevent the prevalence of prejudice and error, such as is liable to result in serious practical harm.

I know the facts of the case, and I know Bro. Kimball. Knowing both, I find it hard to believe that he wrote that sentence after thorough study of life insurance as a whole; but his article as a whole was a good one.

A Very Friendly Critic.

PRESS AND PULPIT SILENT.

————, N. H., February 21, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—Whoever has tried to help forward the anti-secret society cause has at once found that both the press and pulpit are, in a majority of cases, very careful about saying anything against the lodges. Years ago, when Tweed's stealings, in New York, were exposed, the newspapers did much, just as in the recent Tammany exposures, and the pulpit, also, did its share; and without their aid the movements in the interest of the people would no doubt have failed.

A few days since, one of the great New York dailies printed an illustrated article exposing the "oaths and initiation horrors" of the Mafia—the Italian secret society. It told how boys of fifteen and men of eighty-three were admitted and initiated; but while that ceremony was performed in the dark there was none of the silly, senseless mummery which is found in some secret initiations. In brief, a stiletto is held close to the candidate and some one whispers hoarsely, "Death to all traitors!" Then, sinking on his knees, the candidate points the stiletto to his own bared breast and swears that he would plunge it through his heart sooner than betray his brethren. Then some one reminds him that there are plenty who will do the plunging if he ever does prove unfaithful. The article also gave other facts, among which, it is said, the lowest as well as those of the highest standing join, and one member is bound to protect every other member. The paper publishing the article mentioned calls the Mafia "a murder-society," "a crime-breeding order," etc.; but any fair person will admit that the oaths and other ceremonies are tame compared with those taken by third-degree and higher Masons. Indeed, if this paper tells the truth—even if the Mafia be "a murder-society"—there is no drinking out of human skulls, nor any more wicked, horrible and blasphemous oaths than in Masonic lodges; nor anything to prove that the Italian society is really worse than some in America.

It is easy to see why the New York daily exposes the Mafia. Would it say as much of some other secret societies? Would it say one word against them? Open to-day's paper, and you find columns—perhaps pages—with plenty of portraits extolling this, that or the other secret clan. To-morrow, for a change, you have a dozen or so portraits of well-fed priests, and full accounts of their labors also. Next day, an illustrated full-page shows the imposing buildings and gives elaborate descriptions of various "homes" and "orphan asylums"—all of which are supposed to be devoted to the charity and good works of the secret lodge society. This society, practicing a great deal that its professions do not mention, is fast taking entire control of some States, while "silently and secretly," but none the less surely, it is rapidly extending its octopus clutches to a greater or less extent around the other States.

What is to be the final result? The press, a majority of whose conductors are bound by oaths which they dare not break, and the rest dare not oppose where opposition means ruin. With the pulpit it is otherwise. The clergy profess to do what many of them do not do. Is it not the duty of these moral and religious teachers to investigate the lodge question, and when—as they certainly will—they find it is the one great curse of the country, will they cease to longer keep silent and come out boldly for the truth, right and justice?

VAGARIES OF A MASONIC FUNERAL.

Northwood, Iowa, Feb. 22, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—The Odd-fellows and Freemasons have had opportunity, of late, in our town, to display some of their fruit for charity.

In a Masonic funeral, last week, the former pastor of the Baptist church here was sent for and preached a sermon from 1 Kings 7: 22: "And upon the top of the pillars was lily-work; so was the work of the pillars finished." Surely it takes a Freemason to preach a funeral sermon from such a text! It was very edifying to hear about the temple, and about the east, west and south, on such an occasion. Unexpectedly, the Methodist minister appeared in the ranks with the lambskin on. A woman, who undoubtedly has some thoughts about how she shall be saved, went home and wept because her pastor showed up as a Mason. Oh, for many such women! Oh, that the whole congregation here and in other places would weep over their pastors who have been infatuated with lodge idolatry, and that they would tell them: "You must leave the lodge or you must leave us!"

The oldest member carried the Bible upside down. This is very significant. Of course, we know it is all the same, to the Masons, whether the Bible is right side up or not; they derive the same benefit from it whichever way it is turned. Pray that the eyes of the blind may be opened.

Yours truly, (Rev.) O. T. Lee.

The serials of Jack Ballister's Fortunes, Three Freshmen, Chris and the Wonderful Lamp, The Brownies Through the Union, A Boy of the First Empire, and Rhymes of the States, furnish new installments of more or less interest. Other good articles are: The Boys' War, by Boyesen; The King's Ankus—a Jungle Story, by Rudyard Kipling; A Sketch of Nathaniel Hawthorne, by Brander Matthews, with a full-page portrait; What the Flags Tell—Naval Telegraphy at Sea—by Jno. M. Elliott, U. S. N.; together with more full-page engravings, and a variety of jingles, sketches and pictures for youngest readers. A very nice number. New York: The Century Co. 25 cents.

In variety and significance of topics, wealth of illustration and eminence of contributors, McClure's Magazine for March is a notable number. A WRECK of the physical constitution often comes from unnatural, pernicious habits, contracted through ignorance or from excesses. Such habits result in loss of manly power, nervous exhaustion, nervous debility, impaired memory, low spirits, irritable temper, and a thousand and one derangements of mind and body. Epilepsy, paralysis, softening of the brain and even dread insanity sometimes result from such reckless self-abuse.

To reach, reclaim and restore such unfortunates to health and happiness, is the aim of the publishers of a book written in plain but chaste language, on the nature, symptoms and curability, by home treatment, of such diseases. This book will be sent sealed, in plain envelope, on receipt of ten cents in stamps to pay postage.

HOW TO TREAT A SERVANT.

If She Is a Good One, She Is Worth Keeping.

Perfection is not to bo met with in any class of life. Therefore we must be ready to make due allowance for little shortcomings of all kinds on the part of those who serve us, and particularly when we consider that they have probably not had the influence and help of a good woman at the age when all girls need it—when their characters are forming. Be firm, yet gentle, when dealing with your servants and never find fault with them unless there is a good reason to do so. Then temper your reproaches with justice. If you have any cause to be vexed with them, wait until the vexation has passed before referring to the subject.

It is a great thing to gain an influence over our servants, and to do this we must let them feel that we take an interest in them, and that while they aro under our roof they may always count upon advice and help from us in any little trouble or difficulty. There is a vast difference between a right and friendly spirit of this kind and undue familiarity. The latter should never be permitted for a moment, for if the social barrier, however unrecognized it may be, is once removed their respect for us will be gone, and without this it is impossible for a house mother to manage her maids well.

Every employer should, as a matter of duty, regard the health and happiness of her servants. There is a vast amount of monotony in their round of daily work, and it is only fair that they should be allowed a reasonable amount of liberty for recreation. Girls who have situations in the country generally get more opportunities of going out, if only into the garden, than those in town. An outing once a week is not sufficient to keep the latter in good health and spirits, particularly if their work lies in the kitchen.

Besides the regular evening a week, a thoughtful mistress can often, without inconveniencing any one, find an opportunity for sparing a maid for an hour or so, or even sending her out to do an errand, and servants should be allowed to have a woman friend to tea occasionally. It is trifling things like these that make girls feel more at home in their situations, and they settle down and work better and are more contented in a place where they are not made to feel the reins of government at every turn.

FREE SPEECH IN DANGER.

The Jesuits, the Clan-na-Gael, the United Irishmen and the Ancient Order of Hibernians—the latter three being an outgrowth, in spirit if not in fact, of the first-named—are secret orders organized under the sanction of the Church of Rome, by whom also they are promoted and sustained. These societies possess all the vindictiveness necessary to nourish hatred of Protestantism and to persecute and murder those who offend them, and are employed in advancing the political interests of Rome and Ireland on American soil.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians, the pride and glory of Irish Roman Catholics, has recently posed as the physical defender of the Church of Rome. For several days last week the press fully reported the acts of this society as the enemy of free speech at Savannah, Ga.; but it was summarily suppressed by the law-and-order-loving citizens of that city. The circumstances were, in substance, as follows:

On Monday night, an ex-priest of the Church of Rome, named Slattery, and his wife, an ex-nun, were to have lectured on Roman Catholicism in the Masonic Temple in Savannah. The announcement had been publicly made. During the day members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians petitioned Mayor Meyers to refuse permission to the ex-priest to hold his lecture. The petition said that if Slattery was allowed to speak there would be disorder and riot. About 500 signed the petition. When it was presented to the mayor by a committee of twelve Catholics, including the presidents of two divisions of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, he handed them a written opinion from the corporation attorney to the effect that he, as mayor, had no power to abridge the right of speech guaranteed by the Constitutions of the United States and Georgia. In his opinion the city attorney said that there could be no disorder or trouble if those who would be offended by Slattery's remarks would stay away from his lecture. He urged all to do so. Mayor Meyers also asked the committee to advise all Catholics to keep away from the lecture.

"I cannot stop this man from lecturing," said the mayor, who is a Hebrew, "but I can prevent disorder, and I shall do so. If the police do not constitute a sufficient force to do so, the military will be appealed to. Riot will not be tolerated."

The committee stated that it was their desire to avoid trouble and that they would use their influence in that direction. They did so, but their efforts utterly failed.

We need not enter into particulars. The police were out in force, but before the lecture was ended the building was surrounded by a howling mob of Catholics, and Slattery was in imminent danger of being killed. So formidable was the mob, and so desperate, that the mayor at once summoned the military force of the city to rescue Slattery. The Roman Catholic Vicar-General of the diocese also interposed his influence. "This man Slattery," he said, "can do your church no harm You are bringing disgrace upon your religion by your conduct here to-night. It can meet only with condemnation. I plead with you to disperse and go home. Do not render it necessary to shed blood here to-night."

Some took his advice and retired; but the angry mob surged about the hotel in which Slattery was domiciled, and continued to threaten him with death. Nothing but the mayor's determination and the presence of the troops prevented further riotous demonstrations.

The next day little business was done and there was a universal nervous strain and excitement. One thing only was talked about, and that was the right of free speech. Slattery was almost lost sight of as an individual. There was but one general expression of opinion—that Slattery should lecture again if he desired, if it required all the police and military forces and half the citizens to protect him.

Mrs. Slattery was to have lectured in the afternoon, but the owner of the hall cancelled the engagement and the lecture was postponed. That night Slattery remained at his hotel. The excitement still ran high, but there was no rioting.

The following day quietude, under an "armed peace," also prevailed. In the afternoon Mrs. Slattery lectured to 600 women in Odd-fellows' hall. Many of the women at the lecture were escorted to the hall by their husbands. Policemen were stationed in the square on which the hall fronts. No one was allowed to loiter about the building. Toward the close of the lecture crowds collected in the vicinity and Slattery and his wife were followed to their hotel by thousands.

At night Odd-fellows' hall was crowded and many were turned away. Fully 1,000 men were in the hall. It is understood that a large proportion were armed. On all sides men were heard saying that they were ready for a mob. Outside the hall the entire police force, with the exception of a few men scattered through the audience, were distributed so as to command the entire vicinity of the hall. Slattery received an ovation, and throughout his lecture he was applauded and was loudly cheered when he declared that the riot Tuesday night had shown the necessity of Protestant organization.

Thus ended one of the most exciting events known in Georgia since "Sherman's march to the sea." The battle was for a constitutional right—a right dear to every freeman—the right of free speech. It was a war that is likely to break out again at any time where organized and secret bigotry prevails, and the result of the Savannah riot shows that cool judgment, energy and patriotism are necessary to oppose it successfully.

The right of free speech must be maintained at all cost.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 28, 1895.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I feel in reference to our convention, just closed in Philadelphia, that we have much, very much, to praise God for. The gathering was all that could have been expected. Friends were blessed, and those of evil mind were stirred up.

A card came from a follower of Robert G. Ingersoll, who neglected to sign his name, using abusive and vile language. This card referred especially to the testimony given by Bro. Anderson, of Camden, a seceding Mason and Odd-fellow.

The pastor of the church in which we met, showed us every kindness, and in saying good-by remarked:

"Whenever you wish our church for a convention you are welcome to it."

The minutes, together with the reports and some of the addresses, will be sent you. I need not add to them.

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow,"

W. B. STODDARD.

FIRST SESSION.

The Pennsylvania State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, held its first session in the Second Reformed Presbyterian church, Seventeenth and Race streets, Philadelphia, on Monday afternoon, February 25, 1895, beginning soon after 2 o'clock.

The meeting was called to order by Rev. W. B. Stoddard.

The following letter was received:

60 SHERMAN AVE., ALLEGHENY, Pa., Feb'y 23, 1895.

Rev. W. B. Stoddard,

DEAR BRO:—I have my satchel packed, expecting after Sabbath's work, near Latrobe, to take train about 4:45 A. M. from that place, so as to reach Philadelphia in time for afternoon meeting: but I find from the schedule, that train does not stop between Pittsburgh and Johnstown. So unless I can get an order for it to stop for me, I hardly think I will be at your convention. This I regret, for besides my interest in the cause, this may be my last opportunity of the kind.

But the great matter should be and is, to have the presence of the Lord Jesus by his "Spirit to guide into all truth." Then and only then will you have a pleasant and profitable meeting, whoever else may be present or absent, and thus only can "my heart's desire and prayer" for this convention be realized.

The times are both ominous and auspicious. They portend danger; yet are favorable to work, and promise good results to wise and energetic efforts. The Lord guide to right means and their right use, then we shall have and be a blessing.

With Christian salutations to yourself and to all the brethren and sisters in the Lord, I am

As ever, yours etc., S. COLLINS.

The opening prayer was offered by Rev. W. W. Barr, D. D.

In the absence of the State President, Rev. Samuel Collins, D. D., and of the State Secretary, Rev. J. T. Milligan, a temporary organization was effected, on motion of Rev. W. B. Stoddard, with Rev. N. L. Heidger as chairman and Rev. A. S. Shelly as secretary.

Rev. J. C. McFeeters, pastor of the church in which the convention assembled, delivered the address of welcome. "The orders," he said, "indugle in the presumption that they have the light. This is the boast of the lodge" He claimed that, while they pretend to have the light, they often shut it out by disregarding the name of Jesus. The oath or pledge he regarded as an evil of the lodge, as it binds those who take it to remain true to it until they are providentially released. He looked upon the convention as a means to the providential stroke that would break down the lodge system. Social, commercial and political advantages coming from the secret society he deprecated, and only one secret society, that of the prayer closet, did he deem worthy to endure.

In the absence of Rev Samuel Collins, D. D., of Allegheny, President of the State Association, the response was heartily given by the chairman.

Rev. I. D. Bowman and H. C. Cassel favored the audience with a fine duet—"What Shall the Record Be?"

The following committees were then appointed:

On Enrollment—Henry C. Cassell, J. L. Bauer.

Correspondence—Rev. J. T. Meyers, Agnes M. Shoenhut, W. W. Barr, D.D., S. Y. Orr.

State Work—The Rev. G. N. Falkenstein, Robert Ingraham, S. B. Latshaw, Mrs. A. E. Latshaw.

Finance—Rev. J. C. McFeeters, Mrs. D. W. Collins, T. H. McCandless, Rev. L. Frank Haas.

Entertainment—Rev. W. B. Stoddard, Rev. N. L. Heidger.

Following the announcement of these committees the Rev. C. S. Cleland, of the Second United Presbyterian church of this city, gave his views on "Benefits Derived from Reform Conventions."

He expressed the conviction that people are glad to do right if they only know what the right thing is; that the good of the convention in bringing out the sentiments of the church regarding the abhorrence in which they hold and should hold secret societies is incalculable; that most people being entirely ignorant of the principles involved in secret societies, join them without the knowledge that they directly conflict with the church and Christian principles generally, and that these are the people who should be looked after and enlightened and shown the blighting influences of the lodge.

Rev. M. W. Lyon, of the German Baptist church, Washington, D. C., followed. He said that if belonging to secret societies did not conflict with Christianity that he would belong to all he could, but that it is utterly impossible to reconcile the church with the secrets of Masonry or any other society of that kind; we are unable to associate the principles and doctrines of Jesus Christ with those of lodges.

But he thought that the fundamental evil of the lodge is its money-making schemes; that if the lodges ceased clamoring and gathering in the hard-earned money of their constituents, it would soon be found that they would not have a lengthy existence; that the lodge is stealing into homes and breaking down the fortifications of domesticity, and that many young men are drawn into the vortex of its fascinations by the privilege of mingling with men above them in rank and fortune, and which in very fact only ruins them by cultivating a desire for the emulation of things beyond both their means and capacity.

He said that while the Masonic writings all claimed to have divine origin, if they are compared with the Bible, it will at once be apparent that the divinity of the origin consists wholly in their selection of just such principles as exactly suit the case. He quoted freely from Mackey to prove the strength of the assertions. He believed that where a man cannot take his wife and daughters is no place for himself.

Reading from George Wingate Chase's work on "Masonry" and from another author on the same subject, he claimed that the doctrine of atonement was repudiated by statements in both books. He was not in favor of the lodge system, because he believed it is a home destroyer.

Gustavus Anderson, of Camden, characterized secret societies as inventions of the devil. He had been a member of several lodges and thought them "bunco games." "I paid some $50 to become a Mason, and all I learnd there I could have learned for 50 cents," said he. After initiation he claimed that it was anything else but Christian; that Masons drank and banquetted and did little else. The Odd-fellows, which he had joined, he considered more ridiculous even than Masonry.

The Committee on Correspondence brought in the following report: "Among the letters relating to this convention which have been received we find twenty-five of a strictly business character. Twenty-two express interest and sympathy in the work. Many correspondents express their regret that they cannot be present.

"J. T. Myers, Chairman."

Extracts from a number of the letters were read, one of them in full.

The convention was here treated to a very agreeable surprise by the introduction of Rev. J. P. Stoddard, of Boston. In a brief address he paid a touching tribute to the late champion of reform, Rev. A. J. Gordon, and then gave the convention a taste of what was in store for the evening. The session then closed with prayer.

EVENING SESSION—MONDAY.

The meeting was opened with reading of a portion of Scripture by the chairman, Rev. N. L. Heidger, followed with a season of earnest prayer in which a number led audibly.

Rev. F. W. Farr, of New York City, gave a stirring address on Romanism and Masonry, in which he drew a strong comparison between the history of Jesuitism and Masonry, showing that in their intrinsic nature and in their baleful influences they are identical.

I. D. Bowman, H. C. Cassel and A. S. Shelly sang "Christ is All;" after which the following persons were named and appointed as a Committee on Resolutions: Rev. W. J. Coleman, Rev. F. W. Farr, and Rev. T. P. Stevenson.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard spoke on "Lodge Assertions," pointing out the weakness and fallacy of their statements on the points of antiquity, great men, morality, opposition to Romanism, companionship, and helpfulness. This was followed by a chart talk, in which he gave the audience an insight into the so-called mysteries and workings of the Masonic order in its various degrees.

The evening session closed with prayer.

TUESDAY MORNING SESSION.

The opening devotions, beginning at 9: 30, were led by F. W. Farr. Thanksgiving and prayer were interspersed with encouraging testimony.

Two more letters were received and added to the correspondence before reported. One of these was from Rev. E. D. Bailey, of the Central Union Mission, D. C., regretting his inability to be present and fill his appointment on the program.

On motion, the convention voted to request all the speakers to present briefs of their addresses, or the addresses in full, for publication in the Cynosure.

The Committee on State Work reported the following nominations for officers of the State Association for the ensuing year: President, Rev. Samuel Collins, D. D., Allegheny; vice president J. T. Myers, Oaks, Montgomery Co.; secretary, Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, Beaver; treasurer, Edwin P. Sellew, Philadelphia; executive committee: Rev. Samuel Collins, Rev. D. C. Martin, and Rev. David McAlister. The report was accepted and unanimously adopted.

Hereupon Rev. J. T. Myers, vice president, elect, in the absence of the president, took the chair.

Rev. Wm. Jones addressed the convention on "The Abduction and Murder of William Morgan," in which he presented points of personal knowledge of this historical event. J. P. Stoddard added some interesting points gathered from persons directly connected with parties to the tragic occurrence.

After the singing of a trio: "The Ninety and Nine," Rev. I. N. H. Beahm, of Virginia, spoke on "Charity or Selfishness, Which?" and A. S. Shelly on "The Ritualism of the Lodges." Several paragraphs from the daily papers were read, showing the evil influence of secrecy and its spread even to the children of our land.

By request of the Committee on Resolutions the committee was increased by the addition of Rev. Dr. Collins, of Philadelphia. The session closed with prayer led by Rev. I. D. Bowman.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

This session was presided over by Rev. W. W. Barr.

After the opening service of prayer, Rev. T. S. Scoville, of Germantown, spoke on the past history and the future tendency of secret orders.

A paper was then read, prepared by Josiah W. Leeds, giving "A Friend's View Regarding Lodge Oaths." The paper was read by Edwin P. Sellew, who added some remarks defining the testimony of the Friends on the subject of swearing in general, but which applies with especial force to the horrible oaths taken from persons entering the lodges.

Rev. I. D. Bowman spoke on "Masonic Oaths and Penalties," showing their inhuman and blasphemous character.

The subject of a very impressive address by Rev. Nevin Woodside, of Pittsburg, was "Catholic Confessional and Masonry." He pictured in strong lines the terrible evils of the confessional with all that stands connected with it in the Catholic church, and compared with these the evil influences of Masonry.

The treasurer, Edwin P. Sellew, gave in his report as follows:

Edwin P. Sellew.

The Committee on Finance announced a collection of cash and subscriptions for the support of the State work.

This was followed by an open parliament in which opportunity was given for five-minute speeches by either friends or opponents of secret societies. No one seemed disposed to take up the defence of the lodges, but a number of pointed speeches were made on the other side. One of the speakers, Wm. McKinney, said he had taken many degrees in Masonry and he could testify to the truth of what had been said here of this order.

The Committee on Resolutions made its report. The resolutions were taken up separately and discussed. After some amendments had been made they were adopted with the preamble as follows:

The following principles and facts, we believe, will be admitted by all intelligent, reflecting and candid men:

As individuals, as citizens, and as members of the church, we have the right, and it is also our duty, to consider every element and condition of society which, in our judgment, may threaten the best interests of the people in any relation of life.

In this land of free thought, free speech, a free press and free assemblage, every good cause is best served by open and above-board methods.

The present increase and multiplication of secret, oathbound societies in this free land are subjects calculated to awaken serious apprehension and demanding careful consideration.

Minor secret orders, though less objectionable, are largely under the control of members of the greater orders, and act as training-schools for these older and more dangerous societies.

All secret, oathbound societies are to be viewed as one complex system of secrecy, differing not in kind but in degree.

Therefore, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, our divine King, whose we are and whom we serve, we bear witness against them for the following reasons:

1. The formation of secret, oathbound societies establishes a presumption of the existence of principles and practices that will not bear the light, a presumption which the history of these societies has confirmed.

2. We cannot but testify against minor secret orders for men, women and children, however simple their forms and however good their professed purposes, since they seek their ends by such an unworthy and un-Christ-like method.

3. Secret societies affect the person who joins them unfavorably by repressing a healthful individualism, and by imposing a false and unscriptural altruism which prevents the full and proper working out of his moral mission.

4. The lodge oath comes between husband and wife, so that they are no longer one in the fullest sympathy and intercommunion with regard to common interests involved in the marriage relation.

5. The lodge seeks to rival and is the masked enemy of the church in that it ignores the sovereignty of Christ, rejects salvation by grace, and teaches the sufficiency of the works of men instead of the atonement of the Son of God. Lodge duties usually conflict with church duties both in time and spirit, and the activities of the one tend to deaden the life of the other.

6. The men who render full obedience to lodge obligations are under pressure to give their support to candidates for civil office who represent their various orders, and are required, when it is deemed necessary, to incline the scales of justice in favor of their brethren.

7. Masonry and the Jesuits we regard as kindred secret oathbound societies that antagonize each other, because both seek absolute supremacy by clandestine methods. We are opposed alike to Romanism and to all secret methods of resisting her encroachments.

8 We would also call attention to the present movement encouraged by the G. A. R, and by so-called patriotic orders, aiming to introduce military drill into public schools, and believe it would be subversive of the purposes for which these schools were founded, and therefore a menace to our republican institutions. For similar reasons the organization of boys' brigades in the different churches is to be deprecated as being foreign to the spirit of the Gospel of the Prince of peace.

9. We cordially recommend the Christian Cynosure, the official organ of the National Christian Association, to all interested in the great moral reforms of the day, as eminently calculated to create and cherish in any community where it may be circulated those high moral sentiments on which the welfare and progress of modern society depends.

10. We appreciate the kindness of the pastor, officers and members of the Second Reformed Presbyterian church in granting the use of their house of worship for the sessions of our convention, and of the citizens who have so kindly entertained in their homes delegates from abroad, and that we express our gratitude by a rising vote of thanks.

Signed, W. J Coleman, F. W. Farr, D. W. Collins, T. P. Stevenson } Com.

The afternoon session closed with prayer, led by J. P. Stoddard.

TUESDAY EVENING.

The closing session was introduced with a season of devotion, led by Rev. T. P. Stevenson. Rev. C. S. Cleland presided. Mr. Roberts, of the Fifth United Presbyterian church, sang several selections with good effect, and the audience joined in singing the One Hundredth Psalm.

The first address of the evening was made by Rev. W. J. Coleman, of Allegheny, Pa., on "American Freedom or Oath-bound Secrecy—Which?" He outlined the elements of freedom, and showed how the lodge destroys freedom religiously, politically, industriously, and socially; he predicted an end to the unjust conditions brought about by secrecy, through the triumph of the principles of Christianity.

The Finance Committee reported the expenses of the convention $113.59; the receipts thus far $81.50, leaving yet $32 09 to be made up; for which a collection was taken.

Now came the climax of the entire convention in an address by Pres. Charles A Blanchard, of Wheaton, Ill., on "The Duty of Christians Regarding Secret Societies." It was a most strong arraignment of the Christian church of this country, taken as a whole, for its lack of conscience on the great questions of the day, instancing, a notable exception, the general uprising of the Christians of the land against the opening of the World's Fair on the Sabbath; and a powerful appeal to Christians of all denominations to arise in their might and antagonize the institutions of Satan, which are dragging down the young men especially.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard led in prayer and pronounced the benediction, and then the convention adjourned.

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS

THE ADMIRATION OF STRANGERS, SAYS MADISON C. PETERS.

He Opposes the National, State or Municipal Support of Sectarian Institutions—Enforce Common School Education—The Bible Our Cornerstone.

The fountains of this republic wisely identified popular education with our nation's welfare. Congress as early as 1787 ordered that "schools and the means of education shall be forever encouraged," and Washington in his first message said: "Knowledge in every country is the surest basis of public happiness. To the security of free institutions it contributes by convincing those who are intrusted with the public administration that every end of government is best answered by the enlightened conscieuce of the people, and by teaching the people themselves to know and value their own rights, and to discern and provide against invasions of them." In his farewell address he says, "Promote as an object of primary importance institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge."

There is nothing in this land that wins so much admiration of strangers and contains so much promise for the future as our free school system. It is the great assimilating organ of the body politic. There is no nation in the world where there is such a pressing need of enforcing the education and discipline of the commou schools as in the United States. It becomes more urgent with every new and alien source of immigration to this land. The New York Times well says: "The clerical and lay foreigners in our midst who hold that the children under their charge should not be Americanized show a very just sense of the adoption of means to ends when they insist that they should not be sent to the public schools. The children who are sent there simply cannot maintain their alienism." Mr. Bruisson, the director of primary teaching in the French ministry of public instruction, recently said that "the American school not only turns out men, but it makes the Americoan people. Whatever may be the elements cast into it, they never come out anything but Americans."

In all Europe today education is passing from the control of the church, is becoming more secular and less sectarian. Neither is it made a religious question or a political issue. Catholic and Protestant countries alike move to establish public schools in which the teacher shall answer only to the state, and the instruction only be secular. Do we in America want to put ou the cast-off garments of Europe? Shall progressive America put in place of her free unsectarian school system a system that has been turned off by all the nations of the world?

True patriotism and self preservation require that no school trustee shall be elected or teachor employed in state schools who is seeking to sectarianize or destroy them. While we cherish the republic we must defend our public schools. We must stand around them if need bo with bristling bayonets. The foes of the public school aro necessarily the foes of the American republic.

Sectarian Appropriations.

Appropriations from the public funds for sectarian schools or for any sectarian purpose whatsoever is practically recognizing the un-American idea of a union of church and state. It is taxing one man for the purpose of propagating another man's religion, which is a glaring self contradiction in an American state. Municipal, state or national support of sectarian institutions is a virtual subsidy for the supposed political influence of the church and at the expense of the general public. These raids on the public treasury are made in the name of "religious liberty," and to oppose them is to be set down as a bigot. These appropriations are in violation of both the letter and spirit of the first amendment to the constitution, and if insisting on each church supporting its owu schools and charities with its own money and not with the funds of the state—if that fundamental Americanism is bigotry, then, thank God, I am a bigot!

Our Cornerstone.

The Bible is the cornerstoue of our whole fabric, and that book in the vernacular tongue iu the hauds of everybody is the grand principle of Americanism If the great patriotic heart of the American people shall houor and cleave to Biblo faith and practice, then the prophecy that the ocean was dug for America's grave, the winds woven for her winding sheet and the mountains reared for tombstone will never, never be fulfilled.

Horse Racing.

I don't believe that the cultivation of a horse's speed is a sin. If the Lord made fast horses, it was to have them go fast But the evil begins when the betting begins, when fast horses make fast men. Gambling is accursed of God Upon the brow of every pool seller I would write the unmistakable word "Swindler." I know of many men and women who bet on horscs last summer, and I do not know of one who won. I am glad of it. I hope it may so discourage them that they may quit. If a man gain, he is apt to go right on to hell.

Ill Temper.

Religion should influence our temper. If a man be as jealous, passionate, revengeful, huffy, sullen, morose, sour and moody after his conversion as before it, what is he converted from or to? The Christian should cherish liko an apple of gold a bright, sunny, cheerful temper and disposition.

True Religion.

Be good, and do the most good that you can, now and here, and help others to be and do the same. Do good with what you have, or it will do you no good. Be not simply good. Be good for something. Some of you are so good that you aro good for nothing.

German Gifts to Missions.

The missionary gifts of the German Protestauts are $848,170 a ycar. These gifts support 658 missionaries, 113 ordained natives and 4,717 native associates. In the churches cared for by these missionaries are 101,807 communicants, with 265,881 native Christians. Furthermore, the German Protestants support on mission fields 1,246 schools, with nearly 60,000 scholars.

The Mystery Solved.

Whon a pastor complains that his Christian Endeavor society is acting unworthily, the first question to be asked him is, "Do you attend its meetings regularly yourself?" If he answers, "No, but"— there is no need of further words. The mystery is solved.—Golden Rule.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning March 10. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Everything for God.—Luke xiv, 25-33.

It costs something to be a Christian. Nor did Christ attempt to conceal this fact from His followers. Instead He emphasized the fact and told them plainly that uuless they were williug to give up every thing for God they could not be His disciples. He also pointed out to them the importance of counting the cost before they pledged themselves to Him. As a man before building a tower counts tho cost of it, as a king before going to war estimates his ability to cope with the enemy, so Christ taught that we should carefully consider the sacrifices embraced in Christian discipleship before we take this discipleship upon ourselves. It is reasonable and just that we should do so, and just as reasonable and just to give up all for God.

1. Everything for God includes our affections (verse 26). "If any mau come to Me and hate not his father and mother and wife and childreu and brethren and sisters, * * * ho cannot be My disciple." This does not mean literally that we are to hate our relatives. The Biblo everywhere repudiates such a doctrine. It is simply another way of saying that the first place in our hearts, iu our affections. must be reserved for God. We must allow nothing, then, to stand before Him, not even our dearost relatives and loved ones. "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me." If we loved some one more thau God in Christ, it would be placing something above Him, and this makes true discipleship impossible.

2. Everything for God includes life itself. Life is one of our greatest blessings. We prize it very highly and sell it very dearly, and yet even life itself, if necessary, must be given to God. If we are brought into a position when it is a question of life or Christ, there should be no hesitancy in choosing Christ. As Stephen and all the long list of martyrs chose Christ and death, so should all His disciples. We should die daily for Christ, die to sin, selfishness, uurighteousness and to the world in all its forms.

3. Everything for God includes all that we havo (verse 33). "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath cannot be My disciple." This is the essence of the whole matter in one word—"all." It must be all for Christ or nothing for Him—loved ones, houses, lands, health, wealth, pleasurc, prosperity. The child of God must stand ready to sacrifice any or all of it for Him.

That he should be willing to do so is not unjust or unreasonable. God has a just right to all we have and are. He gives us strength to make sacrifices for Him. He repays us abundantly for all we give up. "Every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for My name's sake, shall receive a hundredfold and shall inherit everlasting life." Christianity may cost something, but it pays, for it hath the promise both of this life and the life to come.

Bible Readiugs.—Gen. xxii (1-3, 10-12); I Chron. xxix, 16, 17; Ps. l, 8-12; Math. iv, 18-20; xix, 28, 29; Mark x, 28-30; Luke v, 11; Acts xv, 25, 26; I Cor. xv, 29-32; Rev. iv, 11; xii, 11.

Face the World Bravely.

It is impossible to estimate the power for good in this sad, struggling life of a bright, glad, shining face.

Of all the lights you carry in your face,
Joy shines farthest out to sea.

One of the best things any of us can do for this world is to show it ever a victorious life of joy, a face that shines even through tears, a beauty of the Lord which glows with radiance even in the night. That is the life the Master wants every follower of His to live, and we can livo it, too, if our life is truly hid with Christ in God.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

A Race For Raisins.

A good many games pleasant to play in Christian Endeavor socials require forfeits as the penalty of failure. An exceedingly amusing forfeit is this: Tie to the center of a long string several raisins. Place either end of the string in the mouth of one of the persons who must redeem the forfeit. Instruct the pair that they are to chew up the string, of course not swallowing it, until they reach the raisins, and the one who first obtains the raisins will be declared victor.—Golden Rule.

Working With a Will.

A California Christian Endeavor district has the right idea of the matter. They are planning and working for their next convention, say their officers, "as if this were the last Christian Endeavor convention ever to bo held in the state and must of necessity be the best."—Exchange.

On the Other Side of the World.

South Australian societies have sent 17 of their members to foreign mission fields. They are to be found in Iudia, China and Africa, and though most of them are Baptists the Congregationalists, Wesleyans and the Church of Christ are also represented.

New Way In the Home Laundry.

"I have found," said one of those modern housekepeers whoso ideas would horrify her maternal anecstors if they could but hear them, "that elbow grease, when applied to laundry work, is not the much to be praisod thing that I have always been brought up to believe it was, and that in some cases it is a detriment to successful and careful washing. By dint of many experiments I bave discovered that a small table or a flat board and a soft, small scrubbing brush will work wonders. I can take an ordinary garment with collar and sleeves badly soiled and cleanse it by this process in one-third of the time and with infinitely less hard work than the average laundress. I make a mixture of soap and kerosene oil and let it stand overnight or prepare it and keep it in a stoppered jug or bottle. With a soft brush rub the collar and cuffs and all the soiled places, then roll the garment up for a few minutes while others are being done. When all are prepared, begin with the first and rinse and brush the surface with hot soapsuds. In nine cases out of ten the garment will need no further rubbing. I do not approve of clothes being merely scalded. They need not be boiled for any length of time, but should have about one or three minutes in actually boiling suds. This dissolves any gummy substances that may not rub out of the fibers and makes the clothes more clean and certainly more healthful. Clothes soaked overnight in warm suds made with the soap and kerosene mixture will wash easier and look better, to say nothing of wearing much longer, than those laundered in the ordinary way."—Milwaukee Journal.

Selecting Colors.

One law in scleeting colors is universal—that is, follow the prevailing tints of your own face.

"What," says the flaxen haired damsel with a face that contains a tint of yellow, "garb myself in buff and butter tints? Why, I would be matching my skin and killing the tone of my hair." You are mistaken in this, dear girl. It will only enhance your natural coloring to develop into a sort of yellow chrysanthemum. Your complexion will grow fairer by contrast with the yellow hues of your frock, while the golden gloss of your locks is accentuated.

"And I?" asks the florid faced sister. "Must I adopt red gowns and garnitures, with my cheeks now as glowing as the petals of a jacqueminot?"

Yes, let red be your accepted color. The deeper shades will neutralize your florid complexion as no other tints on the color card will.

Then for the creamy skinned brunette the palest shades of lemon and ecru offer an apropriate setting. She whose locks are as dusky as a raven's wing should gown herself in the inkiest of costumes. The ruddy coppor tints of Titian tresses are wonderfully enriched by robes of the same color, shading through half a dozen deep tones.

And for the maiden whose coloring is a sort of cross between the light and dark type half a dozen tints may be blended to harmonize with the hair and eyes.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

A Woman's Mission.

Of themselves men are helpless. When a man has placed his favorite photographs on the bureau and around his looking glass, his instinct at homemaking is exhausted. There are otber rallying points in a room. He might put them on the table with a book or around the register. This he never does. He puts them around the mirror or above his neckties. Frequently his women friends endeavor to make things homelike for him. Thoy send him plaques, work him things or construct him puzzling receptacles that he lumps in his mind as trumpery, even when penning his most polite acknowledgments. These attentions are gratifying, but they do not contribute to a man's physical comfort, to his sense of well being. It is near these lies his moral nature. A man may in vain pray "deliver us from temptation" when there is no easy chair in the room, when there is nothing to lie on but the bed, when the gas enters into relation with nothing else in the room, but maintains tawdry, solitary splendor near the ceiling. A bed of glowing coals is a call to grace. A steady light near any spot inviting ease is more salutary than the police.—New York Telegram.

Surroundings.

In damp, dismal, dreary weather it is the duty of every woman to surround herself with those things which she likes—flowers, books, perfumes, new slippers and other sunshine producing luxuries. This is necessary to counteract the effect of the weather. In clean, cheerful weathor she needs to do the same thing in order to be in harmony with nature.

Short Skirts.

The first duty of woman is to look as consistently attractive as her physical circumstances will allow, be she young or old, fair or hard featured, stately or insignificant. No woman, unless she be very young or surpassingly beautiful, can ok anything but absurd in a skirt that re es no farther than the tops of her bo —Pall Mall Gazette.

Eyebrows and Lashes.

When the eyebrows and lashes are too thin, the following method should be adopted: Wash the eyebrows and lashes with warm water before going to bed and apply with a soft, narrow brush some pure olive oil. They should be gently rubbed three times a day with an infusion of white wine and mint leaves.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Woman the Standard.

"No race," says a writer, "has ever risen above the condition of its women. Nor can it ever do so in the history of the world. The boy is father of the man, but the woman is the mother of the boy, and she determines the whole social state of the generations that are to follow."

Trust the Children.

Those parents who are afraid to trust their children out of their sight mean well, but they might as wisely refuse to let their little ones learn to read and write lest they devour books that will harm them or become professional forgers.—Boston Transcript.

Vassar College.

Although Vassar college is only about 30 years old, it already offers much more pecuniary help to studious but indigent young women than is generally supposed. There are, for instance, seven graduate scholarships which are open to members of the senior class and entitle the holder to board and tuition for one year. Conspicuous among the endowments for the assistance of undergraduates are two funds amounting in the aggregate to $100,000, the income of which is divided among meritorious students, a preference being given, so far as half of them are concerned, to residents of Poughkeepsie. There are 4 other special funds and 15 scholarships, the disposition of most of them being subject to certain restrictions, and there is a college aid fund and a Vassar Students' Aid society, which render help, the former in the shape of gifts, the latter in the form of loans. We should mention finally that there are several prizes of considerable value offered annually as incentives to excellence in particular departments.—New York Sun.

A London Advertisement.

Miss A. Ashdown is anxious to receive and train a few respectable girls, from 14 to 17 years of age, for laundry work and domestic service. Miss Ashdown has a suitable house in a healthy situation, called St. Hilda's, at Sutton, Surrey, and close to Banstead Downs. The girls will be taught laundry work by an experienced laundry maid, and plain cooking, house and parlor maids' work by Miss Ashdown herself. The charges are very moderate, and for the girls over 16 years of age, who remain a year and have behaved well, arrangements are made by which they would receive an outfit for service and a suitable situation found for them.

LIKE A BRUTE HE GROVELS.

The Drunkard Presents an Appalling Aspect as He Staggers Along.

No man is so thoroughly demoralized in every part as the drunkard. The ruin worked pertains to the whole man. His body goes down under the power of the poison. Every vital force is lessened. The physiological effects of drinking are now narrated to the children of our public schools. No man need be ignorant of the physical results of inebriety. He presents a wreck appalling in its consequences. See him stagger through the streets! His distinguishing mark as man is lost—namely, his uprightness. Like a brute he grovels through the street. His brain becomes incapable of keen action, and his mind loses its discernment. No wonder medical authorities declare inebriety to be a species of insanity. It effects his emotional ruin. The time comes when the most powerful stimulants fail to produce the effect sought. He who was happy becomes sad. He who in every expression was kindly and affectionate loses every sense of honor and pride, and tempests of wrath sweep from the domestic hearth every vestige of beauty. Covenants are violated without a pang of remorse, and every emotion is adverse to purity and righteousness.

It effects a volitional ruin. He who one time could accept and refuse at will is lashed by appetite into slavish obedience and goes to the slime pit. He is powerless to pass by. Eighty thousand men are on the death march tonight and before a year shall have pased will be in a drunkard's eternity. This awful destruction of life goes on, aided and abetted by men who lust for gold, not alone those engaged in dealing out the cup of scorpions, but as well all who seek its establishment as an institution.—Rev. A. Z. Conrad.

The Drunkard's Will.

I leave to society a ruined character, a wretched example and a memory that will soon rot.

I leave to my parents during the rest of their lives as much sorrow as the human heart can bear.

I leave to my brothers and sisters as much mortification and injury as I could bring upon them.

I leave to my wife a broken heart, a life of wretchedness, poverty and shame, to weep over my untimely death.

I give and bequeath to each of my children poverty, ignorance, disgrace and the remembrance that their father was a monster.—Exchange.

WHEN RUM IS NO MORE.

Wages Will Be Advanced, Hard Times Vanish and Prisons Depopulated.

The increased consumption of bread will raise the price of wheat.

The increased demand for shoes will increase the demand for hides.

The increased call for clothing will make the wool and cotton markets boom.

The wages of farm laborers will advance, because the productive value of their labor will advance.

The wages of coal miners will be raised, because the consumption of coal will be vastly increased.

The wages of railroad men will advance, because new trains will have to be put on to meet the demands of trade.

The slum politician will no longer run the political primaries.

The ginmill statesmen will no longer sell out the state to corrupt corporations.

The besotted anarchist will no longer arouse public sentiment against justifiable strikes.

The hotheads in the labor union will no longer precipitate a strike regardless of consequences and the chances of success.

The wives and sisters of drunkards will no longer be forced to compete in the labor market to keep body and soul together.

The penitentiaries will be depleted, and the contract labor problem will solve itself.

The foreigners who care more for drink than they care for their children will stay away, and the immigration problem will be solved.

The beer guzzling anarchists will go back to the old world and stay there.

Lynchings will grow beautifully less, and cases of rape will be few and far between.

Two-thirds of the divorce lawyers will find their occupation gone.

Twenty-five millions a week will be restored to legitimate trade, and hard times will vanish like the morning mist.—New York Voice.

The Best Thirst Quencher.

The famous English cricketer, Mr. J. E. K. Studd, who is a total abstainer from principle, says with regard to quenching thirst that he has always found it best to drink as little as possible of anything and recommends hot tea as the best for a strong thirst. Next to this lemonade is his favorite beverage.

No Benefit In Intoxicants.

Temperance is a question of vital importance, from whatever standpoint you may consider it. Let us take the material benefits which accrue from it. Let us put it as a question of simple political economy. The use of intoxicating liquor brings no benefit whatsoever to him that uses it. It is a positive verdict of medical scientists today that no man in the possession of normal health needs in any way these intoxicating drinks. Yet from something doing no good, working evil even to physical health, how much money is spent constantly! How many would be in comfortable circumstances if they never spent a penny in the saloon! The saloon keeper is the hardest task master, the hardest of landlords. Why should we pay tribute to him? The best solution that we can have of this subject is total abstinence. —Archbishop Ireland.

Why Bismarck Stopped Drinking.

For many years Bismarck, the man of blood and iron constitutionally, was cited as the most notable example to refute the theory that even excessive and long continued indulgence in alcoholic beverages was prejudicial to health. His endurance was certainly remarkable, but Bismarck succumbed at last to the all conquering enemy and acting upon positive orders of his physicians has not tasted a drop of liquor in any form for more than three years.—Selected.

Influence of Alcohol on the Death Rate.

In India a certain regiment, with 5,610 men, were placed under observation. They were divided into free drinkers, moderate drinkers and abstainers. It was found that the deaths of the former were 44 per 1,000, of the moderate drinkers 23 per 1,000 and of the abstainers only 11 per 1,000.—Christian Work.

The River of Time.

There are reefs and rocks in the river of time;
There are quicksands of sin and whirlpools of crime;
There are demons who hide in its deep bed of slime,
And they laugh at the groans of the dying.
And the poisonous breath of the marsh and fen
Drifts over the river and back again,
While wrecks of women and wrecks of men
On the desolate strand are lying.

Life is a mystery.
Sad is its history.
Death is its goal.
Death is the wage it earns.
Earth to its earth returns.
Where is the soul?

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XI, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 17.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xix, 1-10—Memory Verses, 8-10—Golden Text, Luke xix, 10—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "And Jesus entered and passed through Jericho." We have now come to the last week before the crucifixion, and the next lesson in order in the series (that for April 7) will be the triumphal entry, which seems also to be the next in the order of events. In reference to the blind men healed about this time, Matthew speaks of two who were healed as he left Jericho; Mark mentions only one and gives his name as Bartimæus, while Luke speaks of one who was healed as he entered Jericho without any attempt to reconcile these accounts. Why not take the three as we find them and simply believe that He healed one as He entered Jericho and two as He left Jericho, one of whom was Bartimæus? The simplest and least learned explanation is often the nearest to the truth. As Jesus was continually opening the eyes of the blind, it is not strange that He should do so for three different ones at this time.

2. "And, behold, there was a man named Zaccheus, which was the chief among the publicans, and he was rich." We are now introduced to one who was blind spiritually, but not physically. He needed Jesus as much as Bartimæus, but perhaps was not as conscious of that need, not being poor nor physically helpless. Of the class to which he belonged he was at the head, and as to this world's goods he needed nothing. He is one of the most interesting rich men of the gospels. The rich young ruler saddened us by his going away; the rich man who thought only of his larger barns and the good time he would have was suddenly called away from it all, and the rich man at whose gate Lazarus lay had a terrible reverse.

3. "And he sought to see Jesus, who He was, and could not for the press, because he was little of stature." The opening words make us think of those Greeks who said to Philip, "Sir, we would see Jesus" (John xii, 21), and they suggest to us that the only one worth seeing is Jesus, for when we see Him we see God the Father (John xiv, 9). We are not told the motive of those Greeks in desiring to see Jesus, and, as to Zaccheus, it may have been mere curiosity, but the result would lead us to suppose something more. The hindrances were twofold—personal and circumstantial, his little stature and the great crowd.

4. "And he ran before and climbed up into a sycamore tree to see Him, for He was to pass that way." This was about as undignified a proceeding as that of the rich young ruler who kneeled down in the street, but it indicated a real desire. If we would see Jesus, we must go where Jesus is to be found, and we will be sure to find Him in His word. The Scriptures testify of Him (Luke xxiv, 27).

5. "And when Jesus came to the place He looked up and saw him and said unto him, Zaccheus, make haste and come down, for today I must abide at thy house." He knew what was in man, and He knew the heart of this man up among the branches of this sycamore. "The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth to show Himself strong on behalf of them whose hearts are perfect toward Him" (II Chron. xvi, 9), and if there is in your heart a going out to Him, a hungering for Him, be sure that He sees it there, and remember that it is written "Ye shall seek Me and find Me when ye search for Me with all your heart" (Jer. xxix, 13). Rejoice also that if there is a real desire toward Him, be it ever so faint, it is the Spirit's work, and He will regard it.

6. "And he made haste and came down and received him joyfully." How quickly he responds to the Saviour's invitation. It is the Spirit's work, but Zaccheus was willing to have it so. The Spirit is seeking to bring all who hear the gospel down from their pride of intellect and social standing and moral standing and self in every form, righteous or unrighteous, that they may receive Jesus and stand truly complete in Him. There must be a real coming down to a real sense of our nothingness and an honest reception of Christ. Then we become children of God and accepted in the Beloved (John i, 12; Eph. i, 6, 7). Consider how every high thing shall some day be brought down and Jesus alone exalted (Isa. ii, 11, 12).

7. "And when they saw it they all murmured, saying that He was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner." Satan is always angry when any one receives Jesus or even looks toward Him and will surely have something to say about it, as when he spoke through Simon the Pharisee of the woman who washed Jesus' feet with her tears, or when he stood at Joshua the high priest's right hand, seemingly pointing to the filthy garments. Let not the enemy hinder you by pointing to your sinfulness, but rejoice that "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

8. "And Zaccheus stood and said unto the Lord, Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation I restore him fourfold." Not that he had been doing this, but he would do it as an evidence of his sincerity and begin now. We give nothing to God for our redemption. It is a free gift (Rom. vi, 23; Eph. ii, 8). But being saved we must give evidence of it, for a faith that does not show itself in good works is not a faith that saves. See James ii, 14, 17; Eph. ii, 10. Unless there is a cheerful and ample restitution to all whom we may have wronged as far as we have ability and opportunity and a liberal giving to the Lord, constrained by His love, our faith is questionable.

9. "And Jesus said unto him, This day is salvation come to this house, for so much as he also is a son of Abraham." Not simply a descendant of Abraham, but a true believer like Abraham, and thus and therefore a true child of Abraham and child of God, by faith in Christ Jesus. For if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise (Gal. iii, 29). Salvation is in the Lord. Jesus Christ Himself is the salvation of the Lord, so when we have received Him salvation has come to us, and we can make Israel's millennial song our own and sing "Behold, God is my salvation" (Jonah ii, 9; Luke ii, 30; Isa. xii, 2).

10. "For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." All are by nature lost (Eph. ii, 3), not being lost nor under the possibility of being some day lost, but actually lost sinners, without God and without hope (Eph. ii, 12), ungodly and without strength (Rom. v, 6). Such are all without exception until found by this seeking Saviour and by His blood redeemed, for there is none other (Acts iv, 12; Isa. xlv, 21, 22). Let your soul cry, if you are not saved, "Seek me, O Lord, for I am lost!"

FIFTY-THIRD ENDED.

NATIONAL STATESMEN FINISH UP THEIR LABORS.

Review of the Transactions of the Body—Principal Features Are Those Which Failed—Hawaiian Cable Knocked Out by the House.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The Fifty-third congress has passed out of existence. As the hands of the clock pointed to noon today the gavels in either house came down with a resounding thwack on the respective presiding officers' desks and something over 400 statesmen heaved a heavy sigh of relief and congratulated themselves that it was all over. There were a number of goodbyes said, a few au revoirs, and in a short time sileuce had possession of the two chambers that since last December had rung with the eloquence of senator and representative. The close of the session was like all other closes—full of hurried conference, of compromise and adjustment of differences on the bills that had to pass—the appropriation bills.

Were Awake in the Early Morn.

It was 2 a. m. yestorday before the two houses that had met Saturday concluded that a recess would not hurt business, but rather, probably, enable the conference committees to make better progress, and so it came about that the congress of the United States was in open session and transacting business at 2 a. m. on Sunday. But to the statesmen it was not Sunday. The session of congress was that of Saturday March 2, continued. With this fiction it is supposed some of the gentlemen who would be horror-struck at the idea of profaning the "Sabbath" cased their consciences and got in their work for their constituents, when they could.

Feature of the Recent Session.

A review of the work of this last session of the Fifty-third congress must necessarily deal more with what was attempted to be done than that which was accomplished. The term has been particularly marked by the inability of the senate and the house to agree upon any of the most important problems presented by them. Congress met on the 4th of December last with one imperative and perennial task, to frame and enact the various appropriation bills. Next in importance was the financial question, for which no definite plan of settlement beyoud many free silver bills and various individual schemes were then in view. Several important bills came over as a horitage from the preceding session. Foremost among them were, in the house, the Nicaragua canal bill, the railroad pooling bill and the bill for the settlement of the indebtedness of the Union Pacific railroads.

Some of the Bills That Failed.

The Nicaragua canal project has not been able to secure a hearing in the house, although it passed the senate. The pooling bill was passed by the house early in the session, but the sonate refused to consider it. Strong opposition to the Reilly bill was developed in the house and after a very sharp debate it was recommitted to the committee without instructions. Then there were several legacies from the first session—the bankruptcy bill, the anti-option bill, the "pop-gun" tariff bills to place sugar, coal, iron and barbed wire on the free list, are the most important—which are left over yet.

FIGHT OVER THE FINANCES.

Lasted All Through the Session and Ended in Nothing Being Done.

The most interesting chapter of the history of tho session is made by the attempt at financial legislation in both houses. These are too well known to require recapitulation. No financial legislation has yet resulted from the host of bills introduced duriug the session with more or less weight of authority behind them. The principal class of legislation accomplished by the short session was that making appropriations for the support of the government. Not a little general legislation was incorporated into tho appropriation bills. These bills in the order in which they were passed by the house were: For the military academy (West Point), army, pension, fortifications, diplomatic and consular, District of Columbia, postal, agricultural, Indian, sundry civil, legislative, executive and judicial, navy, and general deficiency.

When the last week of congress began the house had passed all except the general deficiency and the senate had the last four yet to consider. The pension bill, as enacted, contained provisions that pensions shall not be paid to non-residents who are not citizens of the United States, except for actual disabilities incurred in the service, directing examining surgeons to state the ratings to which they think the applicants are entitled, and fixing the lowest rate of pension at $6 a month. The diplomatic and consular bill increased the salaries of several foreign representatives, but the senate amendment for a Hawaiian cable was defeated by the house.

The agricultural bill empowered the secretary of agriculture to enforce rules for the inspection of live cattle whose meat is intended for shipment abroad in any form, and regulations to prevent the shipment of condemned carcasses abroad or from one state to another and fixed heavy penalties for violations of such regulations.

Considerable legislation was included in the sundry civil bill. One amendment provides for the purchase for $150,000 of the site of the Blaine mansion, and another turns the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kas., into a United States penitentiary for keeping United States prisoners, who have heretofore been held in state prisons under contracts.

The naval bill was notable because of the "new navy" provision for two battle ships and six torpedo boats and the increase of the enlisted force by the addition of 1,000 men. The general deficiency bill reported to the house amounted to $6,519,539. An amendment suggested by the secretary of state to pay the claims of Great Britain for $425,000 damages for seizures of sealers in Behring sea was voted down by the house. The house adopted a joint resolution for an amendment to the constitution providing for the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people, but the resolution was killed by the senate.

A senate joint resolution for inquiry into the practicability of deep waterways between the ocean and the great lakes and the bill for the regulation of steam vessels failed to pass the house.

Among important house bills which died was one to punish train wreckers by capital punishment and attempts at train-wrecking by heavy terms of imprisonment. The only legislation affecting the tariff act was a resolution to extend to April 15 the time for making returns to the interrogatories under the income tax sections and modifying the questions to be answered.

BUSINESS DONE AT THE CLOSE.

Points from the Final Action of Congress on Various Measures.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Congress adjourned sine die at noon today, after having passed the appropriation bills. Nearly if not quite every other measure of importance was left over. Beginning the final session on Saturday, recesses were taken in both houses at night that day, at 2 a. m. Sunday and again this morning, when business was nearly concluded. The final gathering was principally to appoint the usual committees to wait on the president, who sent word that he had nothing further to communicate.

In the senate, beyond the routine work on appropriations, but little was done. The credentials of George W. McBride as senator from Oregon were presented, and an executive session was held. A resolution stopping the pronouncement of eulogies on dead senators was adopted, and hereafter they will be printed only in memorial volumes; and another that congress take part in the exercises on the Chicamauga and Chattanaoga battlefields at their dedication, passed by the house.

The house agreed finally to the monetary commission aud to the appropriation of $5,000,000 to pay tho sugar bounty claims. Passed a large number of pension bills, one being for $100 per month to General McClernand, of Illinois, and a bill to reimburse the Washington and Lee university for damages done during the war. An attempt to pay to members the salary deducted for non-attendance was defeated. Outsido of this the time was devoted to conference reports until they were all agreed to. During the closing sessions the galleries were crowded during the day and early evening.

Early this morning the house took recess to 8:00 a. m. and the senate to 9:30. The total appropriations this session aggregate $498,952,524.

MISS FLAGG'S LATEST NEW BOOK!

"A Prisoner of Hope."

COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.

Price, $1.25.

We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident, In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy, postage prepaid.

SECRET CONFESSION TO A PRIEST: or, THE ROMAN CATHOLIC PRACTICE OF AURICULAR CONFESSION. By Evangelist Leyden, an ex-Romanist. 48 pages, paper, price reduced from 25 cents to 12 cents postpaid.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE JESUITS, with supplement containing speeches of M. Paul Bert in the Chambers of Deputies, in Paris, France, at the debate (1879) on the Law Relative to the Liberty of Higher Teaching: "M. Paul Bert, who translated Gury's works from the Latin into the French (from which French this translation has in turn been made), was a statesman of great ability, having the courage of his convictions. He saw the harm done to society by allowing the Jesuits to become educators of the French youth, and struggled successfully to have them disqualified by law from management of such education. This book is a terrible exposure of the principles of these would-be teachers of religion. Their religious principles are simply statutable crimes, unnatural and repugnant to all good men; and how we Americans can let them train our children, when the great French nation across the water have decided that they are unfit to control the instruction of its youth, it is not easy to tell. Surely, we should have as much concern that our future citizens be not indoctrinated in crime, as the French.' 612 pages, paper, 60 cents, but now sent postpaid for 40 cents.

FARM FIELD AND GARDEN

CHEAPEST POULTRY RATION.

Cut Green Bone an Important Factor. Value of Animal Food.

Progressive poultry men recognize the advantage of feeding animal food of some kind to poultry. They also understand the value of cut bone in the feeding ration. Up to within a few years only dry bones were used in this way because of the difficulty in smashing green bones into suitable size for feeding. Since then machines have been put upon the market for cutting or slicing the green bones, and this has in many places almost revolutionized poultry feeding. A raw or green bone contains considerable meat and gristle, which, when cut up with the hard bone, make a very nitrogenous food which could hardly be utilized in any other way. By running it through one of these machines the bone is changed into a soft, pasty mass that may be fed alone or when mixed with grain or vegetables.

The cheapest poultry ration was the subject for correspondence in the columns of The Rural New Yorker recently, and in nearly every instance cut bone was one of the ingredients specified.

A New York correspondent said that he fed his poultry fresh cut raw bone, oats, cornmeal, wheat bran and middlings, whole wheat, corn in ear and buckwheat varied for a change. The cheapest ration is oats in the bundle cut fine with a straw cutter for winter feed. In summer let them go to grass.

James Rankin wrote: The main feed to my hens when confined in winter is wheat bran, mixed with cut clover, green rye and boiled turnips, one-third green stuff and two-thirds bran, with a little animal meal or beef scrap mixed in. I give all they will eat of this in the morning and at night corn, wheat and oats, keeping them a trifle hungry.

A Pennsylvanian who devotes his time and attention to duck raising said: Green bone is an economical feed. Having fed about 20 tons this season places us in a position to know its merits. We mix it with other feed. Fifteen per cent ground bone is about right for ducks, young and old; also for hens and broilers. Green bone costs 50 cents per 100 pounds at the slaughter house. Raising ducks is our main business. The feed should consist of 15 per cent green bone, 20 per cent bran, 20 per cent No. 2 flour, 15 per cent crackers, 30 per cent cornmeal. To this should be added green food of some kind, such as corn, rye, etc., or clover hay cut fine and steamed for some time in quantities equal to the ration first given.

"A crick in the back," a pain under the shoulder-blades, water brash, biliousness and constipation are symptoms of disordered stomach, kidneys, liver and bowels. For all ailments originating in a derangement of these organs, take Ayer's Pills.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 4.—The principal witness introduced by the state in the Hayward trial was George W. Jenks, a broker, who swore that on the night of the murder he saw a man running along the avenue at Lorring Park as if to catch the car. When the car slowed up the man quit running. He said he was almost sure it was Harry Hayward, whom he identified by his gait, having since watched him as he walked to and from the jail. As he testified Harry exclaimed, "You're a liar," loud enough to be heard by the jury. The time was about 7:10, which fits in with the rest of the case of the state. After the court adjourned Harry threatened to send Ady to the penitentiary, if he was convicted, for burning houses for the insurance.

FRIGHTFUL DISASTER.

Large Number of Miners Killed by an Explosion of Gas.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., Feb. 28.—A special to the Morning Democrat says: White Ash coal mine, three miles from Cerrilols, was the scene of a terrible explosion a little before noon yesterday. About eighty men were working in four levels when the disaster occurred. Thirty-five of these have so far been found dead. Following are the names of those identified: J. R. Donohue, pit boss; Johnnie Bock, trapper boy; Sam Hardest, —— Ellingsworth, Roy Phillips, William Jones, Sam James, W. T. McCart, Tom Whitely, John Sweeny, John Earthorne, Tom Holliday, Jules Nesirant, Henry Nesirant, John Nesirant (father and sons), Angelo Buffati, Ricard Dero, Emil Homet, George Spaite, August Leplat, —— Desumitis and Henry Harben—all miners.

It is estimated that nearly 100 men went down. Some have been rescued alive, but just how many is not known in the excitement of the moment. An estimate of other dead puts it as high as thirty-seven. The scenes of the identification of the dead were heartrending. The miners were all married men. When the news of the disaster spread wives and children hurried from Waldo and Madrid. Not until this evening were the searchers able to descend, owing to the poisonous vapors. In the course of half an hour several dead were sent up. Later in the evening eleven dying miners were discovered in a bunch. They were probably overcome in an effort to escape. The explosion is thought to have been due to accidental breaking into an abandoned chamber charged with gas.

FATAL COLLAPSES OF BUILDINGS.

Five Men Killed and a Score More or Less Injured at New York.

NEW YORK, March 2.—Two buildings, one in course of construction and one in course of demolition, collapsed in this city and killed five men and fatally injured, or maimed or bruised, nineteen others. The first accident occurred at a house at the corner of Forty-third street and Tenth avenue which was being torn down by some forty laborers. It fell with a crash, carrying several workmen to the basement three floors below, and they were most completely covered by tons of bricks, dry mortar and iron beams. The dead are: Hugh Cullen, Angelo Vicor, John O'Connor and James Malloy. The injured—Pat Curran, Thomas McConnon, Edward Meaney, M. F. Keeley, Louis Stein, Felix Moran and Charles Robson.

Rescuers were soon on hand and worked with almost superhuman vigor to save those not killed and recover the bodies of the dead, until the list was completed as given in the foregoing. In the second accident, without the slightest warning to the fifty men that worked near it, the central wall of the four double tenement houses being erected at 151 to 157 Orchard street crumbled and fell. With the wall went portions of four floors, leaving a great rent fifty feet long and thirty feet wide in the center of the buildings. It was like a pit at the bottom of which was a mass of tangled iron and broken wood that covered many men. From that heap in an hour had been taken out one man dead and twelve injured.

WILSON IT IS, SURE ENOUGH.

The West Virginia Representative to Take Up Bissell's Work.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—As foreshadowed in these dispatches William L. Wilson, of West Virginia, has been nominated to succeed W. S. Bissell as head of the postoffice department. Wilson has been a staunch defender of President Cleveland's tariff policy ever since it was promulgated. In the four congressional eras of recent tariff changes—the Morrison bill, the Mills bill, the McKinley bill and the Wilson bill—Wilson took a leading part. He did much of the work of constructing the Mills bill and he and Representative Breckinridge started on a successful tour of platform speeches throughout the east, indorsing President Cleveland's tariff revision message.

The nomination was extremely popular among the Democrats—and the Republicans, too, for that matter—and it did not take long for the senate committee in executive session to act. As soon as the session came to order the nomination was read and referred to the committee on postoffices and postroads, and immediately reported back favorably; but no action was taken because the Sioux Falls postmastership stood at the head of the list, and senators interested in this case would not allow any action until this was disposed of. An agreement was reached that an executive session be held at noon today, when Sioux Falls and the postmaster general nomination will be disposed of.

Nominated by the President.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—The president sent the following nominations to the senate: William L. Wilson, of West Virginia, to be postmaster general; Louis M. Buford, of Illinois, to be consul of the United States at Paso del Norte, Mex.; D. B. Spagnoli, of California, to be consul of the United States at Milan, Italy. Ella M. Connolly, postmaster at Red Key, Ind.

Million Dollar Fire at Halifax.

HALIFAX, N. S., Feb. 28.—Several firemen were hurt, but none seriously, in the fire that broke out in the government immigration building at the deep-water terminus. It swept away all the large sheds along the wharves and destroyed their contents, the loss aggregating $1,000,000, the Dominion government being the heaviest loser.

Doesn't Deliver Mail Regularly.

CHICAGO, March 4.—The postoffice officials here have recommended to the postmaster general to withdraw the mails from the Indiana and Illinois Southern railway, which runs from Effingham, Ills., to Swiss City, Ind. The reason for the recommendation is the irregularity with which the road delivers the mails.

'Twixt truth and error there's this difference known—
Error is fruitful, truth is only one.

President Cleveland might have been better employed, last Sabbath, than in cruising for pleasure along the North Carolina sea-coast from Cape Hatteras to Pimlico Sound in a government steamer. As an individual, his Sabbath desecration was reprehensible, but as the chief magistrate of a Christian nation, his duty to respect the Lord's day was doubly imperative, and his responsibility greatly increased.

The history of the Jesuits is world-wide, and that of the Clan-na-Gael in Chicago, since its murder of Dr. Cronin, has been a stench in the nostrils of all law-abiding citizens. Of the United Irishmen—except in their hatred of England and their unlawful methods, including the alleged use of dynamite bombs, for "freeing Ireland"—little seems to be generally known. In this connection we observe that a writer in the Converted Catholic for March stamps the Jesuits as "the most formidable secret society which the world has ever known"—its character for dishonesty and secretiveness having led to its expulsion from nearly every civilized country in the world.

The migration of Negroes from the Southern States to Africa has begun. The movement was originated by Bishop Turner, of the African Methodist church, and is under his control. In addition to his diocese in this country, he has four conferences under his charge in Africa, and for some years he has contemplated the colonization of Southern Negroes in Liberia and Sierra Leone. He sees nothing in the future of his race in the United States to encourage them to remain here, and he hopes, by gathering several hundred thousands of them in Africa, with their habits of civilization and knowledge of Christianity, to make them an important factor in the social and religious improvement of the people among whom they are going to dwell. Four car-loads of these emigrants arrived at Savannah, Ga., last Friday, to take ship for Africa.

It appears, from later intelligence, that the Chicago Record, from which we gathered our information that Congress had admitted the Territory of New Mexico to Statehood, was mistaken. Utah will enter the Union on the coming Fourth of July, but Arizona and New Mexico will have to wait a little longer. The latter is said to be perfectly eligible for admission, but for some unknown reason the measure failed. Utah is to be the only new State of 1895.

The Freemasons of Italy, representing the dominant Humbert administration, purpose to celebrate the approaching anniversary of the capture of Rome from the papacy, the act that put the finishing touches upon the political downfall of the Pope. As the Freemasons are very numerous in Italy, and have a strong representation in the vicinity of the Vatican, the prospect of a powerful Masonic demonstration on that occasion confronts the "faithful." No serious outbreak, however, is anticipated.

A correspondent, writing from Springfield, Ill., about legislative proceedings, notes the fact that "Representative Black has introduced a local-option bill that ought to pass. It provides for a county vote for or against saloons in counties having no towns of over 5,000 inhabitants. This would include about sixty counties. Christian people should send in petitions to their representatives urging them to vote in favor of it" The suggestion, in connection with such a measure, seems to be judicious. Many counties, under such a law, would soon be free from saloons and saloon politics.

A literary critic calls our attention to what he believes to be the weakest passage in all the imagery of Longfellow's poetry; and this is it:

> The day is done, and the darkness
> Falls from the wing of night,
> As a feather is wafted downward
> From an eagle in its flight.

"I see in this," he says, "only the most commonplace idea—one that in prose would be scarcely noticeable, but in an otherwise finished poem, comparing great things with small, the imagery is below mediocrity. I much better like the fanciful picture in a verse on the same subject by Nat Lee, 'the mad poet,' who flourished in this country some sixty years since:

> 'Night lets her sable curtain down,
> And pins it with a star.'"

There is something in this conceit that indicates more than mere madness—it is genius.

Two articles have already appeared in this paper relating to an organized band of "lynchers" in Holt county, Neb. Another correspondent from that vicinity writes to us, giving additional particulars of the condition of affairs. As his paper will probably appear at length in next week's Cynosure, we may here only briefly quote one of his reasons for the existence of a society of vigilantes for the summary punishment of offensive individuals. "For the last ten or twelve years," he writes, "the people of Holt county believe that they have been imposed upon by a secret ring of thieves as officers of the county. They believe that the records of the county will show this, and also that the most of them have their names enrolled in one or more of the lodge-books of the three principal lodges of the county—Masons, Odd-fellows, or Knights of Pythias." He adds several other reasons for the existence of citizen vigilantes, but this will do for the present. His entire letter is full of interest.

There is a peculiarity in Masonry that I may be permitted partially to call your attention to. The most noted number is the figure THREE in Ancient Craft Masonry. There are three degrees; three principal officers of the lodge; three supports, three ornaments, three greater and three lesser lights, three movable and three immovable jewels, three rounds of Jacob's ladder, representing faith, hope and charity; three working tools of a Fellow Craft; three principal orders of architecture; three Ancient Grand Masters,—W. S. Felker's Address to a Nebraska Lodge.

Here are three other peculiarities prominent in Freemasonry: "Binding myself under no less a penalty than that of (1) having my throat cut across, (2) my tongue torn out by its roots, and (3) buried in the rough sands of the sea at low-water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours."—Entered Apprentice's Obligation. Three more: "Binding myself under no less a penalty than that of (1) having my left breast torn open, (2) my heart and vitals plucked out, and (3) given as a prey to the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air."—Fellow Craft's Obligation. Three more: "Binding myself under no less a penalty than that of (1) having my body severed in twain, (2) my bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes, and (3) the ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven."—Master Mason's Obligation. These are only additional contrasts between ideal and real Masonry.

Ida Wells is the name of an intelligent Negress, formerly a resident of the South, but for sometime past engaged in lecturing in England and elsewhere against the wholesale lynching of Negroes for alleged criminal assaults, in which the evidence against them is very "gauzy." In her lectures, Miss Wells points out many features which will be interesting to consider as the statement coming from the Negro side of the controversy. Regarding the particular occurrences which have led to the movement in behalf of the colored race—the lynching of Negroes for heinous offenses against white women—Miss Wells recalls that when the masters of the slaves had gone to battle during the war the Negroes were left on the plantations to protect the women and children. There was then no complaint of these awful crimes, which she claims are the outgrowth of the later conduct of the white race, in its antagonism to the black man. She states that colored women have suffered more from the criminal assaults of whites than ever white women have from Negroes, and in every case the punishment meted out to the whites has been infinitely less than to the Negroes. She further alleges that the silence of the North is largely responsible for the lynchings in the South, for the suppression of which her race asks the co-operation of moral and Christian people.

FRESH TESTIMONY AGAINST THE LODGE.

[Address of welcome to the convention of the Pennsylvania State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, in Philadelphia, by Rev J. C. McFeeters, pastor of the Second Reformed Presbyterian church, in which the convention was held, Monday afternoon, February 25, 1895.]

Dear Friends and Co-workers in the Lord and for his Kingdom: You are welcome. The words may well remain unsaid: The very name of our city extends a cordial greeting to all who, like you, come in the name of the Lord. The name of our church conveys a welcome from the heart to all who come in the spirit of Him whose is the kingdom, the power and the glory. "Philadelphia" stands for all that is true, noble and sacred in society. "Covenanter" stands for all that is heroic in the struggles of a church breaking the bonds of corrupted religion, and emerging into the liberty of Christ and his light. To you we extend the sincerest welcome. This is your day, and your home, as well as your work, while you stay.

You have "met as Christians, not to judge men, but to discuss principles." Your topic is "Secret Societies." Organizations called secret societies are numerons, strong, and almost ubiquitous. Yet it seems to me that in speaking of secret societies, as existing in our day, and our land, we misapply words. Secret societies! What society is to-day secret? With a free conscience, a free tongue, a free pen, in a free land, a secret society is almost an impossibility. The secrets are out. The world is informed; the blinds are transparent; the doors are of clear glass; all who have eyes can see inside, and know what is going on in the fraternity halls. If any person present believes otherwise, we ask you to remain through these sessions, and know if the word "secret" ought not to be stricken out. The lodge imagines itself unseen and unknown, just as the ostrich does when she hides her head in the sand.

The orders indulge in the presumption that they have the light, and all the light that is worth having; and it is so precious that they must shut it in from the whole world; no eyes may see it, without a price and a promise. But to such as have been illuminated by the Gospel of Jesus, the lodge-light seems quite artificial, since it can be confined between walls; and is too dim for general use, since it never reflects from the members upon the world. Like the little glowworm, the oath-bound order flashes its light for its own use, and shuts it off when it chooses, and thinks that this is all the light that shines which is of any account; yet the sun is glowing in the heavens; the whole canopy is glistening with shining points; and the great celestial reflector floods land and sea with brightness. In the lodge, especially where the name of Jesus, who is the light of the world, is excluded, the light is gone out, and shut out. They are in darkness; perhaps not absolute darkness. Like certain fishes of the deep sea, who lighten their caverns with phosphorescent lamps which are a part of their own physical nature, so shrewdness and subtilty may shed some glare around them. But our astonishment is that Christian men, members of the church of God, dwellers in the light that shines from the face of our Lord Jesus, can choose to live in the lodge-caverns, where glimmer the phosphorescent lamps of natural sagacity and cunning. Who ever heard of the eagle, after enjoying the mountain summit, soaring above the storm, resting in the serene air that is stirred only by his own wing, and bathing where the sun pours out his liquid gold without a shadow to interfere, folding his pinions and diving a hundred fathoms under the sea, to enjoy a season with the fishes in the caverns? No eagle does this. Nor can any eagle-minded Christian do it.

One faulty feature of the lodge is the oath, or promise, binding one person to another, and all to the lodge, and this before they know what is included in the obligation. Then when they are in, few, very few, are strong enough to regain their liberty. They are in for life, or till dragged out by conscience, or till some great providence strikes the lodge system and breaks it up. The lodge-workers remind us of the story of Ben Hur, as told by Lew Wallace, when he was put by the Romans in the galley, and chained to his seat, in the hold of the ship, with hundreds of others, to pull at the oars without hope of escape, till his carcass would be thrown overboard, or his vessel be broken in a sea-fight. The lodgemen are in chains; chained to their place; to their oars, their unlawful obligation; chained till death; will scarcely be emancipated, except by some tremendous power striking the craft, and breaking it in pieces. Therefore this reform movement, and this convention! You are assisting in the providential gathering of a moral force that will eventually destroy the galleys and liberate the chained.

Three reasons appear why oath-walled, pledged-bound fraternities exist, shut off from the world by pretended secrecy: social, commercial, and political benefit. But none of the three can stand a moment in the presence of a fair-minded man. Social benefit! The society that exclude mother, wife, sister, or daughter, is to be suspected. The refinement must be refined, and the enjoyment angelic indeed, if woman be unfit or unworthy. How unmanly of a man to enter a social heaven and coldly leave his fair companion outside to await his return! Commercial benefit! The fraternity give opportunity to plan for mutual pecuniary advantage. No doubt a reward in dollars can be gained by schemes that will not endure the light. But the gains are spoils; they are gathered with a hand that resembles his who comes from the robbers' retreat. Political benefit! Climbing into power by the help of the lodge; entering the office of trust through the door of secrecy! What a comment on the person! What an acknowledgment of weakness, of unsuitableness, of inferiority! In this land of equal rights and privileges, where all who have ambition can run for positions of trust and power, and they that have the superior merit can win, what a stigma on the man who acknowledges that he must be foisted upon the people, into an office, by the power of an "imperium imperio," in translation, "machine worked by a boss." To strip the lodge of the delusion of secrecy, and show the unreasonableness of its reasons, you have come among us, and have our welcome.

We know but of one secret society sustained by the Word of God: the society in the closet of prayer; the soul and its Lord shut in for communion and counsel. There the most innocent secrecy can be enjoyed, the most exalting fellowship, the most surprising benefit. The Spirit will reveal secrets that had not been known, shed light that had not been seen, and communicate power and inspiration that had not been felt. But the secret cannot be kept; it is too great; it will gleam from the face, radiate from the influence, show itself in the life and work of the secret suppliant; the Lord will reward him openly. May the result of this convention be, by the work of the Holy Spirit, that many of the sons of our city shall know that there is more enjoyment, advantage and exaltation of life and character in one hour of secret prayer than in all the lodge meetings of a year—a lifetime. Welcome to the convention!

A FRIEND'S VIEW REGARDING LODGE OATHS

[A paper by Josiah W. Leeds, read at the Convention of the Pennsylvania State Christian Association, in Philadelphia, February 26, 1895.]

At the hearing of saloon applicants in the License Court, at Philadelphia, two years ago, one of those applicants showed so conspicuously, by the manner in which he twirled and displayed the shining Masonic emblem upon his person, how he desired the special notice and favor of one of the judges, a Mason of high degree, that the latter felt obliged to rebuke the man by telling him that such conduct was "becoming disgusting." From the account in the daily papers, I inferred that there had been other manifestations of like conduct, and such as had drawn out public remark.

Well, the applicant for the coveted license to sell liquor was, as appeared, an adherent of an oath-bound secret order; and the judge of the court of whom he hoped, or expected, to receive the favor was of the same secret fraternity. "My Masonic oath," said that Christ-redeemed man and seceding Mason, Ezra T. McIntire, "bound me to prefer Masons to all others. My Blue Lodge oath obligated me to prefer all in that order to those below, murder excepted, and that at my discretion. My Royal Arch oath bound me to protect all in that degree, murder not excepted." Now, the saloon applicant, in the case of which I have been speaking, undoubtedly felt that the self-advantage feature of the oath ought to work. Conspicuously zealous in that belief, so as to create a scandal in court, he presumably defeated his own purpose, being admonished by the judge that he had overshot the mark.

It is to be hoped that neither the aforesaid judge, nor any public servant holding a similar very responsible position, would in any case of the kind be moved to swerve a hair's breadth from his exact duty to the commonwealth which the solemn obligation he had taken bound him to observe. Yet here the two obligations come into collision. If they mean what they say, they ought to clash together with a good deal of heat; if, on the other hand, one or the other, or both, are to be taken with more or less reservation or allowance, so as to become, so to speak, elastic, then no friction becomes apparent to the outside observer, notwithstanding that the alleged sacred character of the oath is brought into contempt, and its asserted binding power is seen to amount to nothing.

It must be apparent to every one who has given any attention to the matter, that the so-called inviolability of a judicial oath is dependent, in the minds of very many who take it, upon the element of secrecy. That is to say, if the occasion seems to call for it, and it can be done in the dark, and with no apparent danger of detection or probability of incurring penalty, it will be disregarded. Every judge, every district attorney and other court officer, can testify to the truth of this asservation. I have no doubt that the same is true of the oath taken in the lodge. The retroactive result of this is evident in its tendency to cheapen the credibility of an unsworn statement. "Remember that you are under oath," will often be said to a witness suspected of evading the truth in his testimony. Hence, if such a one be not of a conscientious turn of mind, he will consider that though it may be a pretty serious offence, in case he be found out, to commit perjury, it does not particularly matter in ordinary conversation should he tell a lie when it best serves his purpose to do so.

This inefficacy of the oath as a security for truth-telling, and the effect of oath-taking and oath-violations in diminishing the general reprobation of lying, has operated to incline many persons to elect to take the simple affirmation. The oath feature of the lodge must be answerable for a good proportion of this resultant; for, according to a compilation of five years ago, taken from city directories, there were in Brooklyn, "the city of churches," 355 churches and 695 lodges; in St. Louis there were 220 churches and 729 lodges; in Chicago, 384 churches and 1,088 lodges.

To a man who has a well-founded reputation for veracity, and of whom it would be said "his word is as good as his bond," it would be taken as naught less than a very great indignity to have it asked him, when making any formal statement: "Now will you swear that so and so is true?" Of Solon, the sagacious law-giver of Athens, it is related that he said: "A good man ought to be in that estimation that he needs not an oath; because it is to be reputed a lessening of his honor if he be forced to swear." It has been asserted that the ground of the refusal of the early Christians to take the Roman oath was because of the idolatry involved in the act. But Grotius remarks upon this matter, "Many of the Christian fathers condemned all oaths, without exception." "I say nothing of perjury," says Tertullian, "because swearing itself is unlawful to Christians." In the same manner, while the idolatrous oath would have been sufficient of itself to debar the primitive Christians from entrance into the military service, the defence of the faithful of those days was: "I am a Christian; therefore, I cannot fight."

So far, therefore, as the religious society of Friends is concerned, this step at the threshold of entering a secret order, the taking of the oath, would be deemed the surrender of what they hold to be an important Christian testimony, having always believed and testified, according to the words of Tertullian, that "swearing itself is unlawful to Christians." Herein they hold in honor, as not having been said in vain, those declarations of our Lord in the fifth chapter of Matthew, in which, after showing that the "eye for an eye, and tooth for a tooth," of aforetime, had given way to a higher law which forbade even the angry thought of the heart, and that the prohibition to commit adultery now includes the requirement, that the eye of lust should be plucked out; this also which follows: "Again, ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths: But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne: nor by the earth, for it is his footstool: neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great King. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black. But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil." All of which we find not only referred to and maintained by the Apostle James in his general epistle, but its great importance is specially emphasized, when he says: "But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath: but let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation."

The authoritative counsel of James is to "my brethren"—to his brethren in Christ Jesus the Lord—the Christ who is declared to be "the way, the truth, and the life," and who assured his disciples that if they continued in his word, they should know the truth, and that "the truth shall make you free." Alas, for the folly, and for that counsel of Antichrist that would consign any one to a dark lodge to grope blindly after the truth! So I conclude, as to the oath, whatever may be the usage of courts of law concerning the taking of evidence, or that of the lodges as to keeping inviolate their secrets or enforcing their penalties, the safe practice of the Christian, it seems to me, is to consistently observe in word and action, his yea, yea; nay, nay. Swear not at all.

A CHAPTER IN LODGERY.

BY REV. P. B. WILLIAMS.

This State has recently had a chapter of incidents, not the most creditable to the lodge. It shows the evil effects of the lodge relation to the church. As the whole thing is a matter of history, we can mention names.

The first case is that of Dr. Applewhite of Corvallis, a Freemason, Odd-fellow, A. O. U. W., and perhaps more. While attending the wife of Mr. Kenyon he induced her husband to unite with the lodge, so he (the doctor) could have lodge-night to spend with Kenyon's wife.

They finally eloped, went to the Midwinter Fair, were intercepted, and brought back. Mrs. Kenyon confessed her guilt. The doctor tried to kill Mr. Kenyon, and finally succeeded in killing Mrs. K. and himself. The matter of his lodge relations was kept exceedingly quiet. It is pretty evident that had he stayed and fought his case through the courts, the lodges would have pulled him through. The first decision was in his favor. The judge held that Mrs. Applewhite was the only person who could, according to the law, prosecute the doctor for adultery. Certainly a very lame law, or lodge influences helped the decision. Probably both.

The second incident in our chapter is that of Rev. W. A. Willason, a Presbyterian divine of Portland, a Mason, Odd-fellow, and perhaps more.

After a brief experience in the real estate business here, his wife died. He fitted up rooms for a young Swedish lady, with a view of spending his leisure hours with her. He bought her a gold watch. She soon tired of him, sold out her furniture, and struck out for San Francisco with one of her own countrymen. Willason then mortgaged his house and lot, and all his furniture, telling his nice young daughters that he was leaving them all his possessions. Then he eloped with some one and went to the World's Fair at Chicago, and finally turned up in Missouri, where he was finally arrested and brought back to Portland, to answer a number of charges on the line of crookedness.

While he lay in jail here, I visited him. He played the role of a holy innocent, and said he would come out as clear as an angel, adding that he would never come out on bond, though he had men running all over the city that same day, trying to find bondsmen. He also stated to your correspondent that he would sue the Oregonian for $25,000 damages when he got out. Perhaps he will. He now languishes in the Oregon State penitentiary for a term of eighteen years, on charges of forgery and obtaining money under false pretense. He sold the same property to three or four different parties.

One of the heartless features of this case is: When he ran away, he left one of his daughters dying with consumption, and she would have been turned out on the streets to die had not friends came and took her in.

The next case is that of Rev. J. C. Reid, a Baptist minister, who was pastor at Oregon City, Ore., when I came here, nearly seven years ago. He was the most popular pastor in that city; but frequent rumors of crookedness came to the ears of his congregation till he was forced to resign.

He came to East Portland, took charge of the First Baptist church, and got along swimmingly, until, about three years ago, he took a swim all the way to Moline, Ill.

One morning his clothing was found on a log at the banks of the Willamette river, below Stark street, where he was accustomed to go bathing after all had retired for the night. The public supposed that he was drowned. The river was dragged for days. Preparations were being made to collect $7,000 life insurance which he held in the Masonic Mutual and the A. O. U. W., when all at once he turned up at Moline, Ill., with his brother. Of course he was pronounced insane by the Masons, Odd-fellows, A. O. U. W., G. A. R and Good Templars, all of which claim him as their brother.

The thing was quieted, and about one year ago he returned here, locating at Oregon City, where he tried his hand at establishing an independent congregation. This failing to materialize, about two weeks ago, completely disguised, he entered the First National Bank of East Portland at the noon hour, held up the teller, tied and gagged him, and was helping himself to the cash when he was confronted by a double-barreled shot-gun in the hand of Mr. Southworth, of the bank across the street. The preacher was arrested, and is now in the county jail. "How are the mighty fallen." I suppose the insanity dodge will be used in this case. I have heard it hinted already. We will wait.

The last case I will now mention is that of Dr. John V. Gaff, a prominent physician, of this city. He married into one of the finest families in Oregon, left the Masons and joined the United Presbyterian church. He recently eloped with Miss Maggie Smith, daughter of Judge Smith, of Old Albina. They were apprehended in the Sinslau country, in Lane county, Oregon. He is now in the jail here, awaiting his trial.

It is my opinion that he is an adhering Mason, and his principles of separation were but a sham. I may be mistaken. I hope I am. The family have my sympathies.

This is enough for one chapter of lodge workings.

THE POET WHITTIER AND HIS SWEETHEART.

GEO. W. CLARK, "THE OLD LIBERTY SINGER," IN THE DETROIT JOURNAL.

A dispatch from Amesbury, Mass., the home of the late John Greenleaf Whittier, under date of January 18, chronicled the death at Maplewood Farm, West Newbury, of Elizabeth Bray Downing, the sole woman who ever won the poet's affections. She was 85 years of age. The dispatch said further:

"It is said that when the poet was 20 he met the lady at East Haverhill, and a strong acquaintance and warm friendship sprang up between the two, and it continued for some few years. The cause of their parting has never been explained, although it is believed that Whittier explained to Miss Bray that he could not enter the matrimonial state for the reason that he must care for his aged mother."

Writing to the Detroit (Mich.) Journal, the "old liberty singer," Geo. W. Clark, says in reference to the above: I knew the poet Whittier personally, and have met him many times in our great Abolition conventions in New England and Philadelphia, where I was called upon to set music to and render his soul-stirring, anti-slavery poems in those great gatherings for emancipation; and I have sung them also in his home, to his then living, but aged, mother and maiden sister at Amesbury, Mass. They had never beforeheard his poems sung, orthodox Quakers though they were, of the straightest kind. Whittier admitted to me he had no idea when he wrote his anti-slavery poems they could ever be made to produce such an effect as I had given them with music. It seemed a new and highly-gratifying revelation to his good and venerable mother and maiden sister. This was away back in the '40s and '50s. As to the paragraph above, it is only in part correct. It is true a strong friendship existed between the poet and his friend and admirer, Miss Elizabeth Bray Downing, but it was stronger on her part than on his. She did not hesitate to avow her love for him, and to tell him she loved him! He used to tell her in reply he thought it could not be his person, but his poetry, that she admired. She assured him it was both his poetry and his person.

He used to tell her he thought the match would be unequal, as he was then poor, not yet having received much from his writings, and as she was well off he did not feel it would be right and fair, and he would not feel free and independent to be relying upon and live at the expense of a wife. She tried to assure him her fortune should lie at his feet, and be as free to serve him as to serve her. It should be one, as they would be one. But their converse views and feelings in this matter reserved them both from hymeneal union, though the anxiety for the support of his mother and sister had long since ceased by their departure from earth. But there is an incident back of all this which explains. He did have another sweetheart in his younger—his schoolboy days. She died in youth and left his poor heart forlorn. His tender and touching little poem, which I herewith send you, tells the story:

Long years ago a winter's sun
O'er the schoolhouse shone at setting;
Lit up its western window panes,
And low eve's icy fretting.
It touched the tangled, golden curls
And brown eyes full of grieving
Of one who still her steps delayed
When all the school was leaving.

For near her stood the little boy
Her childish favors singled;
His cap pulled low upon a face
Where pride and shame were mingled.
Pushing with restless feet the snow
To right and left, he lingered—
As restlessly her tiny hands
The blue checked apron fingered.

He saw her lift her eyes, he felt
Her soft hand's light caressing,
And heard the trembling of her voice
As if a fault confessing—
"I'm sorry that I spelt the word—
I hate to go above you;
Because"—her brown eyes lower fell—
"Because—you see—I love you!"

Still memory to a gray-haired man
That sweet child's face is showing—
Dear girl! the grasses on her grave
Have forty years been growing!
He lives to learn in life's hard school
How few who pass above him
Lament their triumph—and his loss—
Like her—because they love him!

A REMINISCENCE OF FRED. DOUGLASS.

At the Washington anti-secrecy convention, in 1884, the late Frederick Douglass was introduced, received with hearty applause, and addressed those present from the platform.

While he did not speak definitely in favor of opposition to the lodge system, he said: "I am in perfect harmony with at least two objects which you are met to promote. The first is free inquiry and discussion of those questions which are deemed of importance to the welfare of mankind. The second is civil rights. As to the first, I believe that toleration of what may be error is not dangerous so long as truth is left free to combat it. Innocence and truth seek the light, and rush to embrace it. They court investigation and welcome the inquirer. But guilt cries out in horror and in shame; rocks and mountains on us fail to hide us from the face of the Omniscient Judge. Whoever has any habit, or association, or business, which he refuses to have examined, I advise him to examine it himself and abandon it."

Turning to Geo. W. Clark, "the sweet singer of liberty," now of Detroit, who was present, and with whom he had a previous acquaintance, Mr. Douglass said: "Your voice never sounded sweeter to me than it does to-night. Those men who stood for human freedom were among those who held that, however few they were in number, so long as their principles were right, their cause was secure. I have always held that one with God was a majority. The relation existing between the white and colored people of the United States is to-day the great and all-commanding problem for the American people to solve. We have got rid of slavery. It is gone, gone, gone, never to return. But its long, black shadow stretches across our entire continent—the spirit of bondage is still in our land. You sometimes ask when this Negro question will cease. I will tell you when it will cease. It will cease when every colored man shall enjoy equal rights with every other man. [Applause.] It will cease when we have one country, one citizenshipf one liberty, one equality, for all people of the United States, and not until then."

Mr. Douglass then continued, at considerable length, his argument for the conservation of the civil rights of the race from which he sprang. The liberty of the individual under the law, whatever his birth, previous condition, or color, was eloquently advocated. Even the oath-bound bondage of the secret lodge found no favor in his sight. Freedom was to him the most desirable of human rights, as the foundation of all other God-given blessings.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Dr. Holmes' psychical experiment.—Dr. I. J. Lansing on prize-fights and Sunday concerts.—Dissensions in the A. P. A.—Secret societies and our public institutions. —Woman-suffrage defeated.—"The bad boy" of Massachusetts.

Now that investigation into psychical phenomena is the fashion of the day, it may not be amiss to tell one of Dr. Holmes' after-dinner stories, in which he related that he once tried to solve the enigma of creation. He came to the conclusion that if those thoughts which arise in the mind, during the inhalation of some anesthetic, when the soul hovers as it were on the confines of two worlds, could be caught and imprisoned on paper, there might lie enshrined the secret of the universe. Accordingly he placed himself in his armchair, and with pen in hand, and ink and paper before him, he inhaled the vapor of chloroform. As unconsciousness began to steal over him, he felt a surging of sublime and marvelous thoughts through his brain. Now was the supreme moment, and by a vigorous effort he seized his pen and wrote, he knew not what. On awaking to full consciousness he turned, trembling with eager anxiety to the sheet of paper on which he expected to find scrawled the secret of the universe. And this is what he read: "A strong smell of turpentine pervades the whole." The humbugged victims of the spiritual mediums whose case is now in the courts for obtaining money on false pretenses must feel that a strong smell of brimstone, if not of turpentine, pervades the atmosphere around materialized spirits. As to legitimate investigation into mind-phenomena, there is nothing to be said against it if conducted in the right way—unless it be to express a doubt whether the game is worth the candle. It is doubtful if the labors of the Society for Psychical Research, which has investigated 17,000 cases of so-called "apparitions," will ever amount to a scientific demonstration of spiritual life apart from the body; and metaphorically speaking, "a strong smell of turpentine pervades the whole." In such matters there is little satisfaction to be gained from even philosophical experiment; but much, both of comfort and satisfaction, if in regard to the future life we are willing to trust God in the dark, and say with St. Anselm, "I do not seek to understand in order to believe; I believe in order to understand."

Dr. I. J. Lansing preached a good sermon last Sunday, one that it was a pity the city council could not have heard, so scathingly did he score their action in granting licenses for prize-fights and Sunday concerts. It is difficult to escape his conclusion that the sense of decency in Boston is rapidly weakening. "With Nero on the throne," said the doctor, "we might expect to find Paul in a dungeon. With the present rules of Boston, it is natural that Wm. F. Davis is in Clarke Street jail for quietly preaching the Gospel on the Common. With Louis Napoleon on the throne—a rotten king—there was a rotten empire." The recent boxing-match in Music Hall, attended by 4,500 people, was the most disgraceful exhibition ever witnessed in Boston, the worst feature of it not being so much that, according to press reports, "the men fought like tigers," "were evidently out for blood," "fought like demons," etc., as that the exhibition was witnessed by "a sea of intellectual faces—doctors, lawyers, merchants, college professors, actors, politicians, men representing all walks of life, in which the so-called vicious elements were in the minority." The more shame to the so-called "respectable" element, and the more reason that the friends of decency should bestir themselves. Dr. Lansing scored the Sunday concert business with equal vigor, and gave a sharp thrust at the liberals who are so afraid that we shall relapse into Puritanism—a very unnecessary fear by the way—when he said that "the 'blue laws' which once ruled Boston were better than the 'scarlet' laws which defile the State to-day." The vileness of these Sunday concerts may be judged from the fact that the printed testimony at the hearing was of such a character that it could not be sent through the mails. For the same reason the worst part of it was not published in the newspapers, so that the public at large is ignorant that the Pilgrim City in matters of morals and decency is beginning to run a pretty even race with Chicago.

Tales of dissension in the A. P. A. ranks, though kept from the outside public as much as possible, still continue to leak out. There is without doubt a bad split in the order, which is likely to grow wider. The two factions are known as the "liberal" and "illiberal" sections, and are developing the "rule or ruin" spirit which is apt to characterize factions. The illiberal element, which is mostly made up of British-Americans, want a cast-iron rule which will make it an offense punishable by expulsion to vote for a Catholic. But cases are supposable where a Catholic may be vastly superior in ability, morality and patriotism to his Protestant rival. There are some members in the Romish Church who are not of it, and who refuse in things secular to be bound by her commands; in which case the 'liberal' element, which is generally represented by native-born Americans, insist on their right of individual judgment. A Catholic who does his thinking for himself is certainly a better candidate for Americans to vote for than a Protestant, even with the blood of Puritan sires in his veins, who lets a secret society do his thinking for him. The situation grows interesting, for there are many among the liberal or American element who begin to see that secrecy is the great element of weakness in the patriotic orders; and the rule which forbids men to vote according to their conscience, and prohibits the divulging of the names of the A. P. A. officials, or of members under penalty of expulsion, is better calculated to make cowards and underlings than patriotic, intelligent citizens. President Murkland, of the Durham Agricultural College, New Hampshire, speaking of the bill in relation to that institution which is being engineered by the Grange, and the threat to take away the $3,000 annual State contribution from the college if the bill does not pass, said, at a recent hearing before the House Committee: "I hope it will be the last attempt of an organized secret body to interfere with the rights of the State. Back of the act is something which strikes at the liberties of the people. See the threat in it: The Grange says, 'Follow us, and you will have the support of 13,000 people. If you don't, you will have the opposition of 13,000 people."

The G. A. R. seeking to introduce military instruction into the schools, is another instance of the lodge laying its hand on public institutions. The same principle of patriotism which makes us fight Jesuit encroachments, should make us say "hands off" to the lodge in tones so unmistakable that it will have to heed.

This seems to be a bad year for woman-suffrage in New England. It has been defeated in the New Hampshire Legislature, and once again in Massachusetts, the House voting against the measure by 40 majority. The arguments used in opposition were plainly inspired by the saloon interest. One member gave among other reasons for opposing it that "practical politics is a system of expediency, and it is not expedient to grant suffrage to women." It is generally known that politics as now practiced is "a system of expediency," but the truth is not often so baldly stated. Doubtless it is a most inexpedient measure from the standpoint of the liquor-sellers.

The question of adopting the Norwegian system was recently debated in Parker Memorial Hall, Rev. David N. Beach of Cambridge taking the affirmative, and Dr. Plumb of Roxbury the negative. The latter put the case in a nutshell when he said in opening that "the liquor interest was the bad boy of Massachusetts. The Norwegian system, which now comes knocking at the old lady's door, is simply the same bad boy in a bright jacket." It is to be hoped that our good mother Massachusetts will be wary enough not to let him in.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

The Pennsylvania Convention.—Lenten amusements.—Military drill in the public schools.—Metropolitan meetings.

It was my privilege to be in attendance at the Pennsylvania State Anti-secrecy Convention in Philadelphia, last week, and to greet many of our co-laborers in the cause. The convention was a pronounced success, owing to the yeomanlike service and painstaking preparation of Bro. W. B. Stoddard, whose organizing ability and wide experience peculiarly fit him for this work. Father Stoddard was also there, as he said, "simply as a visitor and substitute," but any reform convention without his presence would be like the play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out. A larger number of ministers than usual were in attendance at all the sessions, and it is hoped that the seed sown will bear fruit through many months to come.

The advent of Lent comes as a relief to the jaded devotee of fashion, and by common consent the ceaseless round of social festivities gives way to quieter and more intellectual pleasure. Lectures and concerts are substituted for balls and theater parties, and the Lenten services of the Catholic and Episcopal churches are crowded with penitents and worshipers.

It is an interesting astronomical fact that on Good Friday, April 12, the heavenly bodies which gravitate around the sun will be in exactly the same position that they occupied in the firmament on the day that Christ died upon the cross. It will be the first time that such a thing has occurred for 1862 years. Astronomers tell us that about noon, New York time, the moon will pass before Virginis (Spica) and hide that constellation for more than an hour.

The question of introducing military drill into the public schools is still being discussed pro and con, by press and pulpit. A few months ago, a large mass meeting was held in Carnegie Music Hall to encourage the movement, at which eminent military and civil personages appeared and gave addresses of approval; among them was ex-President Harrison. The popular current seems to set in its favor. It is urged that it means physical development and muscular training; whereas any competent gymnasium instructor will say that the military drill is conducive to awkward angularity of movement, muscular constrictions and a mechanical and automatic carriage that is utterly destructive of artistic grace and physical freedom. One of the leading daily papers recently said, in commenting editorially upon the motive of the movement: "The attempt to make the New York public schools a primary grade of the State militia is inspired by the same martial spirit that leads the great warrior of Central Africa to stick a dog's tooth through the gristle of his nose, as a mark of his military distinction."

It goes without saying that a nation that has been trained to fight will fight on small provocation, and when this militarism is lacking, arbitration is likely to take the place of the sword.

Rev. Dr. Arthur T. Pierson has been preaching at the Metropolitan meetings, the past few months, on Sabbath afternoons and evenings. These meetings were organized about three years ago and intended to reproduce in this country what was known as the "Forward Movement" in England, under the leadership of Dr. Hughes, among the Methodists. Evangelist C. H. Yatman was sent abroad to make a thorough study of the movement, by a number of wealthy Methodist laymen who were backing the undertaking financially. On his return from England, Mr. Yatman was placed at the head of the work and given carte blanche in the matter of expenses. Theaters and halls were rented, a large force of vocal and instrumental musicians were employed and definite plans of campaign were inaugurated, with a view to reach the non-church-going masses. In a single year the hall rents alone amounted to $15,000. The idea seemed to be to have all the machinery and methods of modern Methodist church-work, without any of the phraseology. For example, groups of converts were classified on the decimal system, and called "circles," instead of classes. Mr. Yatman, sometime since, returned to evangelistic work, and the work necessarily suffers from not having a permanent leader. It now seems to be gravitating toward the institutional methods of modern Christianity, several nights each week being devoted to entertainment and educational services, while the evangelistic phase is less prominent than formerly. Meanwhile the great problem of bringing the Gospel into vital contact with the unchurched population is still unsolved.

A few nights ago, Mr. Ingersoll lectured in Hoboken, New Jersey, just across the river from New York. Some of the local clergymen tried to prevent the lecture by appealing to the old blue laws against blasphemy, which are still on the statute books of New Jersey. They were unable to prevent his appearance legally, but some of them were present with note-books and pencils to jot down any expression of which the law could take cognizance. The doughty colonel was shrewd enough to omit from his lecture the sacrilegious portion that might have made him amenable to the laws, but he repaid himself by indulging in considerable sarcasm and invective against the attempts made to prevent his speaking, at the expense of the clergy in general, and the local clergy in particular. A canvass, on the following days, by the reporter among the more eminent ministers of New York and Brooklyn elicited a general expression of criticism and disapproval at the action of the Hoboken pastors, as not only conducing to curtail the right of free-speech but especially as calculated to give so much gratuitous advertising on which the great infidel depends for notoriety. OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The promotion of reforms by law.—Crusade against indecent pictures and books.—The proposed monetary conference.—Important patent decision.—The national Methodist College.—Other matters.

It is a favorite argument with those who oppose reform in any shape to say that moral reforms cannot be accomplished by law, but it is a very poor argument; because its practical refutation can be found on every side by those who care to look for it. Who will deny that when Congress made it unlawful for lotteries to use the U. S. mails, a long step towards the suppression of the nefarious lottery business was taken? And now, another, and it is hoped the final step, has been taken in this moral reform by the placing upon the statute books a law prohibiting the carrying by express companies of lottery tickets and advertisements. No single act of the Congress just closed promises to be more directly beneficial to the entire country than that against lotteries. Postoffice inspectors who are familiar with the subject have no hesitation in saying that it will put an end to the lottery business in this country if it be rigidly enforced. The new anti-lottery law was one of the last signed by the President, but it was in no danger of failing for lack of the presidential signature after being passed by Congress, as a number of other bills did, because Postmaste General Bissell, who was specially anxious to see the bill become a law before his retirement from the cabinet, made it his business to see that it was not overlooked.

The Washington Christian Endeavorers have decided to engage in a crusade against the exposure and sale of indecent pictures and literature, and they will begin as soon as their plan of campaign is complete. Mr. Anthony Comstock, of New York, has written to the executive committee, giving them some excellent advice and promising to personally confer with them when he comes to Washington, which he expects to do in about ten days. The Endeavorers will try moral suasion on those who display or offer for sale objectionable pictures or literature, and where that fails, will resort to law, which it is believed can be made to reach many cases.

There is a very hopeful feeling in Washington concerning the proposed international monetary conference. The six representatives of Congress —Senators Jones, of Ark.; Teller, of Colo.; and Daniel, of Va.; and Representatives Crisp, of Ga.; Culbertson, of Texas, and Hitt, of Ill.—are all, with the exception of Mr. Hitt, silver men. The three delegates to be selected by the President will probably not be chosen for some time, but it is expected that they will all agree with Mr. Cleveland's financial ideas. After all it is not the American delegates who will determine whether the conference shall decide to rehabilitate silver as a money metal, but the foreign delegates. All Americans agree that international bimetallism is a desirable thing.

It is estimated that the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, handed down this week, that all U. S. patents expire at the expiration of patents on the same invention previously issued by foreign countries, affects a larger amount of invested capital than any decision ever made by this court, some putting it as high as $600,000,000. The decision, which was unanimous, was made in a suit concerning the Bate refrigerator patents, but it affects hundred of others, including many telephone and other electrical patents.

The ninety acres of ground upon which the American University, the great national Methodist College, will be built is now entirely free from debt, the last payment of $9,000 having been made a few days ago. It is expected that ground will be broken for the first of the buildings during the coming summer.

Bishop E. G. Andrews, of New York, who is presiding over the Baltimore Conference of the M. E. church, now in session in Baltimore, preached a powerful sermon in Foundry church Sunday, from the text: "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." He sketched the history of the church thus established and its wonderful growth, which is to become more wonderful yet in the future, and closed by saying: "While His church is not perfect, because the difference between Christ's purpose and man's realization of it is yet very great, it is the best thing in the world."

Mrs. Emma Cranmer, State president of the South Dakota W. C. T. U., was the principal speaker at a big temperance rally Sunday afternoon. She began dramatically by saying: "I come to plead for fallen manhood, weeping womanhood, and defrauded childhood," and she held the attention of her audience by striking sentences which carried truth, if not conviction, to all who heard them. For instance: "No nation could waste annually a billion dollars in strong drink without sooner or later coming to disaster. No nation could compromise with an evil like the liquor traffic without sooner or later going down." *

—A very good religious paper, representing a Protestant denomination, while deprecating our criticism of Christian churches that fellowship with Masons, Odd-fellows and other secret societies, advises the Cynosure to "remember what the Word of God says about 'zeal without knowledge.'" Well, it is this very knowledge on the subject that we have been gathering for twenty-five years, by observation, experience and competent witnesses, that prompts us to denounce the union of the church of Christ with the anti-Christian lodge. We do remember that the Word of God explicitly warns Christians not to be yoked together unequally with unbelievers (2 Cor. 6: 14), and to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. (Eph. 5: 11.) It is the remembrance of these Scriptures that is to-day saving hundreds from the lodge. Our zeal is well-founded in the truth.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN OBJECT-LESSON IN FREEMASONRY.

———, N. Y., March 7, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—It was stated thirteen years ago, that Howgate was a Freemason, and that his escape was due to Masonic influence. I send the following clipping as a continuation of the case. It affords a fine object-lesson of the pernicious effects of Masonry on the dispensation of justice and the prevention of crime. It speaks for itself and needs no comment. It is the old tactics of Freemasons practiced by them for the destruction or evasion of evidence in the prosecution of the murderers of Morgan. The papers are filled with such illustrations, but they are unnoticed by the unwary, disregarded by time-servers, or ignored by the interested. It is evident that we have a mere semblance of government, and that the tendency is toward anarchy, as in all misgoverned countries. Such a government merits and must gain the contempt of all honest men or patriots. Where will the end be?

A Reader.

Captain Henry W. Howgate, formerly disbursing clerk of the signal service, who has been on trial here since Jan. 28 on two indictments charging him with embezzlement and forgery, has been acquitted of the charges. The case was given to the jury at noon on Thursday last, and it was not until noon Sunday that a verdict was reached. On the first ballot, it is said, the vote stood 7 to 5 for acquittal. The jury reported on Saturday their inability to agree, but Judge McComas insisted that they should remain and try again.

The Howgate case has been unusual in many ways. Fourteen years ago important frauds affecting large sums of money were discovered in the signal service accounts, and Howgate was charged with having committed them. He was arrested, but by a ruse escaped from his guards, and for thirteen years remained in New York. Although a reward of $5,000 was offered for his capture, he was not arrested until last fall.

At the begining of the trial there was a hot legal battle in regard to the validity of the indictments on which it was proposed to try Howgate. They were finally sustained and the case tried on its merits. The jury found that the case was not barred by the statute of limitations, but held that Howgate was not guilty of the particular offenses charged.

After the verdict was rendered Howgate was sent back to jail to await trial on the seven indictments still remaining against him. It is not known which of these will first be tried.

The discovery of Howgate by ex-Chief Drummond in New York, where he had been living for years carrying on a second-hand book business under the alias of Williams, looked like a piece of stage business. It developed during the trial that Howgate's whereabouts had been known to a score of persons during the past 13 years. In fact, his friends had been in more or less constant communication with him. Officials of the war department could have arrested him on a dozen different occasions had they seen fit. Sporadic attempts were made by secret service officers to take him; but, warned in time, Howgate would move on.

These officials are sharp enough to run down petty counterfeiters and minor criminals, but a man who could turn aside several hundred thousand dollars of government money seemed to wear a charmed veil which rendered him invisible wherever he might choose to wander. More than once Howgate had been in Washington. He had traveled over the principal railroads of the country, put up at prominent hotels and attempted no disguise. His individuality is so marked that once seen his face would never be forgotten. He was known to thousands, and yet he walked the streets of New York for six years before he was finally arrested.

District Attorney Birney found that the indictments which had previously been prepared against Howgate were fatally defective, though they were prepared by a man considered to be one of the shrewdest criminal lawyers in Washington—the lawyer who drew up the indictments against the star route jobbers, which also proved defective. Mr. Birney drew new ones and proceeded to trial.

Then he discovered a strange reluctance on the part of witnesses when he sought to obtain testimony. Important documents mysteriously disappeared. It was impossible to trace them. The clerks who had them in charge could only twirl their thumbs and stammer forth disclaimers. As the trial progressed pages which were known to contain incriminating entries were found to have been bodily cut from government books.—Washington Telegram.

NEXT DAY.

Andover, Conn., Feb. 21, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—A recent letter from an esteemed correspondent contains the following paragraph: "I have a sister who lives in ———, and she writes me: 'I have joined the ——; was initiated last night, and to-day am very sorry; would give worlds, almost, if I could retrace the step I have taken.' I, too, am very sorry. She knows I do not approve of secret societies."

It was not an unprecedented case, or an unheard-of position. I had stood there, not knowing that I did not stand alone. I did not know that there were others who felt as I did, or acted on my resolution. I had not heard of the National Christian Association, and did not know that there was a periodical in the world that opposed the lodge. But I had heard of God and divine providence, and conscience, and duty. I also knew that there was no nearer door out of any place than the one by which you came in. I never doubted that if there was any place in a quicksand that had a suggestion of safety about it, it was the place just off firm ground where the first dangerous step was taken.

I wrote my correspondent how to advise her sister, and used the following illustration: An uncle of mine, when he was a young man, while bathing, suddenly stepped out where the water came over his head. Turning around, he walked out again.

The illustration points to the one absolute and invariable rule for the lodge-victim. Wherever you are, stop there. There are coils enough around you now; do not hope that you can easier untangle a few more. Every step into the quicksand makes the distance to firm ground wider. Turn around and go out. That is what oriental heathen do when they find that the worship in their temple is a sin, and that is what occidental sun-worshipers must do when they find that the worship perpetrated in Masonic or other secret temples is wrong. Straight out from wherever they are is the shortest way they will ever find.

ECHOES OF THE PENNSYLVANIA STATE CONVENTION.

A LETTER FROM REV. J. P. STODDARD, AND FROM FRIENDS WHO WERE UNABLE TO ATTEND THE CONVENTION.

STEAMER PILGRIM, EN ROUTE TO BOSTON, Feb. 27, 1895.

Faith-tests are not new to reformers. The Philadelphia convention had just enough of disappointment in it to reveal the blending of the human with the divine in its composition.

Very many desired to see and hear Bro. E. D. Bailey, and when his letter came saying that he was prevented, there was a response of earnest prayer, that while absent he might partake of the blessing resting upon the believers, who in one place were of one accord and receiving power to cast out devils in Christ's name. Though the brethren assembled much regretted the absence of Bro. Bailey, his, after all, was the greater loss, since our God supplied all our needs according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus.

The convention record may be given in a sentence: financially, intellectually, and all things considered, numerically and spiritually, it was a victory. I hesitate to particularize lest a seeming partiality or injustice should be suspected where all were strong and quit themselves like men, and where experts would not agree in awarding the laurels. Some dug deeper and looked farther into the "mystery of iniquity" than others. Some were more convincing in argument, and persuasive in eloquence, than others, but who shall dare assert that the learned and eloquent were more consecrated or more zealous of good works than some who spake not at all, but quietly brought their offerings, or ministered to the necessities of the saints with willing hands in the sanctuaries of their Christian homes? Diversity of gifts and callings must not be ignored when rendering honor to whom honor is due. Natural gifts and acquired ability to give out what God has given into a human soul is the measure of responsibility, so that there is neither occasion for boasting, on the one hand, nor disparagement on the other, since "Christ is all and in all, to the glory of God the Father."

The pastor's welcome gave the key-note of what followed, and, as subsequent events proved, the address of the pastor was the echo of the sentiment of his people. There was neither Jew nor Greek, nor denominationalist of any kind, but all were one in Christ the Lord. As the addresses will largely be furnished for publication in the Cynosure, it is not desirable that I should anticipate the Secretary's report with lengthy remarks; but I am constrained to ask special attention to the address of Bro. Farr, of New York, as throwing a flood of light upon the ralations between Romanism and Freemasonry—a subject upon which many minds are confused at the present time.

There was no lack of cordial welcome and hospitality at the Philadelphia headquarters, and Brother and Sister Sellew more than sustained their reputation of friendship for the advocates of any good cause. While blessing others, may they be richly blessed. JAMES P. STODDARD.

[The absence of Rev. E. D. Bailey, of Central Union Mission, Washington, D. C., referred to in the letter of Bro. Stoddard, was a great loss to the convention. The reasons for his failure to be present were as follows.—EDITOR CYNOSURE]

622 LOUISIANA AVE., WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 25, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER:—I regret very much that I will not be able to speak at the anti-secrecy convention at Philadelphia on the 26th instant. Engrossing duties at home prevent my absence, even for a short time, just now. My convictions as to the growing evil of secret societies deepen with observation and experience, and I desire to exert all the influence I have against them. For this reason I regret that I can not be present at the convention. Wishing you abundant success in the effort to enlighten the people, I remain as ever, your brother in Christ, E. D. BAILEY.

UNION CITY, Pa., Feb. 22, 1895.

DEAR BRO :—.....I would that the light of truth concerning the relations and fellowship of men might radiate from your convention to every dark corner of the earth, and especially to the corners doubly dark and made foul by the fetid breath of those who swear to keep one another's secrets, "RIGHT OR WRONG." How important that the light be turned on, and kept burning in all the churches. The need is too well-known; I need not elaborate. Here is an instance: A man whom I know, who idolizes Freemasonry, knelt at the altar for prayer in the inquiry-room of a church where an evangelist was conducting meetings, ostensibly seeking the forgiveness of sins and a new heart. The next morning he said to a brother Mason: "I did feel that I had got pretty low last night, kneeling there with Rice on one side and Jones on the other. Why, sir, when I was at the great Masonic meeting at Pittsburgh, I stood up in my regalia, with the greatest men of earth, and to kneel with such sinners as I was with was too much." But he took that for the "shock of enlightenment," I guess, and went on and united with the church, and still shows his aversion to kneeling with saints or sinners.

My brother-in-law was once a Master Mason in northern Illinois. His wife, being opposed to it, informed herself by reading expositions, and watched every turn. A murder was committed in that community. A Mason was suspected as the perpetrator. About midnight my brother-in law was called up. The wife was on the alert and listened. She found that the visitor was a brother Mason, who was demanding from my brother-in-law $30., to assist in paying a railway engineer to run a locomotive to Canada, to convey the suspected brother Mason. The money was paid; the suspected man escaped, and brother quit the lodge.

Could all the money paid into the lodges by church members be appropriated to the cause of missions, home and foreign, what a change would be wrought; how it would hasten the coming of Christ, whose name Blue Lodge Masonry expunges. Blessings upon you. Fraternally,

CHAS. R HUNT.

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

INDIAN RIGHTS ASSOCIATION, 1305 ARCH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—At a special meeting of the Executive Committee of the Indian Rights Association, held February 27, 1895, the following resolution was adopted:

"We desire to express our strong approval of the humane and efficient efforts exerted by Capt. Constant Williams, U. S. army, acting agent of the Navajo Indians, for the relief of destitution and suffering among this deserving but unfortunate people, who, through no fault of their own, are reduced to such extreme need as to become proper subjects for aid, both from the government and the charitable public.

"We highly commend Capt. Williams' action in providing, at his own risk, 10,000 lbs. of flour for the relief of the Navajos—an obligation subsequently assumed by the government—and we assure him of our desire to co-operate with him to the extent of our power so long as the present emergency continues."

LITERATURE.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The Social Economist for March opens with a sound article on "Society and Strikes," as we suppose by the editor. The following propositions which it presents, among others, will indicate the trend of the author. "1. It must be conceded that the interests, and therefore the rights, of the public are greater than those of either laborers or capitalists, and, consequently, their conduct must be subordinate to the interests and decisions of society. 2. That relatively to each other and to society, laborers have the same rights as capitalists, and no more." The remedy for labor disturbances is unique, but seemingly practicable, since it is founded on a mutual and equal union of interests by capitalists and workingmen. Other papers in this issue of the Social Economist discuss the free coinage of bonds; the single-tax superstition; New York banks and the bank reserves; the Martin mulch-law of Iowa; American and Southern homicides. The editorial departments of this magazine always commend themselves to the thoughtful reader. New York: 34 Union Square. 15 cents.

The Review of Reviews for March is fairly filled with its usual specialties and additional novelties. All the regular departments, copiously illustrated, are up to the times, presenting portraits of prominent individuals who have been brought to notice in recent events. The following special features are also presented: This season's doings of thirty-three State legislatures; Electric street-railways in Budapest—an object-lesson for American cities; Francesco Crispi, a character-sketch of Italy's great prime minister; A character-sketch of Lord Randolph Churchill; James Clark Ridpath, the historian—a typical western man; An invalid aid-society—what it does for consumptives; The anti-toxine diphtheria cure—a skeptical view; and American stock in foreign markets—a financial sketch. This magazine fills a place in American literature occupied by no other monthly. Published at 13 Astor Place, New York City. Price, 25 cents.

Our Day: The Altruistic Review for March discusses several important events of recent occurrence in brief. Portraits of the late Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon and Rev. Cyrus Hamlin add interest to the letter press, which includes Cyrus Hamlin, a character-sketch, by Clifton M. Nichols, Joseph Cook's Boston Hymn—Panoply, and his Monday Lecture—Ottoman Lessons in Massacre; "A Career Consecrated and Crowned," Joseph Cook's sermon at the funeral of the lamented Dr. Gordon, with other addresses on the same occasion by other speakers. Rev. W. F. Crafts writes about books to be recommended for a brief reading course in practical Christian sociology. Vital Points of Expert Opinion, Winnowings from Leading Periodicals and other editorial departments, with excerpts from leading magazine articles, make up an excellent number of this periodical. Published at Springfield, Ohio. 20 cents.

The March issue of the Journal of Hygiene begins with a comprehensive and plain article on the Grip and its management, by Dr. C. H. Shepard; Dr. Dio Lewis instructs the reader how to clothe the feet; Dr. Rachel B. Gleason has some suggestions on the hygiene of advancing years; Dr, H. M. Wyman writes about the hygienic treatment of dipsomania; a curious case is that in which consumption was transmitted by a horn. The editor continues his excellent Health Notes, which never lack for interest and practical suggestions. Jennie Chandler describes the health habits of Susan B. Anthony, discusses the question, What is beauty? and suggests economy in nerve force. This number fully sustains the reputation of its many excellent predecessors. Published by M. L. Holbrook, 46 East 21st street, New York City. 10 cents.

As usual, the leading contributions of the Cosmopolitan Magazine for March are copiously illustrated. Among the papers that will interest a large number of readers are the following: Mont Saint-Michael, by J. Howe Adams; The Beautiful (Art) Models of Paris, by Fr. T. Sisson; A President of France, by Ernest Daudet; "We of the Stylus," by Thomas G. Taafe; Pearl-Diving and its Perils, by Herbert P. Witmarsh; A Three-stranded Yarn (continued), by W. Clark Russell; Beauty from an Indian's Point of View, by R. W. Shufeldt: The Observatory of the Vatican, by J. A. Zahn; The Story of a Thousand (continued), by Albion W. Tourgee; A Portrait in Bruges, by Georges Rodenbach. The two editorial departments of "In the World of Art and Letters," and "The Progress of Science," are worthy of special attention.

How to Stop the Creaking of Shoes.

Creaking shoes are an intolerable nuisance, yet with some shoes it is almost impossible to prevent it. For such pour a small quantity of linseed or sweet oil upon a flat surface, like a platter, and allow the soles of the shoes to stand in the oil overnight. In that way they will not only lose the squeak, but will become saturated with the oil, making them proof against dampness. Another cure may be effected by taking them to a cobbler and having one or two pegs driven into the center of the soles.

How to Move a House.

An American engineer tells how to move great brick edifices any distance without injury or danger, having once moved a hotel in Chicago after raising it 15 feet on new bricks. This moving did not even arrest business in the office of the hotel, as it only moved a foot an hour:

"In preparing a house for removal the earth is first all dug away from the foundation, and colossal balks of oak about a couple of feet thick are slipped underneath after some of the bricks have been removed, and then rollers are put underneath the timber. If the house is at all rocky, it is bound up with hoop iron, and sometimes I have to take out the brick interior walls and rig up lighter ones. Lath and plaster are all right. The bricks naturally strain a bit, and in consequence of this the doors and windows are left open, and all the heavy furniture is removed.

"The whole concern is hitched up to half a dozen sound wire cables and drawn along by a capstan over wooden planks well greased with soft soap to reduce the friction, and, as a rule, it moves about a foot an hour. The rollers, beams—everything is left under the domicile when it reaches its destination and is bricked in out of sight. I once shifted a house of mine more than 20 miles without taking it to pieces. It was a summer house, and I put it on a cart. But, seriously, 50 or 100 feet is the average."

How Pepper Is a Stimulant.

Remove the seeds of green peppers and use them in soups, gravies, croquettes, omelets, sauces and stews. Powdered red pepper, sold under the name of capsicum, is also a promoter of good digestion. It is used to season soup, sauces and meat. This condiment has the stimulating influence of alcohol, with none of its after effects. The Romans, Hungarians and Austrians esteem paprika, a mild red pepper, for similar benefits. A dish for beauty that is also delicate and appetizing food is any boneless fish, such as cod, halibut, striped bass, lobster or bonita, boiled and served with a brown gravy, mottled with quarters of sweet peppers.

How to Choose a Lobster.

A lobster should be chosen by its weight, alertness and fresh smell. The tail should be stiff and springy and the sides firm. Those weighing three or four pounds are the best if there is no water in them. When freshly caught, there is some muscular action in their claws, which is excited by pressing the eyes. If stale, the lobster has a heavy, muggy smell. Lobsters should not be shipped any distance alive, but should be boiled before being shipped. A lobster that has died before going into the boiling pot is unfit for food. If the claws are drawn up rigidly, it is a good indication, but if they are limp and sprawling the lobster was dead before it was put in the boiling pot.

The Christian Cynosure.

WM. I. PHILLIPS, PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 14, 1895.

THE Board of Directors of the National Christian Association desire to express their regret for the publication of articles on the making of punch and some other subjects which recently appeared in the columns of our organ. They slipped in by inadvertance, and we shall seek to see that such errors shall not hereafter occur.

"GOOD CITIZENSHIP."

The Good Citizen is an able monthly published by the Columbian College of Citizenship, of Highland Park and Chicago. A glance at the titles of its principal papers in a recent number will give the reader an inkling of its position in the ranks of modern literature: The People's Institute, by Rev. Wm. G. Clarke; The Aim and Object of the People's Institute, by Bishop Fallows; Individualism, by Dr. Chas. J. Lewis; Patriotism and Humanitarianism in the Public Schools, by Prof. Bartholf; Education for Citizenship, by Dr. Ella A. Jennings; What Constitutes Good Citizenship, by Judge Mark Bangs, and special reports, by several writers, on Amusements, Criminalogy and Condition of Labor. These papers are calm, cool and temperate, tending rather to old-time conservatism than radicalism. As a specimen of their quality we copy the following from Judge Bangs' paper:

"Broadly stated, a citizen is an inhabitant, politically a voter, and. theoretically with us, a sovereign. Good citizenship is that which characterizes a good voter." "Good citizenship, in its highest sense, characterizes no one who is not both honest and intelligent. A mere politician is a bad citizen." "A good citizen is one who has intelligence enough to understand what will promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty, and is honest enough to act upon that intelligence." The whole of the Judge's description of good and bad citizenship sparkles with these apothegms.

As he proceeds, he discusses in detail the causes of the lamentable condition with which our country is now confronted—both its advantages and disadvantages—for the promotion of good citizenship. We have not room in this article to enumerate them. Almost any reader of the Cynosure is familiar with some of them.. We give space, however, to the following passage:

"The bond of sympathy so fully kept alive in times past by a constant and a friendly contact of employer and employed no longer exists. Fraternal feeling and neighborly fellowships and respect built up a sturdy manliness and a high and patriotic citizenship which is now fast disappearing. Crime, venality and sordid self-seeking seem to characterize the high and the low, the rich and the poor, alike; and the quality of citizenship is being degraded and despised among all classes of our population. The 'golden rule' and the Sermon on the Mount are considered mere pigments of the disordered mind of the great Galilean Friend of the world, and the rule that life is saved by losing it is never applied." At no time within the past quarter-century has the question of good citizenship and its constituents been so freely and widely debated as at present. In Chicago it is becoming one of the most prominent themes of public discussion. The Civic Federation is promulgating healthful doctrines for the adoption of all respectable cltizens, for the better government of the city. On the eve of an important municipal election, it cannot be too carefully considered. It is time that the lines of honesty, capability and vigilance should be more strongly marked and followed in establishing our future welfare as a people.

WHITE CAP CRUELTY.

Another horrible story of cruelty by a party of White Caps comes from Muncie, Ind., which is described as one of the worst that ever disgraced that State.

Four masked men, subsequently discovered to be Albert Sherry, Elmer Ball, Rollie Wright, and Walter Berry—the latter a township justice of the peace—proceeded to the house of a Mrs. Hamilton at Granville, broke open the door, rushed in upon her and fearfully assaulted her with buggy whips. As she attempted to escape she was knocked down and kicked in the side. The lashes not only cut the skin upon her arms and breast, but lacerated the flesh, and when found she lay upon the floor in a pool of blood unconscious.

The men were in search of Charles Hamilton, a brother of the woman's divorced husband. He was found across the street sick at the home of Mrs. Hamilton's mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Graham, aged 81 years. The men pounced upon Hamilton and beat him severely. They also lashed Mrs. Graham and injured her so badly that her life was despaired of. Lewis Beach's home was next visited and he was given a flogging with the blood-stained whips.

Subsequently several residents of the town who had been condemning the act found regulation White-Cap notices upon their gate posts telling them to cease talking so much.

All the parties named were arrested and taken to Muncie, where they entered a plea of not guilty, but the evidence against them was sufficient to hold them for trial.

The White Cap organization, it is believed, is an outgrowth of the brutal secret organization known as the Ku-Klux Klan, which was so boldly defiant of law that the government was obliged to investigate and denounce it.

Indiana has long been a hotbed of unlawful secret societies—the "Knights of the Golden Circle," White Caps, and other organizations of like detestable character. Nothing less than a death-penalty for each offence by them, it would seem, will ever serve to end their outrages.

A NEW TEMPERANCE SCHEME.

"Man has sought out many inventions;" but it required an energetic woman in Nebraska to organize one of the most unique reform movements in behalf of temperance that the age has produced, in the shape of an incorporated stock company. It is known as "Uncle Sam's Anti-Drunkard Factory Concern," and has a capital of $500,000. The general nature of its business is to print and publish a certain temperance book, written by the originator of the concern; to dramatize it and to encourage the general use of the drama; to organize three theatrical troupes to present it in certain large cities and elsewhere throughout the country; to form and manage a lecture bereau in the interest of the objects set forth in the book; to edit print and circulate a speaker, journal, pamphlets, leaflets and other matter in harmony with such objects; to establish and operate a printing-office and publishing-house, and to begin and prosecute test cases in order to obtain decisions in State and Federal courts, as planned in the book.

It is a great scheme.

TRUE AND FALSE MIRRORS.

The Bible has been compared to a mirror in which human character in its reality is presented to every careful reader—not showing merely a few phases of the disposition of human hearts, but the entire inner and outer being is portrayed, with all its distortions, deformities and defects, and all that is evil as well as all that savors of righteousness in the natural man.

Whoever devoutly studies himself in the mirror of the Scriptures will see himself as he is. His right hand and his right eye (Matt. 5: 29, 30) will appear to him as they are, either an offence or a blessing, as he has made them through his normal opposition to God, or through the operations of divine grace and the Holy Spirit. He will see himself as his Creator sees him, with the option of cutting off his hand or plucking out his eye because they are an offence, or of seeking grace to purify them, until the fear of hell no longer makes him tremble. The Bible is the only book or mirror that properly reflects him as he is.

The natural man looks into a mirror and sees what he believes to be a true reflection of his person. But he does not. His right hand and his right eye, through the reverse power of the mirror, have been transformed into his left hand and left eye. He may think that he sees himself as he appears to others. Not so. The defects of his right hand, with all its peculiarities of formation, wounds, scars, etc., have been transferred to his left. The cast in his left eye has passed into his right orb of vision. He does not see himself as he is.

Let an unregenerate soul, walking after the flesh and not after the Spirit (Rom. 8: 1), seek to see itself in the mirror held up before it by man-made religions in the books of their dogmas, and it will find itself in the same predicament as the natural man beholding himself in an ordinary mirror. The spiritual and moral defects of his nature that a man sees in the theological mirror may be visible, as in the Bible, but not so clearly defined; but he will be told that the deformities, or defects, which he beholds are not in his right hand, but his left, and that he must doctor the latter if he would be healed; that the cast is not in his left eye, but in the other, and he must apply the remedy to the right. His natural sense tells him that his decision does not seem correct. He has always supposed that he knew where his troubles were seated. But no; the theological mirror must be right, and he looks into it again, only to be assured that he has all along been deceiving himself. So by the advice of those who made such a lying mirror, he wastes time and money in doctoring the perfect hand and eye, while the diseased ones are neglected.

Had the unregenerate man gone to the Bible and examined himself with the same faith that he had in Ingersoll, Briggs, Drummond, et al, he would have seen clearly where he was diseased, and in the same book he would have found the only efficient remedy by which he could be cured.

Satan, the god of this world, has several of these misleading mirrors. No doubt the distorting ones we have mentioned were manufactured by his orders. In some cases, where men are naturally too shrewd to be deceived by the theologians, he has another trick with which he accomplishes a similar result. In John 12: 40, we are told that "he hath blinded their eyes and hardened their heart; that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their heart, and be converted, and I should heal them." "If our Gospel be hid it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." 2 Cor., 4: 4.

There is one more mirror referred to in the Bible, which will give the Christian more joy than all the others ever made. It is found in Malachi's prophecy, where Christ sits as a refiner of silver to purify his people; and as common silver is never considered perfect in purity until the refiner can see his own image reflected in it, the reader will comprehend what a glorious mirror, reflecting the image of his Saviour, he himself may become.

IGNORANCE OF SIN.

Another case of "don't know" has turned up in the California Voice, an excellent temperance advocate.

Speaking of the Pope's recent encyclical against secret societies, it pooh-poohs at it thus: "The Pope has issued his aunual bull against secret societies, which is probably having little more effect than when issued against the comet. The comet continued to blaze on through the heavens, and we presume secret societies will continue to flourish as though no papal encyclical had gone forth." Yet there are several thousands of adherents to the Church of Rome whom it will probably take out of the various lodges under ban, and thousands more whom it will keep from entering them.

The Voice sees in the interdicted societies "nothing that in any way conflicts with Catholicism or Protestantism. Nor is there any thing, as far as we know, in Masonry to conflict with a man's duty to his God, his friends, his country, his church or himself." It is very evident that the Voice doesn't know much about Masonry, or is so willfully blind that it won't know, or, knowing too well, is not going to commit itself.

It caps the climax of absurdity, however, when it says there is "nothing wrong in secret societies per se"—that is, in themselves. Our brother should read the Cynosure and "post" himself on this subject. He admits, however, that "to belong to half a dozen secret societies is a sinful waste of time. And as far as we know, a man is as well off not to belong to secret orders at all."

This admission suggests another thought.

There is nothing wrong of itself in a thimble-full of wine. (The Voice is an advocate for prohibition.) But if the thimble-full is emptied and replenished sixty times within a minute, the man who imbibes the wine is in danger of becoming "mellow." And a quart of wine is not so hurtful in a man's stomach as the weight of a lodge oath upon his soul. He may get over his drunkenness in one night, but the secret lodge oath will hold him down many nights, and only God's love and mercy can free him from its wicked obligations. It will bring him into perfect slavery to the will of other men; it will deprive him of the right of private judgment and it will rob him of money that he might put to more legitimate and better uses in his home and in his church.

The Voice's closing sentence is less misleading than its previous utterances: "But it certainly comes with bad grace for a church to inveigh continually against secret societies, whose history is largely made up of secret orders and associations." Very true.

—A note from Rev. W. B. Stoddard states that he was working last week in the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, about 100 miles south of Harper's Ferry. We look for a good report for the next issue of the Cynosure.

—Friends of the venerable J. G. Fee will regret to learn that Mrs. Fee is far advanced in consumption and that his own health is feeble. Will their many friends kindly remember these faithful workers in their prayers?

—The Midland thinks that "the godly do not delight in the fellowship of the lodge-room any more than the wicked deligiht in the prayer meeting." The Midland is right. To us there seems to be no greater incongruity than the mixing up of true Christian worship with the heathenism of the secret, oath-bound lodge. Yet it is done daily.

—A mammoth mass meeting in the interest of good citizenship is to be held at the State House in Springfield, Ill., March 23, under the auspices of several young people's societies, including the Christian Endeavor and the Epworth League organizations. The subject is one that is just now attracting considerable attention in this and other States, and cannot be too earnestly or wisely discussed.

—A remarkable astronomical event is mentioned in the exceellent letter of our New York correspondent, which should attract the attention of Christians as well as others who are interested only in the discoveries of science. The phenomena suggest the inquiry whether this is not "the sign of the Son of man in heaven," referred to in Matthew 24: 30, as one of the forerunners of Christ's second coming.

—A farmers' institute in one of the counties of Pennsylvania is said to have condemned the custom of hoisting the United States flag on public school buildings, because, forsooth, it is a fad promoted by politicians and office-seekers. Well, in this country the government is largely made up of politicians and office-seekers, and if they do nothing worse than to display the national colors over public schools, let us give them credit for this manifestation of a healthful patriotism. Certainly, no other flag has a right to take the place of "old glory."

—A lady writes to the Toledo (Ohio) Blade that during a recent visit to Scotland she learned the story of her grandmother's becoming a Mason in her youth under circumstances similar to those which invested Mrs. Aldworth with the secrets of the fraternity. When seventeen years old, and in love with a Mason, she by hiding herself was enabled to witness the mystic rites. Just before they were finished she was discovered and sworn to keep secret whatever she had seen and heard. This was about 1798, and the lady's name was Margaret Smith, the daughter of a villager and the reigning beauty of the place. It is not known that she ever attended a lodge meeting, but it is stated that she did not marry her Masonic lover, but some other gallant who was not a Mason.

—By their fruits we may know them. "We," says a contemporary, "do not refuse the bounties of nature because there are secrets of nature that have never been revealed to us." On the other hand we ought to refuse the boasted "benefits" of the oath-bound lodges for the reason that their secrets have been revealed to us as well as the misleading and baneful effects of their dogmas and practices. That is why we oppose them. Nature has no such hurtful secrets to be exposed. She can be trusted, but the lodge cannot.

—Rev. W. B. Stoddard writes from Washington that friends of the anti-secrecy reform who have recent copies of the Cynosure, and would like to have them "going about doing good," may be sure that they will be wisely circulated if sent to Beacon Light Mission, 355 Pennsylvania ave., Washington, D. C. Bro. and Sister Powers, who are in charge of this mission, report increasing interest in the work. The book-sales are more than heretofore. "Let your light shine." "When you get a good thing, pass it along."

—The Christian Nation warns its readers against "the modern Jezebel," who seeks to "seduce Christians to walk hand in hand with the world; to find their highest enjoyments in worldly amusements—in the theatre, the ball-room, and at the card-table, and to identify themselves with associations, social and civil, which reject Christ and trample underfoot his law. She says: 'Enter the secret lodge and you will increase your business and be more successful in your business.'" There may be nothing new in this, but the warning is worth repeating every day and everywhere, until there shall be nothing more left of the secret systems of men than there was of the ancient Jezebel after the dogs had eaten her.

—It is a mistake to suppose that the Pope's blast against Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, Pythianism, Good Templarism and the Sons of Temperance was prompted by the fact of their being simply secret societies. His encyclical on the subject advises Catholics to keep out of "any society which is ruled by and servilely obeys persons who are not steadfast for the right and friendly to religion." This is also a misleading expression. The true ground of papal opposition to these societies is because they are not under the rule of the Church of Rome, like the Jesuits, the Clan-na-Gael and the United Hibernians. Their secrecy and the evils they perpetrate upon the public welfare have no weight, except as they affect his own dominion.

—Rev. Dr. Wishard, writing to the Herald and Presbyter, deplores the admission of the Territory of Utah to the Union of States, since, as he says, polygamy has not been abandoned, but is simply suppressed, and is secretly practiced as with authority of divine revelation and has not been repudiated. The doctor fears that when Utah is no longer under the United States' law for the government of Territories, but is fully clothed with Statehood, that then polygamy will again assert itself and make trouble. The doctor does not write at random, but from his position as an earnest Christian missionary working among the Mormons. The story of Mormonism in Utah, from its organization to the present moment, is not calcutated to inspire Christians with confidence in its motives and practices.

—This very remarkable statement appeared in the Home Light of Boston: Charles W. Wood, commander of the Worcester Knights of Malta, a branch of Masonry, in response to certain accusations that this order is opposed to Catholicism, says: "The order is not opposed to anything, and so far as its being opposed to Catholicism goes, Pope Leo is a Knight of Malta." If so, he is entitled, under a most fearful oath, to the protection of Commander Wood; and yet Mr. Wood is a prominent A. P. A. and sworn by that order to oppose the Pope and the church under his control, this being the professed object for which the A. P. A. was organized. If the A. P. A., Freemasonry and the Church of Rome were not all secret political societies, we should have less confidence in the revelation of Mr. Wood.

—The editor of the Christian Conservator has been reading a glowing newspaper account of the Mystic Shrine, prompted by a recent gathering of that "high old" order in Cincinnati, and this is the way in which it struck him: "The order is a culmination of Masonry; its object, social enjoyment, connected with an 'elaborate oriental ritual of ceremonies,' performed in honor of Allah; its descent is from an ancient band of Arabic Lynchers, whose 'secret and real purpose can only be made known to those who have encircled the mystic shrine.' For a full expose of this wonderfully-eulogized order, send to the Christian Cynosure, Chicago, Ill. Can any one who has really been made a partaker of the Spirit of Christ be so blinded as not to see the donkey's ears projecting from this lion-skin description, or even the cloven foot of his Satanic majesty himself under this gorgeous covering?"

—The union printers of this city, finding that the increased use of mechanical type-setters was throwing numbers of them out of employment, have united in the publication of a co-operative daily newspaper, to provide work for the unemployed. The paper is to be set entirely by hand. The evil is not in the use of labor-saving machinery, but in employing only one set of hands to operate the machines. By dividing the day into three parts of eight hours each, and putting on a new force every eight hours, more work would be accomplished and three times as many persons supplied with the means of earning a subsistence. This seems to be a reasonable solution of the problem.

—Julius E. Reinhardt, the head of the freshman class in the Illinois University, was kidnapped by a party of other students in the institution, carried into the country, and there left to suffer in a cold house. The case has been thoroughly investigated by the administration committee of the university, and nine of "the most popular young men" engaged in the abduction have been suspended. At first the time of their sentence was fixed for the remainder of their school term, but it has since been reduced to one month. President Draper says: "Their conduct was cruel and unmanly. There was nothing funny about it. It was a poor excuse for a joke. . . . . The university authorities will do all that is necessary to maintain order and discipline. These young men were among our best students, but they must learn to draw the line between a joke and a crime." The story of the affair would be incomplete without the additional circumstance that these nine were members of a Greek-letter fraternity. We are not informed whether Reinhardt had refused to join it, or was undergoing the tortures of initiation into it. The brutality displayed was none too severely punished.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE COLLEGE AGENT.

BEREA, Ky., March 9, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—From Knoxville, Tenn., I went northward to Jellico, where I found the American Missionary church in good working order, with the Rev. Mr. Partridge for pastor. But the academy there is failing fast, so that, I think, there was but three months' school the past year.

My next stop was at Berea, Ky. President Frost was absent in the East, on business for the college. Prof. Dodge, who was acting president, received me very kindly, and helped me in every way in my mission. On the Sabbath following I preached a reform sermon to a large audience; and on Monday gave a brief address to the advanced students, and distributed a good many Lodge Lamps among them.

Notwithstanding the advanced position of Berea on such subjects, there is a small Masonic lodge with a few members in the town. As it was proposed to hold revival services, one of the professors introduced a M. E. minister, who had a charge a few miles away, to carry on the meeting. A young student told me that he was a Free Methodist. But when I called on him and spoke of the reform work, he began to eulogize Masonry. He said that the lodge prayers were offered in the name of Christ; that they taught and practiced great benevolence. And when I denied his statements, he declared that I had no business to speak so of things that I did not understand. I told him that I knew more about Freemasonry than many Masons, as I had lived through the excitement that followed the murder of Morgan, when Masonry was fully revealed. I did not learn whether he was a Mason or a jack-Mason; but his meeting soon faded out and he departed.

There is a full attendance of students at Berea, and the institution is doing a noble educational work. But Bro. Fee, the founder and faithful supporter of the college and church, is under the cloud of affliction. His dear companion is nearly dead with consumption; and his strength seems frequently to fail through age and many infirmities.

S. F. PORTER.

MASTER THE TONGUE

WHO LEARNS THAT HAS CONTROL OVER THE WHOLE BODY.

Rev. Madison C. Peters Says the Listener to Slander Is as Guilty as the Slanderer. Do Not Try to Discover the Faults of Others—See Only the Beautiful and Good.

A young man about to enter upon the experiences of the spiritual life went to an aged servant of God, and asking him for a rule the old man opened his Psalter and read the first verse of the thirty-ninth psalm, "I said, I will take heed to my ways that I sin not with my tongue." "Stop!" cried the young man as the other was about to proceed, "when I have learned that I will come and receive further rules." At the end of six months he was asked whether he was ready for other lessons. "Not yet," he replied. "I have not yet learned to practice the first," and so again at the end of the year. At the end of five years he said he had "no need of other rules," for, having learned that first rule to master the tongue he had gained discipline and control over the whole body.

How are we to war against these tongue sins? Refuse to listen to or believe a gossip. Scandal would soon starve and die if, instead of taking it in and giving it lodging, you would kick it out. There are so many open mouths because there are so many open ears. Has it ever occurred to you that your listening to slander makes you equally guilty with the slanderer, and an old writer says, "You ought both be hung—one by the tongue and the other by the ear." He or she who tells you the faults of others intends to tell others your faults. When you hear something bad about your neighbor, do not run all around the community and ask about it, whether it is true, and thus scatter and spread it.

Never employ yourself to discover the faults of others. If you look through a telescope in the usual way, it magnifies the object seen, but if you reverse it it makes the large and near seem very small. Plenty of people look at their own faults through one end and at their neighbors' through the other.

An artist was about to paint a portrait of Alexander the Great. He met with this difficulty: Alexander in one of his wars received a wound on his forehead which had left an ugly mark. If he left off that scar, it would fail to be a perfect portrait. If he left it there, it would not please his friends. He hit upon a happy expedient. He represented the warrior as leaning on his elbow, with his forefingers covering the scar, and thus made a perfect portrait. So let us paint our fellowmen with the forefingers of charity upon their scars, and thus reveal only the true, the beautiful and the good.

Enthusiasm.

You will never enjoy your religion until you begin to glow. While you are indolent you will find lions in the way and all the doors of usefulness locked. At the storming of Vicksburg an attempt was made to capture a Confederate battery, but the terrific fire caused the Union troops to fall back. Peter Appell of the Eleventh Indiana regiment, impelled by his enthusiasm, rushed on, oblivious of the retreat, until he reached one of the guns, collared a gunner and rushed back with him into the Union lines, shouting: "Boys, why didn't you come on? Every fellow might have got one." A thousand such men would capture America for Christ. The Christian is not merely to be a saved man, but he must be alive so as to be a power to save the world. Paul was such an example it made men think him mad. The psalmist declared, "The great zeal of thine house has eaten me up."

"Give me only fire enough," said Bernard Palissy, "and these pigments will become indelibly fixed upon this china. "His derisive neighbors screamed, "He is mad!" "More fire!" shouted the determined man, "More fire!" and today the name of Palissy is a synonym of determination and success. I say the same. More fire, more fire! More fire in our preachers, more fire in our prayers and songs, more fire in the new, more fire in everything we do, and we will forever impress the blessed name of the Lord Christ on the dull, cold hearts of men.

"The Elect."

How may you know that you are among "the elect?" If you choose to come to God, he has solemnly declared, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." The question is, Come or not come? Choose or not choose? When you decide the question and come, then you settle the matter of your election. By obeying the divine command you make "your calling and election sure." The eternal decrees of God are that the farmer shall have a crop if he do his part—plow and sow The farmer knows this, and he knows that he will not have a harvest unless he sows the seed. The decrees of God are made conditional on his doing. So in the matter of salvation. God has "elected" that your soul will or will not be saved, and he tells you that you will be saved if you come to Christ. "Whosoever will may come." The whosoever will are the elect; the whosoever won't are the nonelect.

Fresh Air.

Man needs plenty of fresh air. Close houses, close stores and close factories mean impure air. Without airy houses, stores, shops and factories nature cannot do the work she is striving to do. I do not wonder that so many people's health fails, their strength leaves them, and their very minds become enfeebled. Sleep in the best and airiest room. Breathing vitiated atmosphere, especially in sleep, destroys muscular strength.

Honesty and Policy.

"Honesty is the best policy," but he who is honest for policy's sake is not honest. Some men are honest when honesty pays, but when policy will serve them a better turn they give honesty the slip and work policy.

WORLDLY WEALTH AND POWER CANNOT SATISFY THE SOUL.

Remarks by Rev. Madison C. Peters on the Observance of the Sabbath — Without Churches Society Would Fall—Sunday Habits Compared.

Alexander the Great overran the whole earth and subdued every nation, and at the conclusion of universal victory he sat down and wept like a child because he had not another world to conquer. We read also of a Roman emperor, who had run the round of all the pleasures in the world, offering a rich reward to any one who should discover a new pleasure. Cyrus, the conqueror, thought that for a little time he was making a fine thing out of this world. Yet before he came to his grave he wrote out this pitiful epitaph for his monument: "I am Cyrus. I occupied the Persian empire. I was king over Asia. Begrudge me not this monument." But the world in after years plowed up his sepulcher. Pope Adrian VI had this inscription on his monument: "Here lies Adrian VI, who was never so unhappy in any period of his life as at that in which he was a prince." "I, sinful wretch, by the grace of God king of England and of France and lord of Ireland, bequeath to Almighty God my sinful soul and the life I have misspent, whereof I put myself wholly at his grace and mercy"—so wrote Henry IV in his last will, when the frightful reality of leprosy had disenchanted the rapturous dream of usurpation. Queen Elizabeth, dying, cried, "Millions of money for an inch of time." Was the gay queen happy? The history of kings and queens proves that, though their crowns may be "set with diamonds or Indian stones," the kings and queens themselves but seldom enjoy the crown of content which is worn upon the heart.

The world clapped its hands and stamped its feet in honor of Charles Lamb. Was he happy? He says, "I walk up and down, thinking I am happy, but feeling I am not." Samuel Johnson, happy? "No. I am afraid I shall some day get crazy." Buchanan, the world renowned writer, exiled from his own country, appealing to Henry VIII for protection, happy? "No. Over mountains covered with snow and through valleys flooded with rain I come a fugitive." "Indeed, my lord," wrote famous Edmund Burke, "I doubt whether in these hard times I would give a peck of refuse wheat for all that is called fame in the world." "Sweet," says the poet, "sweet were the days when I was all unknown:

"But when my name was lifted up the storm Broke on the mountain, and I cared not for it."

Man's soul thirsts and longs for something nobler, brighter, greater and better than the world itself. As Macduff says, "As well try to fill the yawning chasm with a few grains of sand as satisfy the gulf of the soul's desires with the pleasures of an empty world." Nothing can satisfy the soul but God.

A Comparison.

Compare the Sabbath observing people with those who do not observe it. Compare them as citizens, as business men. Compare their influence in society and then say whether the Sabbath with its means of grace is not useful. Let the comparison be fair and faithful. Do not select a few cases of rare inconsistency and hypocrisy in the churches and set them over against rare virtue and good citizenship among those who, from education and habit, never attend the house of God. But look at the masses on both sides and then decide which takes the wisest course—he who honors God's Sabbath, or he who lounges away the sacred hours in sleep and idleness or seeks his own pleasure in travel and amusements, attends to his correspondence, etc., or visits his neighbors and friends to get a "good square meal."

Ask yourself, ask history, ask matter of fact, what the Sabbath with its means of grace has done for the land in which you live. Compare your country, where the Sabbath is duly observed in every neighborhood, with those countries which rarely enjoy this blessing, where there are no Sabbath schools, where preaching occurs only on great festival occasions, and where all are taught to look upon the holy day as a holiday. Sunday—sin day. Blot out our churches from the map of our city, let teachers of religion and morals cease their works, and the people, instead of attending church, throng the streets and attend public places of amusement, gamble and drink and train up their children to follow their unholy examples—what would be the state of society?

Guests at the Wedding.

Was Jesus invited to your wedding? Were the nuptial vows sanctified by his presence? Make him, then, your abiding guest. Then you will grow in mutual affinity and spiritual assimilation, realizing a happiness in the sacred union which you never dreamed of in your youthful love. Your last days of marriage will be happier than the first because you lived for each other, and he who was present and sanctified your marriage vows will crown your union with the love that never chills and keeps on growing until it leaps over the grave and you are caught up to share unending fellowship of the marriage supper of the Lamb in heaven.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning March 17. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic.—Winning others—from what, to what and how?—Acts viii, 26-39.

The topical reference narrates the familiar story of Philip and the Ethiopian. In the providence of God Philip is led to this man returning from Jerusalem, as he was reading the Scriptures, which, however, he did not understand. Explaining away the difficulties, Philip led him to a true knowledge of God in Jesus Christ by preaching Christ as He is set forth in the Scriptures and thus we have illustrated before us, from what, to what and how we are to win others.

1. From what are we to win others? In general we may answer from anything that prevents them from having a true apprehension of God in Jesus Christ. In the case before us it was ignorance that caused the misapprehension. The Ethiopian read the Scriptures concerning Christ, but he did not understand them. He did not know to whom they referred. Philip had to lead him from ignorance. Ignorance keeps many from a true apprehension of God in Jesus Christ. Many, like the Ethiopian, have no one to guide them, and many who have the opportunity to learn will not do so. But there are other things besides ignorance that separate men from Christ. It may be skepticism, or unbelief or false pleasure or worldliness or sin in one form or another. From all these things Christians should seek to win others from whatever keeps them from a saving knowledge of God in Jesus Christ. We should esteem it a pleasure as well as a duty to win all men.

2. To what are we to win others? To a true apprehension of God in Jesus Christ. The work is only half done when we win them from their errors. Error must not only be removed, but truth must be inculcated in its stead. Skepticism and unbelief must not only be overcome, but a real and true faith must be established in their places. We must not only turn men from sin, but to God; not only from darkness, but to the light; not only from unrighteousness, but to true holiness. When we have despoiled the vessel of its false rudder, it must not be left rudderless, to be tossed aimlessly to and fro by the winds and waves. We must replace the false by the true if our work is the perfect work that it should be.

3. How are we to win others? By preaching Christ. This was Philip's method, for we are told that "Philip opened his mouth and began at the same Scripture and preached unto him Jesus." This was the apostolic method. It should be our method. We should preach Christ as He is set forth in the Scripture—the incarnation, death, resurrection, the atonement of Christ. It is the Scriptural Christ alone that can save men. We should preach Christ personally. Philip preached "to him." He had but one for his audience, and preaching is often most effective to audiences of one. It is personal work, individual work that is most effective. The world cannot be saved as a mass, but as individuals. Will we do our part to win the world for Christ?

Floating Endeavorers.

In the 18 months during which the Christian Endeavor union at Oakland, Cal., has been carrying on work for seamen they have secured from sailors 166 signatures to the active members' pledge, 750 of the men have attended meetings on land with Endeavorers, and the audiences at meetings on shipboard have numbered 900. Sailors have been received in the homes of the workers, and two officers have been brought into church membership.—Christian Herald.

Implicit Trust.

The Spirit of God creates in us the simplicity and warmth of heart which children have—nay, rather the perfections of His heavenly hosts, high and low being joined together in His mysterious work, for what are implicit trust, ardent love, abiding purity, but the mind both of little children and of the adoring seraphim?—Cardinal Newman.

Solid Devotions.

Solid devotions resemble the rivers which run under the earth. They steal from the eyes of the world to seek the eyes of God, and it often happens that those of whom we speak least on earth are best known in heaven.—Lutheran.

Christian Endeavor Jottings.

Many new societies are being formed in China. Three were recently organized in Nankin.

By the penny a day and penny a week plans the juniors of the Agnes Street Methodist Episcopal church, Toronto, give $1.05 weekly to the cause of missions.

It Was Miss Keith's Idea.

It might be supposed, with much justification, that the pretty and patriotic flag drill which has become so common a feature in our school, private and public, was the invention of an old soldier or a West Point cadet. Scarcely anybody without knowledge on the subject would credit the idea to a young woman without any martial experience whatever. Such nevertheless is the fact. The flag drill in our schools was conceived and created by Miss Eliza D. Keith, a teacher and literary woman who perhaps is better known under her nom de plume of Di Vernon. The idea came to her some years ago in watching a party of children at play. Several of them had flags, and she noticed that the rest were eager to hold these in their own hands, and that the ensign bearer assumed a military attitude, strutted and marched and went through a comical childish drill the moment the hand inclasped the staff. She bought a lot of cheap flags and at the earliest opportunity used them with the class she was instructing.

The effect was magical. Every child was delighted and took to tactics as to play. Far from having trouble with the scholars, she had it only with the flags and herself in arranging or devising graceful poses and movements. By degrees she made up what may be called a manual of arms. Her experiment was under way when other teachers and scholars took it up in turn. Scores of schools had adopted the drill before the year was out, while today the number is far up in the thousands. Many improvements have been made by military and stage experts, but the present drill is substantially the one she originally invented.

Miss Keith is one of the officers of the National Council of Women, and, appropriately enough, is a head of the department of patriotic instruction of that celebrated association and a leading member of its chief committees.—New York Mail and Express.

Baby's Hour and Bath.

Some day a poet will arise who will celebrate the "baby's hour" in verse as memorable as that in which Longfellow has sung the delights of the "Children's Hour." The baby's hour, of course, is that period of the morning which is devoted to the bathing and dressing of the young monarch of the household.

The baby, being a luxurious mortal, has had its breakfast before the rest of the household and has then gone contentedly to sleep again. When the family breakfast is over, he is just about ready to open his eyes, stretch out his weak little arms and generally proclaim himself ready for his bath. Then it is time for his mother to fly to his side and for his nurse to hasten to the scene of action with all the paraphernalia necessary for baby's bath.

There will be a tub of porcelain or of rubber, deep enough to submerge the baby. There will be a thermometer to register the degree of heat of the water. There will be the purest soap, the softest washrag and the finest towels. There will be powder and a soft powder puff. There will be soft, fine, clean clothes for the baby. A screen to protect him from any chance drafts will be another necessity, and a stool for the mother to sit on while bathing the baby.

The bath should not be too lengthy a process, and the baby should be washed from the top of his almost bald head to the soles of his pink little feet. He should Baby's Eyes.

It was a surprise to me to learn that very few children were born blind, but that it was usually brought about by carelessness and ignorance. Children's eyes are exposed to the bright light all too soon. Everybody has got to see the baby, and it is usually held up in the glare of a sunny window or a light and admired at length. Measles have time and again been the death of eyesight and also neglected inflammations. I was surprised to find how many simple things had resulted in loss of sight.—Exchange.

KNOTS AND KNOTS.

An Interesting Feat Which Any Clever Boy or Girl Can Perform.

The untying of knots in a string by tying other knots in the same string is a pretty feat, with which those who care to learn it may amuse and mystify those who have never seen it done. It is quite easy, and there is no trick about it. A careful study of the accompanying diagrams will make it easy to learn the feat, which can be performed with a stout cord or small rope. A simple knot is made, as in the first diagram, and then the second knot is made, forming what is known as a square knot, as shown in the second diagram. The next move is to carry the end of the cord marked "A" downward through the first loop. The third diagram shows the tangle thus formed, and it is such a thorough tangle that to pull the two ends of the string would make a hard and complicated knot. But the end "A" of the cord is now brought up over the outside of the first loop and is carried down through the second loop, coming out in the same direction with the end "B." Now, by taking hold of the two ends of the cord and pulling them, the cord may be drawn out perfectly straight, the knots disappearing. The performance may be made more mystifying by asking a spectator to hold both ends of the cord, while the operator, concealing the knotted portion in his hands, rubs the knots out, leaving the spectator in possession of a smooth and unbroken string. Possibly the spectator may follow the whole operation so closely as to be able to perform it himself on the first trial, but he will be apt to make a mistake in forming the second loop and reverse the twist shown in the second diagram. In that case he will succeed only in tying a knot that will be difficult to untie after the attempt is made to pull the cord straight.

A Bright Boy.

I knew a boy, a scrap of a lad, who almost needed a high chair to bring him up to the general level of the dining table, who liked to read the encyclopedia. He was always hunting round in the big books of the encyclopedia—books about his own size—for what he wanted to know. He dug in it as another boy would dig in the woods for sassafras root. It appeared that he was interested in natural history and natural phenomena. He asked questions of these books exactly as he would ask a living authority and kept at it till he got answers. He knew how to read.

Soon that boy was an authority on earthquakes. He liked to have the conversation at table turn on earthquakes, for then he seemed to be the tallest person at the table. I suppose there was no earthquake anywhere of any importance but that he could tell where it occurred and what damage it did, how many houses it buried, and how many people it killed, and what shape it left the country it had shaken.

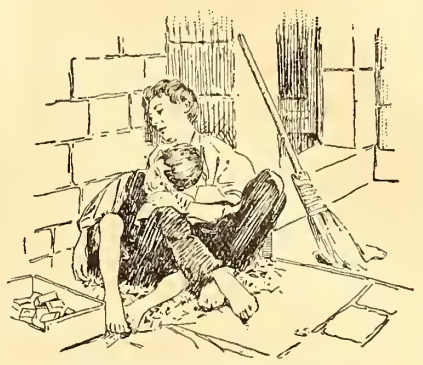
From that he went on to try to discover what caused these disturbances, and this led him into other investigations, and at last into the study of electricity, practically as well as theoretically. He examined machines and invented machines and kept on reading, and presently he was an expert in electricity. He knew how to put in wires and signals and bells and to do a number of practical and useful things, and almost before he was able to enter high school he had a great deal of work to do in the city and three or four men under him. These men under him had not read as much about electricity as he had. —Charles Dudley Warner.

"Octave Thanet."

Concerning Miss Alice French, otherwise "Octave Thanet," an admiring biographer says in The Midland Monthly that her face is at once vigorous and feminine, and her manner is winning. She is the granddaughter of Governor Marcus Morton of Massachusetts. Since early childhood she has lived in Iowa, where her father, the late George H. French, built up a notable manufacturing business. Miss French spends part of the year in Davenport and part of it on an Arkansas farm.

Dressmaking Students.

Dressmaking in all its branches is taught by a graduate of the Pratt institute, New York, to young women who desire to receive thorough preparation for this business, a diploma being awarded those who can fill the rigid requirements of the scientific course. But for others, who merely wish to learn the use of patterns, modes of economizing cloth, etc., for their own convenience, night classes, meeting twice a week, are formed to teach the simple rudiments of dressmaking.



A Novel Decoration.

A novel way of decorating a room, or a table is to buy cut tulips or other straight stemmed flowers, such as camellias, and at the same time several turnips of equal size. These should be cut in the shape of bulbs. Make a hole at the top, insert the flower and cover the sham bulb with moss, dried moss preferably. Cut the bottom of the turnip flat to make it stand firm and then dot about supper table or otherwise. The effect is very pretty.

Blow Through a Brickbat.

"You wouldn't believe it possible to blow out a candle flame through a brickbat," remarked a celebrated physicist whose penchant it is to give scientific research a practical bearing. "It can be done, however, and it illustrates the all pervasive qualities of air. Most rooms are largely ventilated through their walls, and the brick and mortar are merely very rudimentary lungs, which take in and throw out the atmosphere with little hindrance. You may try the experiment yourself. Place a candle on the other side of your brick and use two funnels, with the flaring ends on the opposite sides of the brickbat, with the small end of one in line with your mouth and the small end of the other trained on the candle flame. The least breath will make the light flicker, and a hearty expiration will extinguish it altogether. Try it and see."—Philadelphia Record.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XII, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 24.

Text of the Lesson, Luke x, 1-9 (Missionary Lesson)—Memory Verses, 1, 2—Golden Text, Luke x, 2—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also and sent them two and two before His face into every city and place, whither He Himself would come." Again, as on former occasions, we choose without hesitation the missionary lesson, believing that the great business of every saved soul is to live to make known the love of God to sinners as far as possible and as quickly as possible, throughout the whole world, thus helping to answer our continual prayer, "Thy kingdom come!" For the time of the kingdom when the will of God shall be done on earth as in Heaven cannot come until the King shall return, as may be clearly seen from the portion following last week's lesson (Luke xix, 11, 12). Jesus had previously sent out the 12, suggestive of a sufficient testimony for the 12 tribes of Israel. Now He sends 70, suggestive of a sufficient testimony for all the world for the nations which peopled the earth after the deluge were 70, as in Gen. x, and the church, which is His body, to be completed before the national salvation of Israel, is to be gathered from all nations. The Lord appointed these messengers, and unless He appoints the messengers always they will run in vain.

2. "Therefore said He unto them: The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth laborers into His harvest." Compare John iv, 35, where He said on another occasion that the fields were white to the harvest. In this verse of our lesson the great need is laborers, and we are to pray the Lord to send them forth, which implies a readiness to be sent ourselves, for the 12 (Math. ix, 37, 38) as well as the 70, who were taught to pray thus, were all sent forth themselves. What an indescribable honor to be privileged to be a laborer with God (I Cor. iii, 9), yet what multitudes of saved people, at least of professing Christians, seem to think that salvation means that they are saved from hell and made sure of heaven, and that is all. The thought of laboring with God to save others does not enter their minds.

3. "Go your ways. Behold I send you forth as lambs among wolves." So He said also to the 12 (Math. x, 16). Observe the words "I send you" and compare John xx, 21; xvii, 18, with Jer. i, 7, 8, and let every believer appropriate the message to Jeremiah along with Ex. iv, 12, and say with Isaiah, "Here am I; send me" (Isa. vi, 8). Notice the realities to which He calls their attention, "Lambs among wolves," plainly telling them what to expect, or, as He said even more plainly to the 12, "Fear not them which kill the body" (Math. x, 28). The night before He was crucified He told them that they would be put out of the synagogue and even slain for His name's sake.

4. "Carry neither purse nor scrip nor shoes, and salute no man by the way." They are not to give anxious thought to temporal things, but be sure that if they are faithful to Him He will see to them, as He said and is still saying in Math. vi, 33, that if we make His kingdom and His righteousness our first concern He will see that we have food and raiment. Neither are we to give time and thought to the fashionable formalities of life, but let dead people see to dead things (Luke ix, 60). Let the dead in sins give their time to the things that are not of God, but let those who have life in Christ be wholly for Him and the things of His kingdom.

5. "And into whatsoever house ye enter first say, Peace be to this house." He who sent them was the Prince of Peace (Isa. ix, 6). When He came as a babe in Bethlehem, the angels sang, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace" (Luke ii, 14). When He stood in the midst of them the first night after the resurrection, His greeting was "peace be unto you" (Luke xxiv, 36), and His last gift to them before He died was His peace (John xiv, 27).

6. "And if the Son of peace be there your peace shall rest upon it; if not, it shall turn to you again." Jesus has made peace through the blood of His cross, and all who are far off and without God and hope may be made nigh through Him who is ready and willing to be their peace (Col. i, 20; Eph. ii, 13, 14). It is the high privilege of every believer to go forth in His name or send forth, preaching peace by Jesus Christ and proclaiming in His name the forgiveness of sins to all who will receive Him (Acts x, 36; xiii, 38, 39). It is ours to make the proclamation; it is His to see to the results. The preachers will be unto God a sweet savor of Christ, in them that are saved and in them that perish (II Cor. ii, 15). We can offer Christ to all; that is our part. God will out of those who are called complete the body of Christ.

7. "And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give, for the laborer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house." It is all right to go from house to house preaching the word as Paul did (Acts xx, 20), but it is not the mind of Christ to roam from house to house for the sake of eating and drinking, for "the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost" (Rom. xiv, 17). Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God (Luke iv, 4), and it is possible to esteem the words of His mouth more than our daily food (Job xxiii, 12). John the Baptist was content with locusts and wild honey, and when the food of Jesus Himself is mentioned we read only of bread and fish and honeycomb.

8. "And into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat such things as are set before you." No such thing as asking help from those who will not receive you. What a strange sight it is! I might safely say, what a monstrous thing, what a dishonor to God, to see the children of God going to those who are the enemies of God for help to carry on the work of God!

9. "And heal the sick that are therein and say unto them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." Instead of going as beggars, they were to go as royal givers, giving health and peace and joy to all who were willing to receive them. God gave His Son; the Son gave Himself; both have given the spirit; the Trinity give us all things richly to enjoy and commission us to go in the mighty name of Jesus and be the almoners of their bounties to all whom we can reach, not asking gifts from men, but bestowing the riches of God's grace upon all men. While Jesus was personally on earth the kingdom was nigh, even in the midst of them in the person of the King, but rejecting Him they have delayed the kingdom.

IOWA BANK ROBBED.

TWO MEN EXECUTE A DARING AND BLOODY DEED.

Mercilessly Shoot the Cashier and a Citizen and Drive Away with Their Swag—Hot Pursuit Ends in the Death of One and the Capture of the Other, a Boy of 19.

ADEL, Ia., March 7.—A desperate and partly successful effort was made to rob the Adel State bank. A few minutes before 9 o'clock a. m. two strangers drove into town and tied their team near the public square. They got out, and without attracting any particular attention stepped into the bank. The cashier, S. M. Leach, had just taken from the vault the currency for the day's business. C. D. Bailey, a leading merchant, was writing at a desk in the lobby. They were the only occupants of the bank. One of the strangers stepped up to the casbier's window and said he wanted to deposit some money.

Almost the same instant the second robber, who was behind, leveled a shotgun at Leach and fired, the charge taking effect in his shoulder. He then ordered the cashier to hand over the money. The latter handed over a small sack of silver and then, though badly wounded, seized a drawer containing about $3,000 in gold and currency and staggering to the vault he pitched the money in and shut and locked the door. Weak from loss of blood he then fell to the floor. One of the robbers now sprang over the counter and began shoveling all the money in sight into a sack, and the one with the gun turned to Mr. Bailey, who was still standing at the desk, and fired a shot at him, wounding him in the neck.

Shot at His Prostrate Victim.

He fell to the floor and the robber shot at his prostrate form, but missed him. By this time a crowd had gathered outside and the two robbers, one carrying the money and the other wielding the gun, made a rush for their buggy. Fully fifty shots were fired at them, but none apparently took effect. They coolly got into their buggy, and still keeping the crowd at bay drove rapidly away. Several men sprang upon horses and followed, and a running fight of several miles ensued. About four miles south of town the buggy driven by the robbers struck a tree and broke a wheel.

The robbers, still closely pursued, abandoned their rig, and one hid behind a bank, where he was soon captured, and the other, the one with the gun, ran into a barn near by. The barn was surrounded, but the bandit held the crowd at bay. He was called upon to surrender, but resolutely refused, and said he would never be taken alive. After a parley the crowd partially untied the captured robber and compelled him to set fire to the barn. The advancing flames finally forced the robber to come out, but he still refused to surrender, and the crowd of citizens fired a volley at him. He fell dead, pierced by three bullets.

Mob Spirit Abroad.

It was with the utmost difficulty that the angry crowd was prevented from wreaking vengeance on the robber that was still alive, but Sheriff Payne hustled him into a buggy and drove rapidly back to town. A crowd of several hundred had gathered at the jail when the sheriff reached there with his prisoner. There were loud cries of "Shoot him," "Hang him," but the officer manged to elude the mob and landed his trembling prisoner safely behind the bars.

The captured man, or rather boy, for he is only 19 years old, has made a complete confession. He says his names is Charles W. Crawford and his home near Patterson, in Madison county. The dead robber is O. P. Wilkins, and was released only a few weeks ago from the Minnesota penitentiary at Stillwater, where he served three years for robbery. Crawford says their only weapon was a repeating Winchester shotgun carried by Wilkins and the testimony of witnesses bears out this statement.

Coerced into the Crime.

He claims to have been coerced into the crime. Their team was stolen from the prisoner's uncle, W. W. Crawford, of Madison county. They secured only about $300 from the bank, and the money was all found when their buggy broke down. It is not believed that either Bailey or Leach is fatally hurt. Several citizens were hurt by scattering shot fired by the robbers on the way to their buggy.

Postmaster R. S. Barr stepped out of the postoffice just as the retreating robber passed. The latter ordered him inside, but before he could comply fired at him, one shot striking his forearm and another piercing his hat and grazing his forehead. J. M. Byers, J. M. Simcoke and a boy named Cecil Decker were also slightly injured. The daring robbery has caused intense excitement. The town is full of armed men.

Conrad Baker, a farmer near Vincennes, Ind., committed suicide by shooting. No cause is known.

Germ Theory of Disease.

The Position It Occupies and Attention It Is Receiving From Scientific Men.

The germ theory of the origin of disease is a subject which is at present attracting the attention of scientific men in all parts of the world. The chief importance of the germ theory, however, is not that it shows the origin of disease but that it points out the best means to be employed to effect a cure. The germs of disease, from whatever source they come, are lodged and developed in the blood. The blood, of course, by circulating to every part of the body, is sure to scatter disease throughout the system whenever it is impure, the weakest and most susceptible parts being the first to suffer. It is because of scrofulous taints in the blood, for instance, that the skin becomes covered with eruptions. It is lactic acid in the blood which causes rheumatism, and it is because the blood does not supply proper nourishment to the nerves that people suffer with nervousness. The cure for all these diseases, and of many others, can only be effected by purifying the blood, and absolutely destroying all germs of disease. No intelligent person can doubt that Hood's Sarsaparilla has actually and permanently cured many thousands of cases of scrofula, rheumatism, nervousness, dyspepsia and other troubles, and, as its proprietors claim, it is all because this medicine purifies the blood. As a matter of fact, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only reliable blood purifier that is before the public to-day, and persons afflicted with impure blood or any of the great variety of ailments which it causes, will be most certain to find relief and cure in Hood's Sarsaparilla, because it posesses this peculiar power to purify, enrich and vitalize the blood, and destroy the germs of disease.

MISS FLAGG'S LATEST NEW BOOK!

"A Prisoner of Hope."

COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.

Price, $1.25.

We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident, In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy, postage prepaid.

HAYWARD FOUND GUILTY.

He Is Convicted for the Murder of Miss Catherine Ging.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 9.—"In two hours I will be a free man." Thus said that remarkable man, Harry Hayward. Less than three hours later a jury of his peers gave the lie to his words and placed its seal upon the word "guilty." That was all the jury had to say—guilty or not guilty. The penalty is fixed by law. With the same immovable stolidity with which he has watched the trial of his case the prisoner received the verdict of the jury. There was not the shade of a change in color; not the relaxation of a single muscle; no visible collapse or sign of any emotion.

According to the statutes of the state of Minnesota only one fate can await Harry Hayward—a sentence to be hanged by the neck until he is dead, and that sentence to be pronounced by the lips of the judge before whom he was tried. Neither the jury nor the judge could alter the sentence, no matter how strongly inclined they might be toward leniency. For murder in the first degree the law provides only one penalty. Judge and jury alike are but the agents of the state for the execution of that law. At the request of counsel for the defense the pronouncing of the sentence was deferred until next Monday morning, but the verdict of the jury has made the sentence of Harry Hayward as certain as though the judge had already announced it.

Immediately after the close of the case Miss Maggie Wachtler and George A. Grindell, witnesses for the defense, were arrested on charge of perjury made by R. R. O'Dell, counsel for the state. Miss Wachtler was released on her own recognizance.

PITTSBURG DISTRICT MEN OUT ALMOST UNANIMOUSLY.

Operators Expected to Present a Solid Front by a Prominent Union Official, Who Thinks the Strike Ill-Advised—Two Operators Concede the 69-Cent Rate.

PITTSBURG, March 8.—The strike of the miners of the Pittsburg district is on in full force, and is expected to result in a general suspension of work. There are three companies whose miners it is thought will stay at work, and the men employed in these mines aggregate less than 1,000. At the Monongahela mines near Monongahela City the men held a meeting and after completing the loading of a barge at the request of the superintendent quit work. All the miners of the fourth pool have come out. There is a good boating stage and the operators are desirous of continuing work. Some of them have proposed compromise scales, but in each case they have been rejected with the demand for the rate decided upon by the convention.

A Union Official Thinks It Ill-Advised.

A prominent miners' official said he thought some of the retail operators would agree to pay the price and get it on the market, but did not think big firms would agree to it. He thinks the strike at present ill-advised, and said the men should have waited until the middle of April. He regrets the action by the men. The latest estimate of strikers is 17,000, leaving those at work in the neighborhood of 2,600. Among the few miners at work are all on Painters' run, Chartler's branch, Beadley Bros. and the Panhandle Coal company—all at work at 55 cents; the Forsythe company in the fourth pool, at the rate paid before the strike; the New York and Cleveland Gas Coal company, 1,000 men; Pittsburg and Chicago Gas Coal company, at Findleyville, 800 men, and the Robbins first pool men.

Working Under Iron-Clad Contracts.

All of the above are working under iron-clad contracts and should the men quit work they forfeit a bonus and place themselves in jeopardy of the law for breach of contract. Robbins' men seriously contemplate a break and to run the chances. The company officials cannot say what the men will do. Some of the big mines on the Panhandle which suspended are: The Standard Coal company, 275 men; Millers' Run Coal company, 200; Ridgway-Bishop company, 250. Nearly all other mines in the Mansfield district are out. The Euclid mine of the Ohio and Pennsylvania company, at Port Royal, on the Baltimore and Ohio, and the Creedmore are also closed.

Break in the Operators' Ranks.

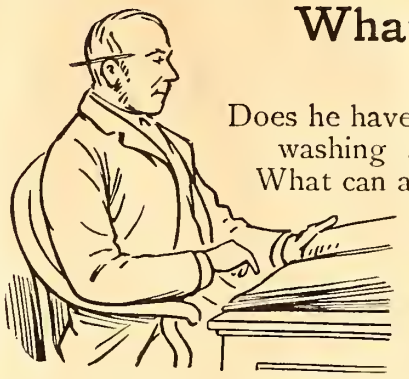
Considerable uneasiness was caused to the operators by the Hackett Coal company at Findleyville, controlled by Boyle Bros., posting a notice that their mines will resume today at 69 cents, the rate demanded by the men. William Floresheim's men in the same section asked a similar concession, but were emphatically refused. The Boyle Bros. were asked by the operators to rescind their notice under promise of having their orders filled from the mines at work for 55 cents, but they replied that it was their intention to conduct their own business. The men at Catsburg on the Monongahela river have returned to work, the company having conceded the scale.

Reports from all parts of the district confirm the earlier reports that the strike is complete with the few exceptions mentioned.

CRIMINAL INDICTMENT FOR DANA.

The "Nestor" of the American Press Alleged to Have Committed Libel.

WASHINGTON, March 8.—The grand jury for the supreme court of the District of Columbia has returned an indictment for criminal libel against Charles A. Dana, editor, and William M. Laffan, publisher, of the New York Sun. The presentment is a formidable document of many pages, setting forth the malicious motives, as alleged, of Dana and Laffan in criminally libelling Frank B. Noyes, of Washington, proprietor of the Evening Star, one of the board of directors and of the executive committee of the Associated Press.



This movement grows out of the war between the Associated Press and the United Press. Dana is the head of the United Press and Noyes a director in the Associated Press and this is what Dana will have to justify in court, printed in the New York Sun Feb. 22 last, in the editorial columns: "The corporation [meaning the Associated Press] is orgauized under the Illinois state law and the provisions of the statute respecting the personal liability of directors are not amusing. We commend a careful study of them to the unfortunate newspaper managers who have been roped in. They may see their way to making such a thoroughly dishonest director as F. B. Noyes, of Washington, for instance, refund to them the amount of the extra assessments out of which they have been buncoed."

BLACK EYE FOR JUDGE LYNCH.

Gov. McKinley Lays Down Real Law and Order for People of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, March 11.—In approving the findings (fully exonerating Colonel Coit) of the military court which inqulred into the killing of several people at Washington Court House by the military while a mob was trying to lynch a negro rapist who had just been tried, convicted and sentenced for twenty years, Governor McKinley says the crime of the prisoner was a horrible one, but was "no justification for the acts of lawlessness and violence which were permitted by those who in passion sought to add to one crime still another, and whose plain duty as citizens was to preserve, not to break, the peace of the country."

"The unlawful assemblage," says the governor, "neither heeded the warnings of the officers nor of the citizens, which were repeatedly given. Under this grave provocation Colonel Coit and his command behaved with rare prudence and forbearance. The law was upheld as it should have been. Lynching cannot be tolerated in Ohio. The law of the state must be supreme over all and the agents of the law, acting within the law, must be sustained."

What's your husband's work?

Does he have to do anything as hard as your washing and scrubbing? It can't be. What can a man do that's as hard, for most men, as this constant housedrudgery is, for most women? If he has any sympathy for you, tell him to get you some Pearline. Sympathy is all very well, but it's Pearline, not sympathy, that you want for washing and cleaning. Nothing else that's safe to use will save you so much downright hard work at the washtub or about the house. It saves money, too—saves the ruinous wear on clothes and paint from needless rubbing.

COSTLY EXPLOSION OF CHEMICALS.

It Blows to Debris a Toledo School Building Worth $150,000.

TOLEDO, March 11.—The Toledo high school building, a four story brick structure occupying the square bounded by Madison, Adams, Michigan and Tenth streets, and one of the best appointed educational institutions in this part of the country, was almost completely destroyed by fire between 1 and 2 o'clock this morning. It was a little before 1 o'clock when a loud explosion that blew out part of the east wing of the building startled the few pedestrains who happened to be on the street.

A moment later fire burst forth from the heart of the structure and spread so rapidly that before an alarm could be given the main portion of the building was doomed. The entire fire department was called out and managed to save the Scott manual training department, which is situated at the north end of the building. The explosion was probably caused by chemicals in the laboratory. The loss is estimated at $150,000, with what insurance is not known.

FATAL WRECK ON THE OHIO.

Steamer Runs Against a Bridge Pier and Six Lives Are Lost.

CINCINNATI, March 9.—The steamer Longfellow—at one time the U. P. Schenck—ran against a pier of the Chesapeake and Ohio bridge as she was starting on her trip to New Orleans, and was totally wrecked. The following lost their lives: David Aldrich, Rome, N. Y., missing and believed lost; First Clerk J. L. Carter, Newport, Ky.; Augustus Chauvet, barkeeper, New Orleans; James Miller, colored porter, Cincinnati; Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Aull, Dayton, O.

Unfortunately the complete list of the lost may never be known. All the records of the steamer were lost with it and no passenger list is ever left ashore. Late in the afternoon in a portion of the wreck, which had been landed some distance below the city, the body of a young woman was found. She was wearing a satin night dress and a black skirt was about her feet, as if she had been in the act of dressing.

MORE DIABOLISM BY BURGLARS.

Torture a Farmer with a Red Hot Shovel and Get but $2.17.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., March 8.—At a late hour at night five men disguised as whitecaps entered the house of Farmer George I. Wagner, in Extra township. They heated a fire shovel red hot and applied it to Wagner's feet, at the same time demanding all the money he had in the house.

The farmer told them it would be found in a bureau drawer. The thieves broke open the drawer and secured $2.17. A hired man named Johnson was knocked senseless by a blow from the burglars. Mrs. Wagner and her little daughter were prostrated by fright. The whitecaps left no clue behind them.

The Presidential Duck Hunt.

CAPE HATTERAS, N. C., March 11.—President Cleveland and his party sided over Sunday by taking a cruise to Pimlico sound. The Violet left Cape Hatteras about 6 a. m. She steamed south, passed Hatteras inlet to Ocrocoke inlet, and returned to her old anchorage in Cape Channel at 6 p. m. The weather is delightful and the trip was enjoyed by all on board. A big day's sport is expected today.

Woman Suffrage Defeated.

Pure Blood

Is absolutely necessary in order to have good health. The greatest affliction of the human race is impure blood.

There are about 2400 disorders incident to the human frame, the large majority arising from the impure or poisonous condition of the blood.

The best remedy for all blood diseases is found in Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Its remarkable cures are its loudest praise. It is not what we say but what Hood's Sarsaparilla does that tells the story.

No remedy has ever had so marked success, or won such enormous sales.

Scrofula in its severest forms yields to its potent powers, blood poisoning and salt rheum and many other diseases are permanently cured by it. For a general Spring Medicine to remove those impurities which have accumulated during the winter, or to overcome That Tired Feeling, nothing equals

"I wish to say that 3 years ago we had a beautiful boy born to us. At the age of 11 months he breathed his last, a victim to impure blood. On Aug. 4, 1891, another boy was born, who at the age of two months became afflicted with the same disease. We believed the trouble was constitutional, and not common sore mouth. I procured a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and commenced to give it regularly to both mother and baby. Improvement began at once. We have succeed in eradicating the scrofulous blood from the system and today we are blessed with a nice, fat baby boy, 18 months old—the very all life and full of mischief—thanks to Hood's Sarsaparilla. I am a minister in the Methodist Protestant church, and it affords me much pleasure to recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all as a safe, sure remedy. Even my wife, after taking Hood's, became healthy and fleshy and has the bloom of girlhood again." REV. J. M. PATE, Brookline Station, Missouri.

FARM, FIELD AND GARDEN

In the Poultry House.

A few lice in the henhouse now mean thousands later. Poor hens and few if any eggs will be the result. Do you think it will pay to feed wheat to lice? That is what many do without a murmur—at the lice. The hens are only the go betweens and get all the curses. Clean out everything—nests, roosts, partitions—and scrub them with kerosene. Paint everything with strong lye made of wood ashes, convert the pests into soap and then scrub the building with them. Cut new poles for roosts and hang them with wires fastened to the roof. Dig out the floor with a hoe and wash it. When dry, whitewash every part. It will pay to do a good job while about it. It will be too cold by and by, and then those pullets must begin laying before cold weather, or they will hold off till spring To succeed you must give them meat, not make meat of them for parasites.

The pullets may, with care and comfort, pay a profit on their cost before spring. They will not if they are animated vermin factories. A supply of leaves packed away for use on the floors will make a cheerful sound as the hens "rustle" for wheat among them on cold days. Several loads of buckwheat hulls will be a profitable investment. The white dust will choke lice when the hens roll in it, says Rural New Yorker, authority for the foregoing. Of course you have barrels of road dust put away. That and plaster when thrown violently against the roosts will make a smudge and destroy many of the red mites. It is likely that hens would take care of the louse question themselves if always provided with suitable dust material. When their roosts become too bad or the nests too hot, they will abandon them for a tree and starve out the midnight marauders.

Some Causes of Poultry Diseases.

High roosts—bumble foot.
Filthy houses—lice.
Drafts in the hennery—roup.
Impure water—cholera.
Damp quarters—diarrhea.
Musty food—canker.
Breeding in and in—consumption.
Overfeeding—apoplexy.
Unwholesome diet—indigestion.
Wet weather—pip.
Close confinement—debility.
Want of exercise—black rot.
Exposure to cold—rheumatism.
High feeding—leg weakness.

Odd Mention.

The use of artificial manures is spreading westward. Farmers should make a careful study of the subject of manures. This knowledge lies at the foundation of their business.

A mixed ration of wheat and corn ground makes a desirable feed for milk cows.

Professor Shelton says that farmyard manure should be hauled to the field in the spring.

Secretary F. D. Coburn of the Kansas state board of agriculture has issued a pamphlet on "Feeding Wheat to Farm Animals," which gives the best information now obtainable. It is a collection of all the important articles on feeding wheat that have appeared in agricultural papers and bulletins.

Kansas prairie hay has made a place for itself in the markets on account of its superior excellence.

The cheapest feed this year over a wide section of country is cottonseed meal.

It is not to be wondered at that Ayer's Pills are in such universal demand. For the cure of constipation, biliousness, or any other complaint needing a laxative, these pills are unsurpassed. They are sugar-coated, easy to take, and every dose is effective.

JUDGMENT AGAINST THE RAILWAY.

Chicago Ticket Brokers Win a Suit Against the Alton Road.

CHICAGO, March 11.—Judge Adams has decided the case of Mulford & Mackenzie, ticket brokers, against the Chicago and Alton railroad, finding for the plaintiffs and fixing their damages at $10,854. Mulford and Mackenzie were a firm of brokers who in 1880 had an office in this city and in St. Louis. In that year they bought of the Alton road $50,000 worth of tickets at 50 cents on the dollar, the tickets being good over the Alton road between Kansas City and Bloomington, thence east over the Lake Erie and Western. Shortly after the purchase of the tickets a passenger rate war set in and the tickets were unsalable until 1882.

In June of that year, after the brokers had disposed of about half the tickets, the Lake Erie and Western, which had gone into the hands of a receiver, repudiated the agreement between itself and the Alton by which tickets had been made good over its lines cast from Bloomington, and the tickets, or what was left of them in the hands of the brokers, became worthless. The defense of the Alton was that in the sale of tickets it acted merely as an agent.

MINNESOTA ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

MARKET HALL, ST. PAUL, MARCH 27–28, 1895, BEGINNING AT 7:30 P. M., MARCH 27TH.

Able addresses are promised from well-informed speakers, such as Pres. C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, and I. R. B. Arnold, of the "Floating Chapel," with stereopticon illustrations, Rev. L. G. Almen, Rev. Wm. Fenton, and others. It is the expectation to devote the time Thursday forenoon and afternoon to the discussion of the minor secret orders, and their relation to the Church of Christ.

Let as many as can do so rally to this State meeting, and let others write to the convention and send such contributions to help the cause as they may be able. Communications may be sent to the general secretary of the National Christian Association, Mr. W. I. Phillips, addressing him at St. Paul, Minn., general delivery.

By order of (Rev.) P. SJOBLOM,
Pres. Minn. State Ass'n.

Chicago is just now considerably stirred up with the question: Who shall be mayor? The two candidates, George B. Swift, Republican, and Frank Wenter, Democratic, are both making promises which they hope will secure the office; but it is quite probable that neither candidate will be able, even if he desired, to purify the atmosphere very much around the city hall.

A few days since the Spanish government was informed that an apology would be expected from her, by the United States, because a merchant vessel, the Allionca, was fired at by a Spanish cruiser, in Cuban waters. Friday, March 15, it is reported that a Spanish gunboat, Arced, fired into and sunk another American vessel. The crew and sixteen passengers perished. The insurrection in Cuba goes from bad to worse, and the Spanish think that the United States is unfriendly to that government, and would like to seize the island. Unless wise counsels prevail we, as a nation, may be drawn into the quarrel.

The current number of the Advance gives the facts stated below, taken from the Home Missionary: "Rev. ——— writes, Sunday, Nov. 4. Preached at home station; . . . left for an outstation by train at 12 M. Arrived at 3:30 P. M. Spoke at Sunday-school, etc. The next Sunday a freight train left at 7:30, and I reached home at two o'clock Sunday morning;" and asks the following pertinent question: "Isn't it about time for the Congregational Home Missionary Society to decline to grant funds for work that involves long [or short] railroad rides on Sunday?" We are glad to notice a quickening of conscience in regard to Sabbath observance among Christians.

The Weekly Inter Ocean of March 12, gives to its readers an able article, reviewing the policy of the present administration in monetary matters. After comparing the action of the House of Commons, England, with the weak record of our late Congress, and of the present administration, it says: "Oh, for a race of real American statesmen once more;" and adds, "There is some good obtainable even out of the spirit of the old-time blue laws." The writer has discovered a real and urgent need of our time; and has suggested, we think, though not sincerely, the true and only remedy for the deficiency. "The fear of the Lord" (the spirit of the blue laws, so called) is the beginning of wisdom" forstatesmen and all others.

The law enacted in June 1893, limiting the number of hours that a woman may be employed per day to eight, has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of Illinois. This law was a special scheme of Governor Altgeld's to get the "labor vote;" it was pronounced unconstitutional for two reasons. First, it was claimed that the law took away the constitutional right of a citizen to contract his or her labor, and the bill included both a law and an appropriation of money from the State treasury, while it is held by the courts that special bills are required to appropriate money. "The labor laws," so called, are now all stricken from the statute books, having served the purpose of proving that people cannot be be made unselfish by law.

Rev. Kittredge Wheeler, last Sabbath, raised a voice for moral worth, in this city, which it is to be hopedmany will take to heart. The following extract is from Monday's Tribune: At the Fourth Baptist church, Ashland avenue and Monroe street, last night, the Rev. Kittredge Wheeler delivered a prelude on "The 400" to a sermon on "The 300." In his prelude he said: "Ward McAllister is dead. Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, is living; living still—more alive than ever. Ward McAllister is dead and buried; in his grave he sleeps, soon to be forgotten. Charles Haddon Spurgeon is risen and ascended up on high, forevermore a spirit of flight, a mighty factor in the uplift of the race, a constant force in the world about us and in the world above us. Mrs. Paran Stevens says, so we read: 'We did not need Mr. McAllister; he knew wines and dinners, but we—the 400—we could get along without him.' Is this the eulogy of the 400 spoken over the grave of their leader? If it be, a good text for the funeral would be these words: 'Whose God Is Their Belly.'"

We are indebted to Rev. J. Boyes, of Derby, England, for The Christian World, which contains an interesting account of the first "Masonic parade" ever held in a non-conformist place of worship, Sunday,. February 24. Permission for this innovation was readily obtained from his royal highness, the Prince of Wales, who is at the same time, practically, head of the church of England, though an immoral man, and head of English Masons, because he weakly took that as the easiest way of controlling this element in his realm. The sermon was preached by a man whose little child lay dead at home. Of course, a Masonic lodge could not understand a father's feelings. The text was, "For we are members one of another."—Eph. 4: 25., and the sermon, though good on the whole, had the customary sop thrown out to gratify the order. It was a splendid affair from a worldly point of view. The pomp of royalty, the display of arms, and the peculiar charm of military and grand organ music, combined to make a magnificent parade; but how little will these things appear in the light of eternity!

"Frauds! Frauds! Frauds!" "Pass him around." "Absconding treasurer." "An . old fraud." The above headings show how tenderly the names and characters of offending brethren are dealt with in The Companion and American Odd-fellow. To the following questions taken from the same official organ, we would give the evidently expected answer, none whatever; but must in justice add that one might sooner expect to restore the snowy whiteness of a soiled garment by plunging it into a muddy pool of melted snow by the roadside, than to obtain a spirit of charity or escape the evil characteristics mentioned below by joining the Odd-fellows' lodge. The blood of Jesus 'Christ alone cleanses from sin, "neither is there salvation in any other:" We quote, "No man can be an Odd-fellow, in fact, in whose breast the leaven of charity is lacking, if a brother injures you, and you pursue him with relentless hate, and are unforgiving, where is your Odd-fellowship? If a brother commits an error or has a fault, and you proclaim it from the housetops, where is your Odd-fellowship? If a brother falls, and instead of placing your hand to his back, whispering good counsel, you stand idly by, or even aid in kicking him down, where is your Odd-fellowship? If you are envious of the success of your brothor, and endeavor to drag him down, where is your Odd-fellowship? If profanity belches from your mouth, and the stench of intoxicants is becoming plainer, where is your Odd-fellowship? If you are uncharitable, unkind, unforgiving, what good has Odd-fellowship done for you?"

ROMANISM AND MASONRY.

ADDRESS GIVEN BY REV F W FARR CORRESPONDING SECRETARY OF THE INTERNATIONAL ALLIANCE, AT THE CHRISTIAN REFORM CONVENTION IN PHILADELPHIA, MONDAY EVE, FEB 25 1895.

Have you ever overturned a broad flat stone in a pasture in the country on a summer's day? If so, you disturbed a strange colony of creeping things which scrambled hither and thither in dismay, seeking shelter and escape. It was not from your face that they were fleeing, it was from the light. It is doubtful if they saw you at all. They were creatures of the darkness and the unexpected incoming of the light smote them one and all with a blind and crazy dizziness that sent them helter-skelter in bewilderment and fear.

These Reform conventions are small, but they create commotion and consternation in the community among a certain class of people. A fair presumption is that those who manifest concern are the ones who have the most to fear from the revelation of the light. Light reveals excellence wherever it exists as well as deformity. If you carry a light through some dark cellar, it not only shows the rubbish and the filth, but if some corner happens to be swept and garnished, it reveals that too. The brighter the light, the deeper the shadows and the more emphatic is the revelation. When men are not ashamed of their works they are not afraid of the light. Any institution that will not admit the light, must apologize for its existence. Any institution that must apologize for its existence, ought not to exist at all.

Recently the American public have been treated to the spectacle of the Pope of Rome fulminating against Freemasonry. It is a case of Satan divided against himself, and of the pot calling the kettle black.

If we may take the Society of the Jesuits, of which the present Pope is said to be a member, as a fair sample of the fruits of Romanism, we may be enabled to see what the natural outcome of such an institution is, in our country, and we may be almost led to regret that broad principle of toleration which permits them to find shelter beneath our laws.

It must be borne in mind that we have no quarrel with the men themselves but only with the principles they represent, and we are glad to know that many liberal and enlightened Roman Catholics are as bitterly hostile to the Jesuits, and the principles of secrecy that they stand for, as any Protestant could be.

Jesuitism is a secret, iron, oath-bound foreign desposition. History records the expulsion of this society about seventy times from various European countries in which it has existed, and that these were almost all Roman Catholic countries. It is a significant fact that some of the Popes who suppressed the order died shortly, after by sudden and violent deaths. America is about the only country on earth where they have been allowed to work their will. Encouraged by the toleration which our laws afford to all religious sects, they have flocked to our shores; and just as the viper stings the bosom that protects it, so they have repaid this hospitality by plotting against the welfare of the government.

It is the testimony of ex-Senator Blair that while he was a member of the House of Representatives and trying to carry through a constitutional amendment to prevent the appropriation of public money for the support of sectarian schools, at one time nine Jesuits were counted on the floor of the House, log rolling against the bill.

Last Wednesday in the German Reichtag a bill was passed through the efforts of the clerical party, removing restrictions against the Jesuits and permitting them to return. This very morning a bill was submitted, so a cable despatch informs us, in the Reichtag which strikes at the very roots of free speech and religious liberty. Students of history cannot fail to discern an underlying relationship between these two events, occurring thus within a week of one another.

Freemasonry is another secret oath-bound society, and as such, it is a menace to our popular form of government and foreign to the genius of our free institutions. But many say that many of our greatest statesmen and the founders of our Republic were Freemasons, and they quote the name of Washington.

Let us not commit the mistake of measuring any man by the standard of another generation than that in which he lived. It may be true that Washington was a Mason, and it may be true also that he kept slaves. Who believes that Washington would not, had he lived in the last generation, when the slavery question was being settled, have been among the first to have emancipated his bondmen? We may well believe that did he live to-day and stand in the blazing light that beats upon this century's last decade, he would still be head and shoulders above the politicians of the day, and be found in the front line of this moral reform that appeals as powerfully to patriotic as to religious motives.

Little comfort however can be extracted from the fact that Romanism and Masonry are antagonizing one another, when they can be historically traced to the same tap-root. If, however, in their hostility they could be induced to re-enact the part of the Kilkenny cats in the fable, it would be a consummation devoutly to be wished.

Did the time and occasion permit, the following propositions might be proved:

1. Romanism and Masonry may be traced through the Chaldean mysteries up to the days of Semiramis who lived only a few centuries after the flood. See "The Two Babylons." Alex. Hislop. Partridge & Co., London.

2. They are fundamentally identical in their principles of secrecy and oath-bound obligations.

3. They are both a perpetual political menace to any form of government under which they exist.

4. They create domestic discord and assail the unity and highest welfare of the home, the one through the confessional, and the other through the lodge.

5. They repress a healthy individualism and thereby cramp the intellectual and moral well-being of their devotees, by enforcing artificial and factitious considerations for the supposed benefit of the society and to the detriment of the individual.

6. They subserve no civil, political or moral purpose that could not be better secured without them, and therefore could both be dispensed with on the grounds of economy.

Have you not noticed when taking a journey by rail, at some station a workman with a hammer passes under the train and asks questions? As the sharp stroke of the hammer sounds against the wheel, if the ring comes clear and metallic, it is all right and the car is left to continue its journey: but if a dull, hollow thud answers to the blow of the hammer, the passengers are transferred and the car is side-tracked for repairs.

Let any honest man take the hammer of free inquiry and pass along under the history of Romanism and Masonry and ask questions. "By their fruits ye shall know them." The sequel of such an investigation will be to side-track them without delay, in order that over the shining rails of piety and patriotism, the car of our Republic shall roll into a brighter and more glorious future.

PAST MASTER RONAYNE SPEAKS AGAIN.

During my long and varied experience in Freemasonry I have been often astonished at the tremendous influence which that terrible system wields over the conscience and conduct of nearly all its members. Men who are truthful, honest, and conscientious in every other relation of life, will not hesitate to lie most unblushingly about Masonry—its oaths, death penalties, laws and usages—when discussing the princples of that hideous organization with an outsider.

There is one excuse, however, that can always be offered for these men, and that is, that the great majority of them are entirely ignorant as to what Freemasonry really is. There are thousands of Masons to-day in the the United States who never saw, and possibly never heard even, of the "ancient constitution," while there are thousands more who, although they have assumed for a purpose its terrible oaths and bound themselves under its barbarous and inhuman penalties of death, yet have never examined into the nature of the Masonic covenants, but have simply taken for granted what they are told by their superiors in the order. Take, for instance, the traditional antiquity of Masonry. Nine out of every ten of all the rank and file of the members of Masonic lodges will tell you that Freemasonry had its origin at the building of the first Jewish Temple, and that the four Chapter degrees had their origin at the building of the second Temple after the Captivity. They will tell you that Solomon and the two Hirams were Masons—its "first Most Excellent Grand Masters"—that all the workmen employed on the first Temple were Apprentices, Fellow Crafts and Master Masons—the ritual teaches this; and the poor, ignorant lodge dupes swallow down this stuff without the slightest investigation as to whether it be true or not. And the worst of it is, that they not only gulp down this miserable fiction, but they actually take about sevnty-five oaths, clinched by an array of death penalties, at which even a cannibal might blush, that they will "always hail, forever conceal and never reveal" "any part or parts, point or points," of this gigantic fraud of which its boasted antiquity is the foundation lie.

No, sir; neither Solomon, nor Hiram of Tyre nor Hiram Abiff were Masons. The two latter were pagans—worshipers of Baal—while Solomon was a Jew, and hence could have no religious affiliation with the others—not for years after the Temple was built at least; and therefore how they could associate in religious exercises on the floor of a Masonic lodge, and "adore and revere" the same God, none but a C. S. Maynard—Past Master and Most Excellent High Priest—could determine. As I said before, the rank and file believe this humbug or accept it without the slightest investigation, while their leaders laugh in their sleeves at their poor hoodwinked stupidity, and go on swearing in their dupes by the hundred, stuffing them with the very silliest nonsense that could possibly be invented in order that they themselves might secure power and pelf, and be able to escape merited punishment when detected in any criminal practice.

Now take the boasted benevolence of Masonry. This is another miserable fiction; nothing more nor less than a much-vaunted lie. There is not a solitary sentence, word, or syllable, from the "ancient constitutions" down to the little by-laws of a Blue Lodge, where any intimation is given that a sick or disabled brother shall receive so much a week; that the funeral expenses of a dead brother shall be paid, or that the widow and the orphan of a Master Mason shall be fed and protected. There are no sick or death benefits attached to Freemasonry; and yet you'll hear Masonic charity and Masonic benevolence trumpeted abroad from one end of the land to the other. Humbug! Sham! Nonsense! No, sir! Freemasonry has myriads of death penalties, but not a solitary sick or death benefit.

But stop, Mr. Editor. Some M. E. High Priest will doubtless try to answer this charge by referring to the Master Mason's oath. Ah, but he cannot refer to the Master Mason's oath, or in fact to anything else in Masonry; for the moment he does so he becomes what they "denominate" a Masonic perjurer, he being already sworn to "conceal and never reveal;" and hence, although a Mason may be very "high up," although in fact he may be a Most Excellent High Priest, he is not even a Masonic MAN—he is simply a Masonic OYSTER.

But let us look for a moment at the Master Mason's oath: "Furthermore, that I will aid and assist all distressed worthy brother Master Masons, their widows and orphans, so far as their necessities may require and my ability permit, without material injury to myself or family."

Now look at this clause again; examine it carefully and see the number of loopholes in it through which the Master Mason can easily crawl out. In the first place, it is an individual matter. The applicant must be in distress. He must be worthy. And then the donor is first of all to consider his own ability to give; and then again he must consider the interests of his own family. You have often heard of "charity beginning at home." Well, here it is exactly in the Masonic oath, and in the Masonic system, with a vengeance.

But observe again, that when a poor man applies for Masonic aid he must first of all prove himself to be a Master Mason; then he must prove that he is in absolute need; and last of all, he must prove himself to be worthy. And remember that all this is to be done so as to satisfy the doubts and remove the scruples of an individual Master Mason. And having gone through all this routine of red tape to satisfy one Master Mason, he must do the very same thing for the next Master Mason, and then for the next, and so on; and the end of it all is that the poor, needy Mason becomes a common beggar; and this is what the High Priests of Masonry are pleased to dignify by the name of Masonic charity. If a Master Mason is out of work and his rent is due, will any other Master Mason pay his rent? Will he send the needy family a barrel of flour? Will he buy shoes and clothes for the distressed family? Or will he send them a ton of coal? I have never known of such a thing, and I was made a Mason in old Harrington Lodge, No. 49, on the Registry of Canada, in 1858; and was Worshipful Master of my lodge—Keystone, No. 639, in this city.

But in addition to all this, let it be further remembered, that by the laws and usages of Masonry the very people who may need a helping hand are rigidly excluded. All old men, all young men under age, all cripples, all women, and all poor men are forever shut out from "all the rights and benefits" of this wonderful Masonic charity. And yet Masonry, forsooth, is a benevolent institution!

No. Freemasonry is a lie, a sham and a fraud, from center to circumference; and the very first clause of the first oath that a Freemason takes is an oath compelling him to lie if he desires to maintain his good standing in the order.

"Attack us honestly," Mr. Maynard says in his letter, "and you may perhaps accomplish something; but attack us dishonestly and by falsehood, and you must fail." No, my dear brother, we have no quarrel with Masons; we simply attack the principles, the laws, the horrible oaths and the barbarous death penalties of Freemasonry; and it is not at all necessary for any intelligent American citizen to use either falsehood or dishonesty in discussing these things, for you know just as well as I do that they carry their own condemnation on their face. More anon,

E. RONAYNE,
Past Master Keystone Lodge, 639.

ANOTHER DAY.

Another closing day,
Another setting sun,—
What progress have I made?
What duty have I done?

Amid perplexing cares
That marked this checkered life,
O have I sought thy grace
To help me in the strife?

Have I, in simple faith
Before thy gracious throne,
Lived only in thy strength,
Nor trusted in my own?

Dear Saviour, guide my feet
In all the toilsome way,
And bring me nearer thee
With each declining day.

THE AMERICAN PROTECTION ASSOCIATION, OR THE ANTI-CATHOLIC ORGANIZATION.

Of course the Roman Catholics are fighting the A. P. Association. The organization is saying some very unpleasant things about the Roman Catholics, and is exposing their political methods. We are not the champion of the association, for we believe it is a secret society, and as such it compromises its work; but that its opposition to the aggressions of Catholicism is timely there can be no doubt. More than once in the history of this country has this opposition assumed national proportions. Dr. Vaughn, professor in Union Seminary, Virginia, has a strong article on the subject in Union Seminary Magazine, in reply to Bishop Spaulding (Catholic) in the North American Review. Read the following points which Dr. Vaughn presents, supported as they are by specific citations of Catholic authorities:

"1. It is a fundamental principle of the American system that the state is independent of the church, and the church of the state. The Pope teaches that the church, by the institution and command of her Divine Head, is empowered to exercise 'her salutary influence' on, not only individual men, but nations, peoples and sovereigns, even to the end of the world. He approves that mutual co-operation, and agreement of counsels, between the priesthood and governments, which has always been propitious and conducive to the welfare both of church and state. The Syllabus condemns as an error to be repudiated by the faithful, that 'kings and princes are not only exempt from the jurisdiction of the church, but are superior to the church in litigated questions of jurisdiction.' The Syllabus condemns as error that 'in the case of conflicting laws between the two powers, the civil law ought to prevail.' The Syllabus of March 8th (18th), 1861, quoted by Mr. Gladstone, condemns as error 'the assignment to the state the power of defining the civil rights of the church.'

"2. It is a fundamental principle of the American system that freedom of speech is the right of the political freeman. The Pope, Pius the IX., quotes with approval and confirmation the Encyclical of Gregory XVI. in which he denounces the liberty of all citizens in which they are authorized 'to publish and put forward openly all their ideas whatsoever, either by speaking, in print or by any other method.' He quotes Augustine with approval, saying, 'if it is always free to human arguments to discuss, men will never be wanting who will dare to resist the truth.'

"3. The freedom of the press is another settled principle of American system. This is condemned in the Encyclical of Gregory the XVI. in 1831, and the Encyclical of Pius IX., 1864, quoted by Gladstone. The Syllabus appended to the Encyclical Quarta Cura contains these words in a sentence also embracing 'the civil liberty of every mode of worship' and condemning them 'the full power given to all, of orally and publicly manifesting their ideas of all kinds whatever.'

"4. The freedom of religion is another of the fundamental principles of the American system. This priceless liberty of obeying the dictates of individual reason and conscience, in construing the truth revealed by Almighty God in his Word and works—under full responsibility to him but under no responsibility to any other power, is authoritatively condemned by the infallible authority. The right to employ force is unequivocally claimed to coerce the freedom of conscience and worship. Proposition 24 of the Syllabus of Pius unequivocally condemns as error the denial that 'The church has not the power of availing herself of force, or any direct or indirect temporal power.'

"5. The right of public education is one of the prominent principles of the American system. The Syllabus in its 45th proposition unequivocally condemns as dangerous error the claim of the state to the entire direction and control of the public schools.

"As long as the Catholic church continues to make the public funds of the United States support their propagandist mission schools, instead of supporting them with their own funds, they may expect to be suspected; they may expect to be resisted. As long as a regular bureau is established in the capital of the Republic to maintain and extend this policy of subsidizing the public treasury to support the Catholic propaganda, so long may it be expected that the public indignation will rise higher and higher until the grievance is abated. The American system forbids the union of church and state in any form. The Syllabus of the Roman pontiff has infallibly defined that the union of state and any other church is unlawful, but that the union of every state with the Catholic church is obligatory, Fidelity to the obligations created by this definition will lead the faithful to endeavor to realize this union as far as possible; if not in one shape, then in another. But it will be a dangerous experiment in this country in any form. The rising storm is seen in the growing 'Apaism' of the day. The American people do not intend to have their cherished institutions overthrown, and remoulded in the image of the Syllabus of Pio Nono."—Associate Reformed Presbyterian.

THE EFFECT OF THE SECRET LODGE SYSTEM ON GOOD CITIZENSHIP.

Civil government is an ordinance of God. "There is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God." It is the divinely-appointed order among men, so that "the history of the world cannot be understood apart from the government of the world." The being and authority of the law of the state are from God. Civil officers are the ministers of God to men for good, through whom he manifests his opposition to evil and his delight in that which is good. "A terror to evil doers and a praise to them that do well." The state was made for man and man for the state. In it man's highest freedom is enjoyed. Gladstone said: "The government ought to make it as easy as possible for the people to do right." Man is in his normal state in a government constituted and administered according to God's law. Mulford, in "The Nation," says: "There is to be the freedom of work and freedom of thought in every form, and freedom of study and research, and freedom of communication and association, and freedom of co-operation in industry and economy. There is to be freedom of action, the choice of a home, the choice of a vocation, the choice of a wife. This freedom in every field is the condition of moral strength. In it the bondage of the animal is overcome, and 'the ape and tiger die.' In the nation there is wrought into the life of the individual the apprehension of a purpose formed not in momentary and transient desire, but a purpose transmitted through the succeeding generations with its sacred memories and mysterious sympathies and quickening hopes. The nation thus becomes for the individual an heritage, and not his alone, but to be held for those who shall follow him. The wealth of its historical associations and the grandeur of its historical epochs are its gifts. The majesty of its law, and the authority of its government, and its conquering power are around him; its acquisition is his vantage ground; its domain is his home; its order is his working field; its rights are the armor it has forged for him; its achievements are the nobler heights he treads; its freedom is the ampler air he breathes." Bluntschli, a historian of the state, says: "The glory and honor of the nation have always elevated the hearts of its children, and inspired them with sacrifice. For the being, the freedom, and the rights of the nation, the noblest and the worthiest have always offered their lives and their all. The whole great thought of the Fatherland, and the love of its children to it, would be inconceivable if this moral personality did not belong to the nation." The nation is a moral being in which the individual reaches his highest earthly perfection. The effect of the secret lodge system upon this citizenship is, to stunt and stifle, pervert and pollute, alienate and destroy that which God hath made.

1. It transfers the allegiance of its members from God to Satan.

The secret empire is a part of the government of the god of this world. It comes up from beneath, not down from above. It has a religion. That religion is not of Christ, but of the evil one. They sacrifice to devils, not to God. Instead of elevating, it degrades and ruins the people.

2. It administers disloyal oaths.

The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that any one who has taken the Endowment House oaths of the Mormon hierarchy should not be naturalized, and if he has been naturalized should be disfranchised. The murder of Dr. Cronin in Chicago led to the trial of the order of Clan-na-Gael. Their horrid oaths were exposed. The court decided that these disloyal oaths disqualify those taking them for citizenship. The Jesuits are an oath-bound society. Their disloyal oaths caused them to be expelled from many governments of Europe and South America. They ought to be disfranchised here. The murder of Wm. Morgan by the Freemasons in 1826 caused forty-five out of fifty of the members to leave the order. In their indignation they exposed the oaths by which the lodge bound its members. And in 1833 the legislature of Vermont passed a law interdicting these oaths. Subsequently Massachusetts and New Hampshire adopted the same law. Although the law has since been repealed, the principle upon which it rested is eternal right. Think of the lodge swearing a man "to ever conceal and never reveal their secrets, on pain of having his throat cut from ear to ear, his bowels torn out, his body burned and the ashes scattered on the rough sands of the sea, where the tide ebbs and flows twice every twenty-four hours!" Think of a man taking a Master Mason's oath: "I promise and swear that a Master Mason's secret, given to me in charge as such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, murder and treason excepted, and they left to my own election!" Think of a man taking the Royal Arch degree, which amends the above thus: "murder and treason not excepted!" Where is the safety for society when men to whom it looks for counsel and guidance bind themselves by such oaths?

3. It is the enemy of the family, the church and the state.

The family has a just claim upon a man's time and money. The husband and father who spends his evenings in the lodge instead of the home, and takes the means that should be used in buying food and clothing for his wife and children, in providing them a home and home comforts, in educating them and fitting them for making the best of life, and uses those means in paying lodge dues and purchasing lodge regalia, robs those nearest and dearest to him, and offers an affront to God in preferring a human, useless and wicked device to a divinely-appointed ordinance.—Wesleyan Methodist.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The loan collection of women's portraits.—The removal of the historic codfish.—The Norwegian system.—Child insurance.—The A. P. A. in the Legislature.—A blasphemous use of a sacred symbol.

"When we see a beautiful and thoughtful face," says Prof. R. B. Anderson, "we do not always consider how much the ancestors of that man or woman must have suffered, and labored, and thought before that beauty and intelligence became possible." The portraits of women in the collection at Copley Hall, loaned for the benefit of the Children's Aid Society, contains some famous pictures of the colonial period, which impresses one anew with the wonderful force of heredity. Their counterpart, walk the streets of Boston to-day,—women every whit as fair, with the same intellectual brows, the same fine poise of head and shoulders, and features cast in the same refined mould, but with that peculiar something added which makes the typical nineteenth century woman, to my mind, more beautiful than her great grandmother in all her glory of stiff brocade and powdered hair. Not that I wish to speak slightingly of these fair and courtly dames of "ye olden time." It was not their fault that destiny shut them up within narrow limits; that they were young and then grew old—more or less gracefully—in the sheltered rose gardens that in those days made woman's paradise; but for them who longed with yearnings more intense because doomed to life-long repression, for a wider outlook and larger opportunities, yet died without a glimpse of the better day that was coming,—I sincerely hope that what they lost by not being born in this century has been made up. Perhaps it has been given to them to be pioneers of social progress and reform in some other planet. Meanwhile their doubles—I saw Dorothy Q's the other day only grown to womanhood—are attending suffrage meetings, doing rescue work in the slums, studying the labor question, touching life on every side with the quick and helpful sympathy of intelligent knowledge; and so far from losing any of their womanly loveliness, are evolving a higher type than in any of the generations that have gone before.

The cod may well claim to be the aristocrat of the briny deep, such high honors have been paid to its wooden effigy, which with all the pomp and circumstance, not of war but of peace, was recently carried into the new Hall of Representatives draped with the American flag, and hung over the speaker's chair amid loud applause. If the spirit of some old Egyptian had been present he might have been excused for the natural mistake of thinking that the cod must be our provincial deity. Long may he remain there—this old-time heirloom from a purer past. What would the legislators of a hundred years ago have thought of the insolvent, shameless liquor oligarchy which bribes where it cannot intimidate, and holds our law-makers so completely under its thrall that the defeat of any bill however necessary to the public interest is a foregone conclusion, if it is known that the liquor men are putting forth all their strength to bill it. The decision of the Committee on Military Affairs that the bill for prohibiting the use of liquor at encampments of the militia ought not to pass, is a case in point. The amount of liquor consumed at such places, and the consequent demoralization of officers and men, is something scandalous, but to prohibit would mean a good many dollars less to the firms which supply the "beverage."

The bill to introduce the Norwegian system is the most talked-of thing in temperance circles at present. Among those who favor it are names that the people know and honor, like Robert Treat Paine, and Mrs. Mary A. Livermore; but this is not the first, nor will it be the last, time that good and sincere souls have been caught with the devil's chaff of a temporarizing expedient. In the words of Dr. A. A. Miner, "no method of carrying on a damnable business will be smiled on by the angels." Should this measure pass, a wave of license will roll over Massachusetts, the harder to control because it gives the traffic over into the hands of a corporation which, unlike an individual, cannot well be fined or imprisoned for infraction of the law—especially when its president is a minister or a deacon! And as for taking it out of politics, Fraxon was right in declaring it impossible. Such a burning economic question neither can or ought to be separated from politics.

The bill against insuring the lives of children is a needful piece of legislation in the interests of humanity. To say nothing of the temptation to crime which it places in the way of unscrupulous guardians, it is a fact that the poor and ignorant dwellers at the North End will actually stint their children of food in order that they may have, if taken away by death, a showy funeral. It is a curious thing that the lower one goes in the social strata, whether it be among the colored people of the South or the low-class foreigners of the Northern cities, the stronger seems this desire for a grand burial; and it is one which the sharp, shrewd insurance agent well knows how to work.

The A. P. A. still continues to act as if it contained within its ranks all the patriotism there is going; but when it comes to accusing everybody of being disloyal who does not belong to or favor it, and threatening to make marked men of those Legislators who oppose any bill originating with them, it is time for people to wake up and distinguish between true patriotism and false. There was quite an interesting passage-at-arms in the Massachusetts Legislature, over the bill requiring school committees to furnish schools with flags. The representative from Salem, Mr. Gausse, accused Mr. Penniman, the member from Brocton, of threatening him with A. P. A. vengeance if he ventured to oppose it. This was flatly denied by Mr. Penniman, who stated that it did not originate with the A. P. A. at all, but "the grandest organization outside of the Christian Church, the Grand Army of the Republic." There are some people, however, who will object to this characterization of the G. A. R., and whatever they may think of the point at issue, will say Amen to the declaration of the Salem member, that "he claimed the right to express the convictions of his mind, and did not intend to be frowned down by any secret organization." The measures advocated may be good and necessary, but to allow secret organizations to threaten and intimidate, is to allow a principle which is unpatriotic to the core, and will in the end overthrow our liberties. A secret society has no more right to meddle with our laws, either to make or unmake, than has the Church of Rome or any other ecclesiastical body.

I notice that the Transcript in a recent issue calls attention to the common use of the cross as a trade mark for liquors and patent medicines, as a thing which should be prohibited. It might have added, and on the doors of liquor saloons and places of ill fame when a Knight Templar Conclave is expected. Next summer how many of the dram-shops of Boston will flaunt this sign connected so inseparably with the tragedy of a world's redemption. Certainly one very needed bit of legislation is a law making such blasphemous use of it impossible.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Public library.—Recent accidents.—Suicides.—Trolly accidents.—Anti-monopoly agitation.

The executors of the Tilden Trust Fund for a public library have just voted to consolidate with the Astor and Lennox Libraries, and give New York what will doubtless be the greatest library in the world. The Astor and Lennox libraries have 450,000 volumes to begin with, and also a large number of rare pamphlets and manuscripts and autographs of great value. The combined endowments will exceed eight million dollars. This will furnish a foundation and create possibilities for a library which will be commensurate with the demands of the "Greater New York" of the future, with its growing interest in education, literature and art. The patriotic and public spirited action of these gentlemen is worthy of all commendation, and will be appreciated more and more in the years to come. A suitable proposed site for the building is Cathedral Heights, just north of the new Protestant Episcopal Cathedral of St. John, between Amsterdam and Morningside avenues, in the northern part of the city.

Recently two accidents have occurred—unnecessary and unreasonable—which are significant as illustrating the criminal carelessness that seem to pervade modern life, and that makes it as dangerous to sit quietly at home as to go abroad. A few days ago a large tenement house, in process of erection on Orchard street, suddenly collapsed, and four workmen were buried beneath the ruins and killed. The coroner's jury, which was largely composed of architects and builders, ascertained that the sand used for the mortar was dug out of a hole underneath the building and mixed with loam, making it a little better than mud, and that the mortar was laid when the temperature was below freezing, so that it thawed when the air became warm. If indictments shall be found, warrants for manslaughter will be issued, the penalty for which is fifteen years' imprisonment. For a similar offence a few years ago, the builder, Buddenseck, was sent to the penitentiary. The other event was an explosion in 103d street, caused by blasting to remove a layer of rock in the street. Although no persons were seriously injured, five houses were shattered, the windows and walls broken in and the residents for several blocks around were jarred and frightened by the local earthquake. The contractor and foreman were arrested and held in $500 bail. As a result of these accidents the idea is being agitated of having all architects licensed and registered, and all contractors give bonds.

There is said to be one suicide a day in New York throughout the year; but recently cases have been greatly multiplied, no less than five occurring on one day last week. Many of these are attributed to the "grippe," which is so widely prevalent and which makes life such a burden for those afflicted with it. It was a fact which attracted general notice that after Mr. Ingersoll published his celebrated justification of suicide, there was a perceptible increase in the number of cases, and in the pockets of six who took their own lives in Central Park within a few weeks of one another, was found a copy of his argument.

Police Justice Quigley, of Brooklyn, has just been removed from office because of partiality shown to the strikers in the recent riots. He received many popular expressions of encouragement during the strike, because he habitually discharged those brought into court accused of cutting the wires and assaulting non-union men; but now the troubles are over and the sentiments of law and order are uppermost, he has paid the penalty of perverting justice.

The Brooklyn trolley companies refuse to place fenders on their cars, claiming that there are none yet invented which are satisfactory. Up to date there have been 103 victims, and the property-owners of Brooklyn are beginning to realize that the real estate interests of the city will suffer seriously, unless the corporatious shall be compelled to concede to popular demands. Cars are run through the streets at a speed of from 15 to 26 miles an hour; and Manager Lewis has recently asked the city to pass an ordinance driving the children from the streets and imposing a fine upon the parents of such of them as shall be found on the thoroughfares when the 250 miles of trolley tracks have been laid down.

A mass meeting was held last week in Brooklyn in support of a bill which has been presented to the Legislature, providing that the people of New York, Brooklyn and Buffalo shall be permitted to vote on municipal ownership of street railways. A number of clergymen were present, and gave their cordial support. One of them was afterward taken to task by a railroad man for his presence at the meeting and attitude on the question, and the advice was given that a minister had better "stick to his last." In reply, the clergyman inquired if it was not true that the Brooklyn companies had invested six million dollars and then issued stock to the amount of thirty million, and were attempting to get from the people interest on the twenty-four million which had never been lent to them. The critic admitted that it was so. Then the minister answered, "I do not see how any man who calls himself a Christian can sit still while such a public wrong is perpetrated."

NEWS FROM W. B. STODDARD.

Home Hotel, Pittsburg, March 14, '95.

Dear Cynosure:—Since my last writing I visited in the Shenandoah Valley, Va., as far south as Broadway. Nature has done much to make that section attractive, and productive of prosperity to those who should be favored with homes in its midst. But alas! the marks of sin were manifest here, as elsewhere. The Southern people, as a rule, are hospitable to those they like, and bitter toward those they dislike. This seems to have led to an acquiesing with many who are engaged in sinful practices. Individuals, believing such practices to be wrong, say but little or nothing for fear of arousing the hatred and persecution of those who engage in them. In short, from my observation and conversation with pastors and others, I conclude that free speech is much curtailed. This is, of course, to a considerable extent true in the North, but it is evident that there is a fearlessness of utterance there that is not to be found here. I spoke last Friday evening in the village of Timberville, Va. I was there received and cared for by friends very kindly. This town is favored in not having a single secret society. There are members of different secret societies resident; but they go elsewhere to lodge. There are several German Baptist, Mennonite, Lutheran, and other churches in this section who do not favor the lodges. I am assured that this visit will open the way for other meetings. A convention opens in this city to-day for the purpose of "the unification of all right forces into one grand, aggressive and progressive American National Party." As a prelude to this gathering, Mr. Perkins, of Cleveland, O., gave an address on Woman's Suffrage, last evening. Whether there will be enough present to launch the boat, at this writing, seems somewhat doubtful, but we shall see.

I find several of our loyal supporters here have been summoned hence by death since my last visit. Margaret Mawhinney was a woman little known outside the church of her choice, and her circle of friends. She bore faithful testimony, and supported, as her means would allow, the reforms of the day. John McCune subscribed for the Cynosure for five years in advance when I met him one year ago. He was then in health. Two months ago the call came. He died with the blessed assurance of the Christian. Picking up the paper yesterday morning, I was surprised to see the announcement of the tragic death of our brother, Rev. W. S. Hoover, of Dayton, O. Bro. Hoover was preaching at the time he was taken. He had been referring to the many who had passed beyond the scenes of earth, when he fell forward, and his spirit took its flight. It will be remembered by those who attended the recent Xenia, Ohio, convention that Bro. Hoover was one of the speakers. Let us work, friends, "while the day lasts, for the night of death cometh in which no man can work."

March 15, 1895.—In my letter yesterday I referred to a new national party it was purposed to organize in this city embracing national reform principles. The conference called with this in view is in no way a success. There were 37, including reporters and spectators, present at the morning session, and less than 50 at either the afternoon or evening session. The natural supporters of such a move are taking little or no interest in it. The main trouble seems to be that the leaders have no well-defined plan of action.

After preliminaries, they invited persons present to make addresses suggesting a name for the new party. Several names were suggested. I made inquiry as to what were to be the planks in the new platform. Nobody knew; but it was thought that the planks should accord with the call. As every one present was urged to suggest a name and make a speech, I improved the opportunity to endorse the name "Home Protection Party" provided they put in a plank opposed to the lodge, and proceeded to give reasons why this should be done. There was a general alarm at once, and soon the chairman arose and remarked that they were not there to discuss secret societies; and added, "Everything good in me has come through secret societies."

A majority of those present appeared interested in my remarks, and a motion was made that I be allowed to proceed, as I was in order.

This motion was not put, as I suggested that the time be given to the others, as I did not wish to intrude.

Mrs. Collins, Rev. N. Woodside and others gave the lodge a scoring. The chairman and leaders appeared very uneasy. There have been many good things said. Rev. N. Woodside gave an able address to the few that gathered last evening. I send you a copy of the Gaeette containing the report. W. B. Stoddard.

VICTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

Portland, Ore., Feb. 27, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—Since my last letter to the Cynosure, I have had rather a peculiar experience. The lodgeites have invited me to quit. Not accepting their invitation, they threaten me that if I do not stop, I may expect bodily injury.

After I had spoken on the saloon evil at Sherwood, in Washington county, Oregon, on the night of February 21, I announced that on the next evening I would discuss the lodge. It caused a flutter in the large audience. In fact, ever since the lectures were announced, they were "frothing and foaming."

All day on the 22d, I was the subject of discussion. At a "quilting bee" one lady of pugilistic propensities said: "If I could only get two men, I would go with them and take him out of the town, so that he could not lecture."

Not being brave enough to come out openly, they planned a secret attack. About 5 o'clock in the evening I received, through the mail, the following letter, sent in care of Rev. Mr. Miller, with whom they knew I was staying. I give it verbatim:

"Sherwood, Ore., Feb. 22, 1895.—Rev. Williams:—As friends of the church you represent, and for your bodily comfort, we would warn you not to give your lecture to-night on the secret orders. You will down the U. B. church, do no good, and more than likely leave Sherwood worse than you came. A word to the wise is sufficient.

"Many Citizens."

The house was literally packed to its utmost capacity, including standing-room. I started in by reading the letter, and branded them with cowardice, whoever wrote it. I said: "If you think to scare P. B. Williams from this town, you 'reckon without your host.' I helped fight, through three years of severe struggle, in which I participated in thirty-seven hard-fought battles, and carry four bullet holes, for the freedom of this country, and I propose to have my say."

I felt very much like Colonel Moore, of the 25th Michigan Regiment, at Green River, Tenn., on the 4th of July, 1863. John Morgan, of rebel fame, came with 6,000 cavalry, and demanded a surrender of the fort and bridge. Moore had but 300 men, but he sent word back to Gen. Morgan: "General, if it was any other day than Independence day, I might consider your invitation to surrender, but, if you wish to cross Green River here, come on." He came, and got worsted so completely that he concluded to go twelve miles below and cross.

So, if it had been any other than Washington's birthday, I might have considered the proposition of the lodgemen. I spoke an hour and a half, and was, perhaps, a little more raspy than common, on account of their threats.

If ever people were hot, the lodgeites were at Sherwood, that night. They had not cooled off even the next morning. I played with them while the train was coming. I called the doctor over, and told him to give those lodge fellows an opiate to quiet their nerves. The doctor is a Mason, but too much of a gentleman to act like the rest of them. He bought "Finney on Masonry," and "The Broken Seal," and is willing to investigate. He gave them to understand that he was the friend of your agent.

To show the reader a sample of lodge ignorance at Sherwood, many of them deny that Masons killed Captain Morgan. To support their position, some of them said: "They claim that John Wilkes Booth was killed by Boston Corbett; but, a man told me not long since that he took dinner with the identical Booth that murdered Lincoln, out somewhere in Kansas." This will suffice to show the kind of stuff I had to deal with.

We have some warm friends here. Eight persons subscribed for the Cynosure for one year. Rev. Jacob Womelsdorf has located here. He is a man who believes in and enjoys entire sanctification, and has no use for lodges. He will greatly strengthen the faithful and strongly oppose the wrong.

Rev. Mr. Miller, of the U. B. church, is uncompromisingly opposed to the orders, yet, he has many warm friends who are lodgemen.

Some leading lodgemen came and thanked me for advertising them. I informed them that when they wanted any more such advertising, to get a house and send me word.

At the close of the address, one of our men said to a prominent Odd-fellow: "Was it all false, or did P. B. stumble on to a few facts in regard to the subject?" He answered: "He hit a good many facts."

A nice young man came up and said: "I have been an Odd-fellow, but when I got salvation I had no use for Odd-fellowship." I said: "You know, then, whether I gave a true exposition of Odd-fellowship." He simply answered: "You've got it all right."

From Sherwood I went to North Yamhill, and spoke three times, to very large and appreciative audiences. Four signed for the paper here, and lasting good was done, I believe.

I am taking three days' rest before starting to the Sound. Continue to pray for us.

SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE COVENANTER CHURCH.

Bloomington, Ind., Feb. 20, '95.

Editor Cynosure:—I was startled by reading an article in your issue of Feb. 14, entitled "The Reason Why," from your Nebraska contributor. He quotes from M. N. Butler's article and says: "We have not to-day a single Protestant denomination of any importance that is in position to be outspoken on this subject." He gives as the main reason that "the Protestant clergy depend upon the good will of their members for their bread and butter."

I have long cherished the hope that my own beloved Covenanter denomination was an exception to this rule, and above all others was in a position to speak out. No other denomination, indeed, is in closer touch with the work of the National Christian Association.

I remember with gratitude that at our last general synod it was voted: "In reference to the communication from the National Christian Association, referred to us, we recommend that, as in previous reports, we repeat our commendation of the work of this association and urge our congregations to contribute to the furtherance of their work." And we are glad to note among the officers of the National Christian Association, or its auxiliaries, the names of ten well known Covenanters. But many facts of recent date cause me to fear that the secret empire has a stronger grip on us than we realize.

At our last synod we began to make extensive preparation for a convention of our American, Irish and Scotch congregations, to meet in Glasgow, Scotland, in July, 1896. Our popular men in America and Great Britain are appointed to speak on a variety of reform topics which specially relate to us as a denomination. But the program contains no reference to the question of secret societies. And yet this is one of the most dangerous evils threatening our church both in this country and in the British Isles. Truly it may be said while we slept the enemy has sown tares. One of our missionaries we sent recently to a foreign field had to be recalled, because it was found on his arrival that he was a Freemason. Several instances in our church in this land have come to light in which when the pastor went to conduct a funeral service of one of his members, Freemasons or Odd-fellows came forward claiming the deceased as one of their members, and their right to perform their ritual. We have reason to fear that our church in Great Britain is still more endangered by this evil. It is a question that occupies far less place in our pulpits and publications than its importance demands. Our young people especially in our city congregations are in great danger. I find that no less than half a dozen of our ministers who graduated at the Indiana State University here in Bloomington, were members of college secret societies when they were students. This is alarming if as Dr. Blanchard once said, "Membership in a secret society is like milk sickness from which the victim never entirely recovers."

Every student of history knows that the Covenanters in their early history suffered more in Scotland from the despotism of Freemasonry than any other church. They were betrayed by King Chares II., who was a Freemason and took the Royal Arch degrees while he was an exile in Holland. Freemasons in England and Scotland were plotting in secret to establish monarchy and despotism, and their plot was to bring their fellow Mason, Charles II., over from Holland, and place him upon the throne. While he was an exile over the water, English Masons were in the habit of placing a tub of water on the floor of their lodge rooms, and as they drank their liquor, they would touch their glasses over the tub and thus they said they drank to Charles over the water, and so they avoided the penalty of treason.

The Covenanters then, like too many Covenanters to-day, were not aware of the diabolical and despotic character of Masonry, and they made the awful mistake of giving their influence to the Royalists, and the Masons, to enthrone a Masonic king. Although Charles solemnly swore to stand by and to carry out the principles of a Covenanter reformation, yet his conscience was depraved and corrupted by Masonic oaths; and when after long scheming he finally got the power in his hands he turned upon the Covenanters and tried to exterminate them by long and cruel persecution. More than two thousand of them were driven from their pulpits in one day. More than 20,000 Covenanters were put to death by Charles the Second, and his brother and successor James the First. Claverhouse, who commanded the royal troops, scoured the moors and glens of Scotland, hunting down and shooting the Covenanters like partridges or wild beasts. They were commanded to swear to the Masonic king as supreme, and if they refused they were instantly shot. If they were found holding any prayer meetings or conventicles, or hearing any of the expelled ministers preach, they were instantly shot. Claverhouse swore the most fearful oaths that he would "entirely exterminate the miserable, whining, Psalm-singing race of Covenanters from the earth, until there would not be enough of Covenanter blood left in Scotland to make a dish of soup for a dog." Surely, after all that Covenanters have suffered from Masonry, and now that it is a hundred times stronger than then, it is important enough to be discussed at this international Covenanter convention.

NEWS FROM THE FLOATING CHAPEL.

Pekin, Ill.

Although our friends have not heard much recently from the floating chapel, it must not be supposed that we have been idle.

We intended, while coming up the Illinois river last summer, to make a trip down the Mississippi among the Freedmen this winter. But as we have been now over six years on the rivers, chills and fever were making such inroads on our strength that it is providential that navigation closed while we were at Pekin, Ill., and the floating chapel is now frozen in the ice at that place.

The cold weather of an Illinois winter is having a very beneficial effect on health, and by October we hope to start out well equipped for an extensive trip among the Freedmen along the Mississippi and its tributaries.

This delay will be no waste of time. We are now lecturing and preaching in various towns in Illinois, spending a week in each place, and several successful revivals have followed our work.

For ten years I have been looking for a stereopticon picture illustrating the destruction of Jerusalem. About a year ago, brother Bonham, a Free Methodist preacher, sent me two; one shows the Roman army encamped around the city with battering rams pounding at the walls, while the second picture shows the Roman soldiers scaling the walls and the Temple on fire. These pictures aid me very much in assaulting the strongholds of skepticism. There is much more infidelity in this country than is supposed by those who work only among people who can be gotten inside of a church. On the floating chapel we reach thousands who no more think of going inside of a church than we think of going to the penitentiary.

As I was riding in the caboose from Emden, Illinois, to Pekin, I conversed with a gentleman from Racine, Wis., who admired Ingersoll. In speaking of him he said:

"He does not say there is no hereafter, but that he does not believe there is any."

A man came from the other side of the car and sat down beside the speaker, saying:

"I believe Bob is about right."

I was glad to get the two skeptics together before me, and I asked them if they had ever read of the destruction of Jerusalem as described by Josephus?

"No."

When you get home, said I, you should get a copy of Antiquities of the Jews by Josephus and read it. He tells us that the Roman army surrounded the city and that eleven hundred thousand men perished; that the famine became so great that after everything else had been eaten, they began to eat the dead bodies; and that one woman went so far as to cook and eat her own babe. After you have read these facts, read what Moses says shall come upon them if they do not keep the law. He says, in the 28th chapter of Deuteronomy, concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, which shall occur fifteen hundred years after, the Lord shall bring a nation against thee from afar, (1400 miles the Roman army came) as swift as the eagle flieth, (how did Moses know 800 years before the Roman Nation came into existence that the eagle should be its ensign?) whose tongue thou shalt not understand; and he shall besiege thee in all thy gates until thy high and fenced walls come down and thou shall eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and thy daughters, in the siege and in the straitness wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee. Now, let your Bob, as you call him, stand back there with Moses three thousand five hundred years ago; and as Moses again begins to write of the things that shall come to pass, Mr. Ingersoll says: "Don't make any more mistakes, Moses; you have made enough already. Don't you know that there is no hereafter?"

I asked these men to continue reading what Josephus says concerning the destruction of Jerusalem. After the fearful destruction of life, many thousands were taken across the sea in ships to Egypt to be sold into slavery; but the market was so over-stocked that there was no sale for them. Now imagine that Moses lays aside the microscope with which he has for a moment been looking at the pigmy before him, and continues: If thou will not observe to do all the words of this law that are written in this book, the Lord shall bring thee into Egypt again with ships, and there ye shall be sold unto your enemies for bondmen and bondwomen, and no man shall buy you. Now you may invite your Bob to step down through thirty-five centuries and look back over the history of the Jews, and as he recalls the declarations of Moses, he will be forced to admit that from that time there have been over three thousand years of "hereafter;" and it is reasonable to suppose that there will continue to be a hereafter when all the infidels are forgotten. I told them that if they ever happened to stay over night in a city where I was lecturing, either in a hall or on the river in our floating chapel, I should be glad to have them attend, and I would give them another chapter.

COLPORTEUR WORK IN TENNESSEE.

Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 24, 1895.

Dear Cynosure:—With the cheerful consent of my aged and infirm wife, and followed by her prayers for my success, I left our home in McNairy, and after an hour's ride, arrived in Jackson.

Here I engaged in personal work, particularly with ministers of the Gospel, in the anti-secrecy reform.

I have the satisfaction of knowing that my labors are not in vain.

Sabbath morning I visited the jail, and preached Christ to the prisoners. Then walked five miles into the country where I occupied the pulpit of Rev. A. Gray. My text was, "Whatsoever ye do, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus."

I endeavored to set forth the exalted character of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the baseness of these false worships, in Christian lands, from which Christ and his atonement are excluded.

The pastor followed me in remarks at some length, commending the effort, and turning around he grasped my hand and expressed his thankfulness that these things had been faithfully declared.

The next day I took the train for Memphis, where I had previously given addresses in several places.

Here is much need for work on reform lines, temperance, Sabbath reform and anti-secrecy work.

Yours in loving service,

C. Powers.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND THE SABBATH.

Editor Cynosure:—Was it desecration? Ought it to be a practice? What? The big civic meeting held last Sunday, March 3, to promote reform in the municipal government of Chicago? And should we hold such meetings on Sundays?

To the first question I answer, yes; to the second, no. It seems a great mistake of reverends and church members to use their Lord's day for merely "civic" interests. Why? Because it was the first day of joy over the resurrection of the Redeemer of the world that completed the Gospel which is the power of God for the salvation of mankind. No day is so appropriate for the preaching of this Gospel. The time of no other day is so hallowed. We have six other days to attend to secular matters public and private, and Christians ought not to allow these to interfere, as public secular meetings necessarily do with sacred time.

The divine law has been completely fulfilled for man whose faith and obedience thereafter to the greater than Moses' entitles believers to the blissful enjoyments under his authority.

There is a time for everything: to be born, to die. How all-important to use the right time in life to do the right things! This day of rest from secular labors is the appropriate time for special preparation for eternity. Therefore, let Christians be zealous on at least every first day of the week to celebrate their Lord's victory over death and joyfully tell to others of the life and immortality brought to light by their Lord and Saviour. In doing this faithfully there will be no convenient season for the discussion of municipal corruption on the Lord's day. Of course, such "civic" matters ought to be attended to on some other day.

Senex.

[The Fourth Commandment is the test commandment of the ten.

Again and again it has been made the starting point, the entering wedge of great moral changes in the life of an individual and of nations.

The man who has little or no regard for the Lord's day, has within him the moral tone of an idolater, a thief, a liar, or a murderer.

The government which fails to observe the Sabbath sets a premium on every sin against the moral law. A strict observance of the Sabbath by us as a nation would at once do away with many of the corruptions which call forth such meetings as the one above referred to.—Ed. Cynosure.]

A. J. GORDON.

Boston, March 5, 1895.

The Board of Directors of the New England Christian Association do hereby express their deep sorrow for the death of Dr. A. J. Gordon by which the Church of Christ has been deprived of one of her brightest lights, and every good word and work of an earnest advocate and tireless worker; that we deplore the loss which the anti-secrecy cause has sustained in his sudden departure, while we rejoice in the noble testimony he has left behind him by which, "he being dead yet speaketh."

We desire also to express hereby our tender sympathy with Mrs. Gordon and her bereaved family, and our earnest prayer that the abiding consolations of the Holy Spirit may be theirs so richly, that their sorrow shall be turned into joy, in the blessed recollection of the great work he was permitted to accomplish, and the glorious reward into which he has now entered.

HOW TO PACK APPLES FOR MARKET.

Use Care and Best of Materials to Get the Best Results.

In every instance use new barrels. Do not use the small size barrel, such as cranberries are packed in. It is not a barrel in contents. It costs as much freight as the full size barrel, and buyers in England make a distinction in price from 50 cents to 75 cents a barrel.

When flour barrels are used and every care taken in dusting or washing out, there is always enough flour secreted in the crows, or seams, to dust over the apples to give them a very uninviting appearance when opened up for inspection on arrival in Europe.

There is great difficulty this year to even obtain sufficient secondhand flour barrels. Where there is such difficulty I would advise the use of a case made with two compartments, such compartments to measure just 15½ inches square each.

Pack the apples in them, and without papering, and pack tight, same as in barrels. This size case will hold just about as much as a barrel. The case should be made close and not open. The ends and middle pieces should be made of seven-eighths to inch wood, and sides, tops and bottoms of three-eighths inch wood.

In packing use only the most carefully selected fruit. Apples are sold in England largely by auction. Two barrels are generally sent to the auction room as samples of the lot. One barrel is opened, shown at the inviting end. The other barrel is dumped into a basket about 4 feet square and a foot deep, which shows what is in the middle and bottom of the barrel. Buyers pay no attention to the barrel showing the fine surface, but buy from what they see in the basket, so packers must realize any deception in packing is immediately detected.

The great trouble with many of our New England packers is that, as a rule, they pack too slack. The barrel should be well shaken when half and three-quarters packed, so as to settle the apples together snugly. The barrels should be filled at least an inch above the chines, so that pressure by a hand screw is necessary to get the end in. If packers would do this in the orchard, it would do away with the necessity and save expense of opening slack barrels and filling them.

The barrels should be well nailed and head linings used top and bottom, and of sufficient length to take in all pieces that form the head. There should be no marks of any description on either end of the barrel except the kind of apples and the stencil address of the party they are to go to. Do not expose apples to the sun's rays after being picked and before barreling. Do not let them lie on the ground either. It is far better to pack from the trees into barrels as fast as picked. Remember, windfalls will not do to ship under any circumstances.

How to Dry the Hair.

The hair will dry much more quickly after it has been washed if it is rubbed with warm towels than with merely dry ones. As fast as one becomes damp it should be thrown aside and a fresh, dry, warm one taken. When the hair is moderately dry after this, it should be brushed quite dry with warm brushes. This method imparts a luster to the hair which nothing else gives.

GEOMETRY AND DISEASE

May seem but little related to Medicine and Health. Yet the shortest distance between two points is a straight line; the shortest distance between disease and health is by the line of Hood's Sarsaparilla. If you want to save suffering, time and money take the shortest distance, the straight line. Why is this the shortest line? Because Hood's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, and so removes the underlying cause of disease, cleanses the fountain at the head.

The Christian Cynosure.

WM. I. PHILLIPS, PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 21, 1895.

"Our help is in the name of the Lord, who made heaven and earth."—Psa. 124: 8.

We insert in the current number of the Cynosure resolutions in reference to the life and character of Rev. A. J. Gordon, passed by the Board of Directors of the National Christian Association; and also,on another page, those of the New England Association. In these days of time-serving and moral cowardice we cannot overestimate the value of such men, in keeping up the moral tone of our nation and of the world. And when they are taken away, we cannot but cry out with the Psalmist, "Help, Lord: for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail from among the children of men."

As we step out, for a little while, from the quiet and sacred precincts of the home, and look from the Cynosure office over the moral world, our heart is stirred with feelings akin to those aroused as one stands by the ocean, and watches the incoming tide, and hears the steady roar of the breakers, and braces himself against the strong winds that threaten to carry him away, while the moral issues of the day seem like waves rising and falling on the bosom of the mighty deep.

The most important of all these questions is the one which divided the children of Israel on Mt. Carmel when Elijah stood alone, calm, majestic, by the repaired altar of Jehovah, while four hundred prophets of Baal rushed frantically around his altar crying and cutting themselves "with knives and lancets," is the Lord Jehovah, God, or Baal?

No wonder "men's hearts are failing them for fear."

There are three secret altars where Satan is worshiped, to one Christian church, in Christian (?) America! The name of these altars is legion, but one hateful, lying, spirit presides at all. In the words of our lamented first editor: "No matter what the temples, altars or shrines; if not Christ's they are Satan's. Sun, moon, stars, all natural forces; brute beasts, creeping things; wood, stone, metals, carved and shaped; kings, priests; human monsters and familiar spirits; titled and sainted and worshiped, have all, in turn, been used by these invisible foes (devils), rivals and antagonists of God, to hide their hateful presence under, and so get near enough to men to attract their worship, mesmerize their natures, weaken their understanding, confuse their intellects, inflame their passions, sear their consciences, harden their hearts, wean them from God and goodness, and bring them to hell, their final and hateful abode."

The recent Woman's Congress, held in Washington, D. C., and fully reported in the Literary Digest, suggests another important question. Important, because it affects the welfare of every human being; and because it will never be settled, until it is settled right.

Among the multitude of questions discussed, a resolution was adopted, favoring "a rational divorce law." Mrs. Ellen B. Dietrick, the chairman of the committee on dress-reform, took the ground that "every sane adult human being has the right to freely make his or her own contracts, and that legislation has no right to interfere, save where the liberty of one conflicts with the equal liberty of another." "Such a system of free contract," she said, "worked well in one of the greatest civilizations of antiquity, and there seems to be no reason why it might not work equally well now." The Rev. Anna H. Shaw, the new Vice-President of the Council, advocated prevention of divorce through better education in the duties of home life, and declared that she had no more respect for nine-tenths of the marriages than she had for the marriage relations established between men and women outside of the marriage rites.

The questions immediately rise, what is a rational divorce law? Who are sane? Does "ignorance of home duties" occasion nine-tenths of the divorce cases which dishonor woman and disgrace our land?

We confess to feelings of mingled alarm and disgust when we read of such conclusions arrived at, by an assembly of intelligent, many of them wealthy, and many of them, by profession, at least, Christian women.

The gentle Whittier wrote of > "Woman, last at the cross,

> And earliest at the tomb!"

What an opportunity have these women lost, of giving to the world, in Christ's name and authority, the only rational law of divorce, the law of God: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."—Matt. 19: 6.

The labor problem is, just now, one of the questions which "will not down." Cases are constantly recurring of "strikes" and "shut downs," occasioned by the greed of either employers or the employed; and strangely enough each sees the evil of this passion in his antagonist, but is blind to it in himself.

In regard to this problem the New York Weekly Witness says:—

"We must confess that we cannot see any solution of it except in a general acceptance of the sovereignty of Christ, and a general submission to his law of universal beneficence.

"Most of us have no power to interfere in any practical way in this ever-broadening conflict, even if we knew of any definite standard by which the rights and wrongs of each case could be determined. But we each have the power to discourage greed in others by conquering greed in our own hearts, with the aid of the Spirit of God, and by living modestly and setting an example of humility and contentment to those about us. And we each have the opportunity to exalt Christ in our own hearts and lives, and to present him to others as a satisfying portion, whose proper place in our affections cannot be filled by any amount of worldly success."

With this should be associated the utterance of Gladstone: "Talk about questions of the day, there is but one such question, and that is the Gospel. It can and will correct everything that needs correction."

THE INSURANCE LODGES.

One of the motives to which Satan is now appealing to build up the secret lodge world, is love of family. He always uses some such means of drawing men into his snares. In the beginning it was desire for knowledge; in slavery times it was a pretence of missionizing the blacks; in the saloon it is the desire of happiness; in these lodges it is the wish to leave wife and children in easy circumstances. Thus, at the present time, thousands of men who have not had, and have not now, any interest in the foolish and wicked ceremonies of lodgism are enrolled in these fraternities. They are many of them Christian gentlemen, and, of course, have no taste for nor interest in the "funny work" which, to the ignorant and depraved, is so large a part of their narrow lives.

These gentlemen want insurance, not companionship. The latter they have in their homes and churches, but for the former they must pay, and the lodges offer the insurance at a lower rate than open companies, and so they unite and pay their assessments, though they never or seldom attend the meetings. The motive is one which all must approve. He that provideth not for his own has denied the faith, and is worse then an unbeliever. The means of doing this, however, may be justly questioned, and on this point we remark:

1. That it is dangerous to adopt bad means even to accomplish good ends. Secret societies are condemned by the example of Jesus Christ, by the words of Jesus, by the testimony of history and common sense. It may be safely assumed that injurious as they are found to be to the family while the husband lives, they will not benefit it, after he is dead.

2. The honest, hard-working mechanic, farmer or merchant who unites with these lodges is at the mercy of the other sort of men who make these orders and manage them. The Grand Chaplain of The Iron Hall was, we are told, a clerk on fifteen or twenty dollars a week. As a religious officer of this insurance lodge, his salary was $7,500 per year. We believe that he actually received $15,000 for offering one prayer at the biennial session of the Grand Lodge. Men who wanted to help their families paid that thief his salary.

3. In cases where the lodge treasurers run away with the money it is next to impossible to punish them. They are usually Masons, Oddfellows, etc., and are not compelled to disgorge or suffer. The man who was driven out of the Woodmen for forging death proofs and stealing money, is now reported to be at the head of another secret order which he has invented, and to be reaping golden harvests from honest but foolish men who wish to insure the comfort of their families.

4. The principle of organization is such that the security is sure to fail at the time when it is most needed. While the insured are young and the death rate is small, the insurance is cheap, provided there is no stealing; but when men grow old the assessments must, in the nature of the case, increase, and the burden must at last be dropped. There can be no reliable insurance on such a plan.

5. In addition to this financial insecurity all Christians should be influenced by the command to avoid close fraternal association with unbelievers, and the added truth that even these insurance lodges have often the deistic creed, and the Christless prayers of Masonry. A gentleman attending the Grand Lodge of the Woodmen, last December, at Springfield, in this State, said, on being asked if they had any religion in that order: "Oh, yes! Every meeting is opened and closed with prayer." This is the root objection to lodges. They are devices to content men without Jesus Christ until death comes, and souls are ruined forever.

MISSIONS AND MASONRY.

A union Home Missonary rally was held in Wheaton, Ill., last week. The evening session was in the College chapel. The first address was made by Rev. James Tompkins, Secretary of the Illinois Home Missionary Society.

Mr. Tompkins related an incident which occurred in San Francisco at a joss house which he visited. "As I entered," he said, "I noticed an American flag hung so that the breeze caught its folds and made them float over the heathen temple. And as I stood within and saw men prostrate themselves before the dumb idols, church bells rang out their glad invitation to a Gospel service to be conducted by B. Fay Mills."

"And this foreign heathenism in our 'Home Land' is not confined to San Francisco," said the speaker; "it is in Illinois; it is in Chicago; perhaps it is in Wheaton!"

Dr. Tompkins, it is true, referred primarily to the fact that there are Chinese in Illinois who worship their little images set up in their places of business. But his words apply just as truly and beautifully, and more powerfully, to the fact that there are in Chicago more than 1,000 Masonic lodges, where men "worship they know not what." Not God; for Jesus said, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." And Christ is not in the lodge (or secret chamber). Matt. 24: 26.

And in Wheaton, to our shame be it said, twice monthly, a few of our neighbors get together and worship "the Grand Architect of the universe," who, or whatever that may be.

The gentleman who followed Mr. Tompkins, a General Secretary of the National Home Missionary Society, expressed his pleasure at having an opportunity to speak in Wheaton College, and said that whenever he came in contact with Wheaton influence, as he frequently did in his labors, he found it helpful and eminently Christian. He then made an earnest appeal for missions in the West, and graphically described some very interesting experiences in South Dakota, and the mining camps of California.

We learn from an editorial in the Cynosure October 13, 1892, that this same brother when in California encouraged three young men, whom their pastor was dissuading from joining the Masonic lodge, to do so, telling them: (1.) That Masons themselves do not regard their oaths as binding. (2). That the Masonry of Finney, as declared in his book, is not the Masonry of to-day. (3.) That he had taken the Royal Arch degree, and that the Royal Arch Mason does not swear to keep the secrets of a companion, "murder and treason not excepted."

We do not give the name of this brother We hope he has repented of his sin and given up this "foreign heathenism" in this enlightened land.

If he has done so, will he not kindly stand up and testify, for the sake of the young men who may fall into the same net in which he was taken, to their eternal destruction?

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. Wm. Fenton writes for tracts and Cynosures in a way that indicates that he is well and busy.

—Bro. B. A. Imes, Knoxville, Tenn., a colored "American missionary" of some note, and an earnest Christian, writes of his interest in the anti-secret work, and his willingness to assist by speaking if desired.

—M. N. Butler, well known by the Cynosure readers, is teaching a large school in St. Joseph, Mo. Has taught fifty-nine different writing schools. We are glad to know that wherever he goes, the light shines.

—The following "good confession" was given to Bro. W. B. Stoddard, and is worthy to be followed by others: "I regret and repent, before God and man, of ever having joined the Masons. William Cunningham, N. Y. City."

—Rev. R. J. George, a professor of the Covenanter Theological Seminary, will assist Bro. M. A. Gault, who is in poor health, at the communion service in his church, May 1. Mr. Gault's article on "Secret Societies and the Covenanter Church," in this issue, will be read with interest.

—S. F. Porter, our friend who has been working in the South during the winter, has come North with the early birds, and gives the Cynosure a call. During the now nearly sixty years since he was ordained to the ministry, he has never lost an appointment to preach on account of sickness.

—Mr. Robert Jones, a friend of the truth in the suburbs of Toronto, Canada, recently put a young man, his coachman, through the first three degrees of Masonry, for the enlightenment of some young men whom he wished to deter from entering the lodge. He thinks the initiation had the desired effect.

—We are cheered this week by receiving notice of the formation of a new "Anti-secrecy Association," in California, auxiliary to the National Association. A copy of the constitution is sent to the Cynosure, subscribed to by our old friend, L. B. Lathrop, and others. We trust that this little organization will become "mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds."

—Rev. J. B. Galloway, long connected with our work in Wisconsin, writes from Poynette: "An A. P. A. lodge was organized here last Saturday night, with some thirty members, so I hear. I am told also," he says, "that many preachers are in the order. The question of the day is not so much, what is going to become of the world, as, what is going to become of the church, in the hands of such leaders?"

—Bro. P. B. Williams, our Pacific agent, writes encouragingly of the work on that coast. He says: "I had the largest crowd last night that I ever spoke to on the lodge question. There were at least twenty preachers present, and about six or seven hundred in the audience, largely men. The Post Intelligencer, a leading paper in Seattle, gave a fairer report of the lecture than I expected."

—Brother N. R. Johnson, our "friend in every righteous cause," sends some personal recollections of Hon. Frederick Douglass, which are very interesting, but which we cannot give fully. At one time when leaving brother Johnson's house, where he had been a guest, Mr. Douglass was asked for his name in an autograph album. He hastily wrote: "Right is of no sex, truth is of no color—we are the equal children of a common Father, and all men are brothers. Frederick Douglass."

—W. H. Taylor, the defaulting treasurer of South Dakota, was arrested in Mexico, Sunday, March 10th. Can anyone give reliable information as to his lodge relations? The length of time which elapsed between his crime and capture seems to indicate that he had such relations. To betray public trust is becoming an every-day occurrence. Men, not worthy to be trusted, are put into offices of trust to an alarming extent, and if the true connection between their lodge relation and their wicked deeds could be made to appear, it would be of great service to the cause of justice and good government.

DIRECTORS' MEETING.

The Board of Directors of the National Christian Association met March 9th at the Association building, 221 West Madison St,, Chicago. President Charles A. Blanchard presided at the meeting. The following members were present: C. A. Blanchard, Dr. J. A. Collins, E. A. Cook, T. B. Arnold, J. M. Hitchcock, Prof. Elliot Whipple, Prof. H. F. Kletzing and E. B. Wylie.

The General Secretary, Wm. I. Phillips, met with the Board and expedited the business by having the matters calling for deliberation well in hand. Reports from the recent State conventions were especially encouraging. Plans for the greater success of the publications of the Association, and particularly the Cynosure, were entertained. The committees to whom this devising of ways and means was given were continued till the next meeting, when more definite reports will be given. The feeling was unanimous that an effort should be made by all friends everywhere to extend the circulation of the literature of the Association. Deep regret was expressed for the appearance recently of objectionable matter in the studiously pure columns of the Cynosure. A committee was appointed to draft a note of explanation and regret to the readers of the Cynosure.

A committee consisting of Dr. J. A. Collins, Prof. H. Z. Kletzing and Wm. I. Phillips was instructed to prepare an expression of the Board's appreciation of the late Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., who was president of the National Christian Association for the year 1893–94. The following resolution was passed:

Resolved, As the sense of this Board in view of the death of Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., a former president of this Association, we express our admiration for his noble Christian character, his work as a servant of Jesus Christ, and as a fearless defender and promoter of every good cause. We regard his death as a loss to the world and to the cause we are seeking to promote.

The meeting was adjourned, after prayer by Dr. Collins.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Preparations for the International Christian Endeavor Convention.—Free lectures on the Bible by Dr. Muir.—Marion Harland takes the lecture stand.—Baltimore M. E. Conference and woman.—Rev F. D. Power and the rich ruler.—Income tax.—List of patents.

Steps were this week taken by the committee in charge of arrangements for the reception and entertainment of delegates and visitors to the International Christian Endeavor Convention, to be held in Washington next year, which makes it certain that there will be no difficulty about getting places to hold public meetings during the sessions of the convention, either at Boston, this year, or at Washington, next year. The Washington committee has arranged with the Boston committee to have two tents made, each with a seating capacity of 10,000. These tents will be made in time to be used at this year's Boston convention, and will then be sent to Washington, and packed away, to be used again at the '96 convention. It is probable that these tents will be kept and rented to cities in which future International conventions are held, as even in cities having ample hall facilities to accommodate the conventions, the coolness of the tents will make them desirable at the season of the year in which the conventions are held.

Justice Brewer, of the Supreme Court, introduced Rev. Dr. J. J. Muir, pastor of the E. Street Baptist church, who this evening delivered, in the Metropolitan M. E. church, the third in the series of free public lectures on the Bible, under the auspices of the American Society of Religious Education, his theme being, "The Bible and National Welfare." It was handled in a masterly manner, entirely in keeping with a sermon delivered by Dr. Muir to his own congregation, last Sunday, under the title, "Is the Bible a Failure?" and from the text: "But the word of the Lord endureth forever."

It was this week announced that Mrs. E. P. Terhune (Marion Harland), who is visiting Washington friends, will shortly deliver a course of lectures, in the first Congregational church, descriptive of what she saw while traveling through the Holy Land last year.

The refusal of the Baltimore M. E. Conference to allow women to sit as lay members of the conference was no surprise in Washington, as the same conference did the same thing last year. The friends of the admission of women say their cause is gaining strength and point to the increase of the vote, in favor of women being admitted, over that of last year as proof. If the Washington members of that conference had the power, women would be admitted.

In a sermon on "The Rich Young Ruler," who asked the Master what he should do to obtain eternal life, and was told to sell all he had and give the proceeds to the poor, Rev. Frederick D. Power, of the Garfield Memorial Christian church, paid his respects to a professor of Johns Hopkins University, who, in a recent lecture, in Washington, criticized ministers as a class, charging them with giving more attention to theology than to sociology, and with denying the literal interpretation of the advice of Jesus to this young ruler. Mr. Power said he knew of no minister who did not interpret Christ's statement with reference to riches in this passage just as it reads; and, that he thought it about time for Christian people to become disgusted with "these learned chatter-boxes," who assumed to lecture preachers of the Gospel and churches on their short comings and misdemeanors, arrogating to themselves all the virtues. He also expressed the opinion that Christ was speaking to the young ruler alone, and that the command given him would not necessarily apply to other persons. He went further, and said that when Christ said it would be hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven, he did not say that a poor man could enter easier; that riches could have no moral character; and Christ never said wealth was a bad thing; that riches were good or bad, just as a man made them; that they might be, and often were, an especial blessing to the man who possesses them and uses them properly; that he could not see how poverty possessed any special virtue, and that while a rich man might be purse proud, a poor man might be consumed with a restless ambition to fill his purse. It will be seen that Mr. Power's views are different from those held by many in regard to portions of the subject treated upon.

The U. S. Supreme Court will this week take a recess until the 25th inst., and it is expected that on that day a decision will be handed down on the income tax case. Should that decision be against the constitutionality of the tax, an extra session of Congress will have to be called to provide a way of raising the revenue which will be lost by such a decision.

THE POWER OF CHEERFULNESS.

Have you never noticed the power of one cheerful Christian life? Have you never seen a girl in a household who, having given her heart to God, goes through the family a joyous epistle of religion, until the father comes to believe, and the mother comes to believe, and all the brothers and sisters come to believe? Have you never seen the power of one Christian man in a village, going from house to house, and from shop to shop, and from store to store, living out the brighter phases of the Christian life, by his manner recommending the gladdest religion that the world ever saw? I do not think that any of us have fully tested the power of a Christian sun-bath, of a beaming face, of exhilerant Christian behavior. —Christian Herald and Signs of our Times.

WHAT GOD HAS DONE.

MAN MADE RIGHTEOUS BY THE GRACE OF CHRIST.

Rev. Madison C. Peters Preaches Practical Theology For Plain People—Refuse God's Gifts and You Cannot Attain Heaven. Wishing and Choosing.

Christ bore human sin as a representative of man before the divine law—a sacrifice for sin, a substitute for man and a satisfaction to law. Christ, the Lord himself, suffered on account of the broken law in order that the majesty of the law might be honored to the full. Some time ago one of our judges was called upon to try a prisoner who had been his companion in early youth. It was a crime for which the penalty was a heavy fine. The judge did not diminish the fine, but fined the prisoner to the full. Some who knew his former relation to the offender thought him somewhat unkind thus to carry out the law, while others praised his impartiality. All were surprised when the judge quitted the bench and himself paid every farthing of the penalty. He had shown his respect for the law and his good will to the man who had broken it. He exacted the penalty, but paid it himself. That is just what God has done in the person of his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, and for the sake of Christ's righteousness we shall be treated as righteous, being made righteous by his grace. Some years ago a man of high standing married an Indian girl in one of our western cities, for he saw in her the capabilities of noble womanhood. She was educated and subsequently moved in the highest circles of society, for the sake of her husband, who was held in the highest esteem. The doctrine that God treats sinners with favor for the sake of his Son finds many analogies even in human society.

But must I not wait till I am drawn? Wait for him who has all these years been waiting for you? "Behold, I stand at the door and knock," cries the patient Saviour. It is he who is seeking you and waiting for you, and not you for him. Why, he has been trying to bring you to him all these years, and now, instead of waiting to be "drawn" to the Father, stop resisting and come.

"I am unable to come. I am a sinner." That is just the reason why you are to come to Christ. You are not to stop on account of your sins, but seek the Lord because of them. Suppose the man with a withered hand, whom Christ met in the temple, when Christ bade him "stretch it forth," had cried: "Stretch forth my hand? How can I? It is withered!" Of course his hand would never have been healed. But when he heard the command he obeyed. The same being who bade him act gave him strength to act. That is just what you have to do. You hear the command. Obey it.

"Seek ye the Lord." Why, is not God everywhere? Yes. Then he needs no seeking, for in him we live and move and have our being. This text does not so much refer as to where God is as to where you are. You have turned your back on him, you have forgotten him, and so, because he has not been in your thoughts, you have, in a spiritual sense, lost the Lord. You are to realize that there is a God. Your thought, love and desire are to come toward him, and thus you will find God.

There are many who, with a burdened heart, say, "I wish I were a Christian!" But all your wishing will never make you one. There is a great difference between wishing to be one and choosing to be one. A wish is not of itself a purpose. You may wish to go to Washington, but unless you act accordingly, unless you make your preparations, go to the depot and get your ticket, and instead of sitting down in the depot and wishing yourself there get aboard the train, you will never get there. So if you want to go to the capital of the skies you must get aboard the line of Christian influences that will bear you there.

When I was a boy, my mother once provided a singing school teacher and books, and though I had an ear and a voice I would not go to school and learn music, and now that I can neither sing nor play whose fault is it that I was never allowed to join a choir? Did the leader shut me out? I shut myself out. So, if I refuse God's gifts and shut myself out of heaven, I will have to blame myself, just as I now blame myself for my ignorance of music.

Paul said before the council, "I have lived before God in all good conscience until this day." He thus plainly demonstrates from his own early experience that conscience is by no means an infallible guide. He served God in good conscience not only when he was St. Paul the apostle, but when he was Saul the persecutor. The sundial is an ingenious contrivance, but of no use when the sun does not shine. And so with a man's conscience. It is of use only when the sun of righteousness shines upon it.

Christ's Idea of Home.

Christ never meant that home was to be merely a refectory and dormitory, but a place to live. If you would not have your children lost to you in after life, make home happy to them when they are young. Let it be the place of sparkling joy and innocent amusement, and thus counteract the fashionable tendency of our time to abandon the home and seek pleasure abroad. The reason that so many children make every effort possible to get away from home at night is lack of entertainment at home. Don't reserve all your social charms for friends and strangers abroad and keep dullness for home consumption.

Value of Christian Homes.

What might we not hope for this world if we could fill it with happy Christian homes, supported by true men and presided over by loving women, where every one conspired to adorn the home with all the light the mind can yield and all the love the heart can furnish.

THE POPULAR WOMAN

THAT ONE WHO THINKS OF THE JOYS AND SORROWS OF OTHERS.

Some Thorns In Life's Pathway That Can Be Avoided—Pretty Manners and a Charming Personality Can Be Acquired. The Importance of Little Things.

Of all the qualities that one could name likely to make a woman popular and by that one means likely to make lasting friends for her as well as well wishers among the acquaintances whom she meets in the casual, social way, there is not one perhaps that compares with thoughtfulness.

One speaks of thoughtfulness as a gift, a faculty, and so it is. It is born in some people. Others, with an equally kindly nature and warm heart, have not come by it naturally in the very smallest degree. They don't intend to hurt any one's feelings, but they forget continually, one day the inquiry as to the favorite member of the family which particularly touches and pleases one person; another day the little visit of a few moments to the ailing friend, who has every virtue but the one of fortitude in sickness, and who is sorely aggrieved at anything resembling lack of interest at such a time; the third day some other little personal idiosynerasy on some third acquaintance's part. Little coolnesses supervene that exasperate the thoughtless woman or girl who does not feel herself at all to have been in the wrong. The breach is widened insensibly, and what might have been the pleasant association of years ends perchance in bad feelings of all kinds if not in enmities.

Of course it may be said that in all such feminine fallings out there are two sides. On one side there may have been thoughtlessness, but on the other side there were oversensitiveness and exaction. Now, it never does to be too exacting with one's friends in this imperfect world. One must forgive now and then, one must overlook often. A woman who is perpetually seeing affronts in every act, in every careless word and ill considered opinion, is one of the most trying creatures that the world holds. She martyrizes the members of her family as effectually as if she roasted them on gridirons or tied them to stakes every day. Her friends she wearies and distracts with her senseless sulks her moody, retributive humors and her innuendoes until—more fortunate in being able to do so than her own kith and kin—they finally, with a sigh of relief, drop away from her one by one.

This dreadful feminine type, it must be acknowledged, though, is far less common among our women, or among English women, than among French, Italian or Spanish women. Here women are less sensitive to imaginary affronts and make their own lives and those of others less a burden with resentment of them. But for that very reason thoughtlessness flourishes among them to an extent that would be impossible in those European countries where grievous lessons have taught these who are inclined not to think that they would better learn to do so without delay; also good manners flourish less, for the very essence of good manners is precisely that attitude of the mind that never loses sight of the likes and dislikes, the preferences and the distastes of others.

"Oh, people must not expect to have attention paid to all their whims," cried one young girl the other day. "It is give and take with everything now, and it is a good deal more convenient that it should be so. There's no time for remembering that this one's sensitive on one point, and that that one might take offense if one did not write a particular note or call at a particular time and all the rest of it." This young girl was mistaken. There is plenty of time for remembering such things, and, moreover, thoughtfulness is not a question of time. It is a question of temperament and desire, and it can be acquired if it is not native to the mind.

A woman can force herself to become thoughtful by exercising a little attention and will power. She may not rival those graceful, gracious, charmingly attuned natures that are always doing "pretty things," generous things, attentive things for others, without any effort of memory and as spontaneously as if it were the simple act of breathing. But she may, by absorbing herself less in her own concerns and directing her thoughts to the lives of others, give her mind that pose, as it were, after a time, whence the paying of pretty attentions, the doing of gracious acts, will come of themselves.

And these things "pay." Let no girl entering life deceive herself into believing that they do not. If she even does not want to be gracious and attentive to her fellowkind because of any moral beauty she may see in it, let her be so because of the policy of it. She may contend successfully that it does not "pay" in the short run. Other girls, just as popular, are self absorbed, cold, egotistical, indifferent to others to the point of brutishness, she may claim. But she cannot prove her case for the long run. There the thoughtful disposition tells invariably. It is not gush that makes the genuinely popular woman; it is not beauty nor money nor brains alone, nor even a good heart and a sunny, good tempered disposition—not as measured by the long span.

It is the woman who seems to know by a subtle intuition just when a little note, a few flowers, a message, will strike the right chord, come at the moment when, though quite unconsciously perhaps, the recipient was craving something of the kind. It is the woman whose delicacy is never at fault, who is there just when she is most wanted and not there when she would be de trop, simply because, having formed a habit of thinking of others, she finds it perfectly easy to put herself in their place and to feel as they feel at a given instant. It is the woman who never disappoints. This is the genuinely popular woman.

"Oh, well, in the large things of life no one wants to disappoint," exclaims one woman. "But in the little things"—

Precisely. In the little things. It is the little things that make up life. Did one ever hear of great deeds, isolated heroic actions, making a woman popular? By no means. The little things count. And well they may. They are the hardest.—New York Letter.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning March 24. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic.—Pure thoughts, pure words, pure deeds.—Math. xxiii, 25-28; Ps. li, 6-10. (A temperance topic.)

The life of a man is made up of his thoughts, words and deeds. These are not separate and distinct one from another, but are necessarily interdependent, and each expresses to a greater or less extent the character of the other. To have a true, noble and pure life, therefore, these three attributes of the life must each possess these characteristics.

There must necessarily be pure thoughts, words and deeds if the person be pure. The thoughts cannot be impure and the life pure. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit nor an evil tree good fruit." The stream must partake of the qualities of the fountain in which it has its source. There may be an attempt to have the outward life have the appearance of purity when impurity abides within. Many like the Pharisees try to "make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess." But God knows the heart as well as the words and the outward life, and any attempt to deceive Him is a miserable failure, and He will bring all who thus try to deceive Him into judgment.

Purity of thought is the great necessity to purity of words and deeds. Sin is first conceived in the heart. Then it is expressed in words, and at the last manifests itself in deeds. When David had repented of his sin and desired once more to be upright before God, he did well to pray, "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." The heart needed first of all to be cleansed before the life could be what he desired. As with David, so it is with all. If the life has been sinful and we have repented of our sin, we should ask God first of all to renew our hearts. If the heart is right with God, the words and deeds of the life will also be right with him.

It is well to remember also that God demands and expects entire purity—purity in the heart, in the speech and in the behavior. In fact, he will be satisfied with nothing short of this. In the days of Noah "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually," and He destroyed the world because of its sinfulness. Time and again Christ denounced the Pharisees for their hypocrisy—for making a show of godliness when the heart was wrong. As with the thoughts, so it is with our words and deeds.

But how may the heart be pure so that the words and deeds may be pure? There is but one way. God alone can purify the heart. If He purges us, we shall be clean; if He washes us, we shall be white as snow. Resolutions, reformation will not cleanse the heart. God only can do that.

Christian Endeavor Briefs.

Seven years ago the Chicago Christian Endeavor union was founded, with 15 societies. It now numbers 380 societies, with a membership of 17,000.

Maryland has 350 societies and a membership of 15,000 Endeavorers.

Among the interesting features of the programme for the next convention, to be held in Boston, will be the presentation of the various banners to city unions.

The Free St. Matthew's Mission society of Glasgow supports a hospital at Tiberias and maintains a girl at Livingstonia.

The juniors of the Methodist church, Colorado Springs are supporting a girl in Fuchau Mission school, China. They have distributed the past quarter 259 bouquets, with Scripture texts attached; also a large quantity of good literature.

The Christian Endeavor union of Hopkinsville, Ky., has among its denominational vice presidents a representative from the Episcopalians.

A floating society of Christian Endeavor has been formed at St. John, N. B.

If your pastor appreciates your society and has words of commendation for its excellences, and advice for its perplexities, and help in its needs, is it any more than right for your society members to appreciate your pastor, praise his good qualities and help him in every possible way?

During the year 1894 the Fourth Presbyterian society of Syracuse gave $132.05 to the cause of missions.

LOST IN THE FOREST.

AN INCIDENT OF LIFE IN THE WILDERNESS SIXTY YEARS AGO.

It Illustrates the Dangers That Beset the Pathway of the Youth of Our Country. Allured by Vice and Ruined by Social Drinking Customs.

"A child lost! Every man to the rescue!" was the cry which startled the inmates of Wesley Hulet's log cabin one morning in the early spring of 1830.

The man who had so excitedly announced his errand had come from Columbia, Lorain county, O., to Abbeville, Medina county. His horse was reeking with sweat; every moment was precious. A few hurried sentences sufficed to tell the story.

A little boy, 6 or 7 years of age, had left his home the previous morning to go to the sugar camp where his brothers were boiling down sap. When the brothers returned home at evening, and it was learned that he had not been to the sugar camp at all during the day, there was a scene of sore distress and wild excitement. Hickory torches were soon aflame, and out into the night sped fleet footed messengers to arouse the neighbors, most of whom were miles away. In an incredibly short time a rescue party was formed, and a definite plan of procedure adopted.

If any one should find the child, a signal gun was to be fired, three shots in quick succession if alive, two if dead, and those of the party within hearing were to respond, each by a single shot, thereby passing the news along till it should reach the entire party. The dense forests were at that time infested with bears, wolves and wildcats, and the treacherous wail of the panther was sometimes heard in the vicinity of the clearings. The lost child was poorly clad. His jacket and trousers of coarse homespun were old and patched, and his feet were bare, for shoes, especially for children, were luxuries not easily attainable.

Hour after hour men and boys, with the kindliness and ceurage which characterized the pioneers of those times, carrying their loaded guns and followed by their faithful dogs, made their way through brush and bramble, up and down hills, crossing gullies and wading ice bordered creeks, too full of neighborly sympathy and anxiety to take any note of danger or fatigue. So passed the night. Morning came, and the signal gun had not been fired.

According to previous agreement, the men gathered at the home of the nearly distracted parents, partook of simple refreshments, held a brief consultation, sent to adjoining townships for re-enforcements, and then, with even more intensity of purpose, went forth to renew the search.

Late in the afternoon, as one of the men was picking his way around a fallen tree, he was halted by a plaintive cry, and the words, "Mr. Warner, have you anything to eat in your pocket?"

Bang! Bang! Bang! Found and alive, rang out the blessed tidings. At once from all quarters were heard the answering guns until the wide old forest was vocal with joy.

Yes, the poor child, cold and hungry, his little bare feet, limbs and hands cruelly torn and swollen, was found and alive.

No wonder his sister fainted and his mother was so paralyzed with joy that she could neither move, speak nor weep when he was tenderly brought to them. Nor was it strange that, as the good news flew from cabin to cabin throughout the settlement, it prompted both merrymaking and devout thanksgiving.

Two generations ago! That little boy, if still living, is an old man. The unutterable anguish of those who loved him, the neighborly sympathy and heroic efforts in his behalf are all of the past.

But have there been no lost children in Columbia or elsewhere during the last 64 years? Boys and girls from other than log cabin homes, who have wandered out in their sweet springtime and found, whichever way they turned, in city or country, the allurements of vice, the drinking customs of society, and always and everywhere the open saloon? Have not thousands and thousands of such been so cruelly wounded, bewildered and discouraged that they have never found their way home?

We see them every day, hungry of heart, deserted by friends, their fortunes wasted, characters scarred and hopes for time and eternity blasted.

If every mother could but feel her boy's danger; if every intelligent citizen and wise statesman would but hear and heed the cry: "The children of the republic are being lost. Everybody to the rescue!" how the torchlights of truth would flash through the wilderness of sin, not only for the rescue of those already astray, but for the discovery and destruction of society's most deadly foe—the rumshop.

Then might the drink curse be banished from our beloved land, and the paths to happiness, usefulness and honor be made safe and pleasant for the little feet.

God give us men good enough and brave eneugh to say by word and deed, "The children shall not be lost."—Union Signal.

Beer Spoils the Feet.

The temperance women have an ally in the Bareness Staffe, the last great authority on feminine charms. Beer drinking, she asserts, spoils the feet of women. It has ruined the feet of the English and German women. "The Americans who have adopted this drink are beginning to lose the beauty of their feet!" This statement, which is quoted directly, at least establishes that the American foot has a reputation abroad. That American women have adopted beer as a drink is perhaps too formal a statement for a group of unrelated habits. In the interest of their cause the temperance people, with all their ingenuity, never thought of so potent an argument.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

ALCOHOL'S CRUEL WORK.

He that is drunken
Is outlawed by himself. All kind of ill
Did with his liquor slide into his veins.
—George Herbert.

Four young men were riding together along a lonely road. They had with them a bottle of diluted alcohol, of which in a spirit of friendship they drank freely. The poison had been purchased at a drug store under the guise of a medical prescription. A light admixture of some other drug had been added to it by the pharmacist, to cheat the law and avoid its penalties.

The young men had left the little village where they procured the murderous compound in apparently the most friendly feeling. One of them was a married man. A few miles from the place of the murder his young wife, with her babe, waited for the return of the affectionate husband and father.

It was a very cold night in March. At a late hour a storm of sleet, snow and wind had set in, and as it beat upon the window panes of the cottage the young mother hoped and prayed that her husband would soon return or that he had stopped at the village for the night. But at that very moment her husband, wounded and bleeding, was freezing to death by the roadside. In a drunken fight he had been knocked from his wagon and left in a helpless condition by his drunken companions to die.

In the early morning he was discovered by a neighbor who was passing by and taken to his home. He lived several days after the shock from amputation of his frozen lower limbs. He made a statement in articulis mortis, which was read in evidence in the trial of his companions for "involuntary man slaughter." It was the old, old story—first, a drink taken in fellowship, another and yet another. The demon that lurks in every intoxicating cup gained the ascendancy. A thoughtless word uttered in maudlin drunkenness aroused the anger of one of the young men. It was followed by a blow. When the trouble ended, one of the number lay stunned and bleeding upon the frozen ground by the roadside. Partially sobered and alarmed at what had been done, the other three young men fled from the place, leaving their companion to freeze and die. Had they moved the unfortunate man to the nearest house, his wounds were not of so aggravated a character as to have produced death, but a consciousness of guilt, with the unreasoning influence of strong drink, made cowards of them all.

In the dying declarations of the deceased his last werds were, "Whisky was at the bottom of it." Oh, oft told tale of crime and woe!—Union Signal.

The Force of Habit.

Professor William James of Harvard, in his textbook on psychology, says: "Could the young but realize how soon they will become mere walking bundles of habits they would give more heed to their conduct while in the plastic state. Every smallest stroke of virtue or of vice leaves its scar. The drunken Rip Van Winkle in Jefferson's play excuses himself for every fresh dereliction by saying, 'I won't count this time.' Well, he may net count it, and a kind heaven may not count it, but it is being counted none the less. Down among his nerve cells and fibers the molecules are counting it, registering and storing it up to be used against him when the next temptatien comes. Nothing we ever do is, in strict, scientific literalness, wiped out. Of course this has its good side as well as its bad one. As we become permanent drunkards by so many separate drinks, so we become saints in the moral and authorities and experts in the practical and scientific spheres by so many separate acts and heurs of work."

What Horace Greeley Said of Rum.

I heard Horace Greeley declare more than 40 years ago, in a public lecture on the evils of intemperance, that alcohol was a rank poison in its effects on the brain and body of human beings, and that it was only produced by decomposing and rotting feod substances, and that the process and purpose were wicked and defiling, and that satan alone could have taught mankind how to distill alcohol with which to besot and poison themselves.—Joseph Medill.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XIII, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 31.

A Comprehensive Review of the Quarter's Lesson—Golden Text, Math. xi, 29—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Lesson I.—John the Baptist Beheaded (Mark vi, 17-29). Golden text, Math. x, 28, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." Here we see the mystery of the sufferings of the righteous through the hatred of the wicked, as in the case of Joseph at the hands of his brethren and the wife of Potiphar; David from his own son, Absalom; Daniel and Jeremiah from their enemies; the apostles from the Christ hating Jews, and Jesus Himself from those for whom He laid down His life. The times of these things are still on and the need to remember His words: "Fear none of these things. Be thou faithful unto death" (Rev. ii, 10).

Lesson II.—Feeding the Five Thousand (Mark vi, 30-44). Golden text, Luke i, 53, "He hath filled the hungry with good things." If the last lesson taught us to endure patiently, even unto death, for His sake, this teaches us to place ourselves unreservedly in His hands that He may use us to feed the perishing multitudes who have no bread of life. We are not to calculate, like Philip, how or with what it may be done, but simply look to Him who knows what He will do and how He will do it.

Lesson III.—Christ the Bread of Life (John vi, 25-35). Golden text, John vi, 31, "He gave them bread from heaven to eat." The manna from heaven, the water from the rock, the serpent upon the pole, the morning and evening burnt offering—in fact, every whit of the sanctuary and its ritual all spake of Him. Apart from Him there is no life, but in Him are life and joy and peace and all true welfare for time and eternity.

Lesson IV.—The Great Confession (Math. xvi, 13-23). Golden text, Math. xvi, 16, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." The one question for every individual that rises mountain high in importance above all other questions is, What think ye of Christ? We talk about the weather and the crops, the tariff and the labor troubles, the fashions and amusements, and are all the while drawing nearer to an eternity the happiness or misery of which depends upon our present estimate of and relation to the Lord Jesus Christ. It is either pity self and reject Him or deny self and receive Him.

Lesson V.—The Transfiguration (Luke ix, 28-36). Golden text, Math. xvii, 5: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Hear ye Him." It does not look attractive to take up the cross and die to self and all the pleasures and enjoyments of this sinful world, and perhaps literally die to gratify some ungodly person as John the Baptist did and James and many others. But there is another side to it. The present and all things seen are only for a little while. There is an eternity of glory for the righteous who die to self, and of torment fer the unrighteous, who live fer self.

Lesson VI.—Christ and the Children (Math. xviii, 1-14). Golden text, Math. xviii, 14, "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish." The way to the kingdom and the eternity of glory is here set before us in the object lesson of the little child who came to Jesus when called. The little child came without doubtings or reasonings and trustingly let Jesus take him up and set him in the midst. When we thus trustfully come at His call and commit ourselves unto Him, we become children of God and come under special angelic care.

Lesson VII.—The Good Samaritan (Luke x, 25-37). Golden text, Lev. xix, 18, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The law, although holy and just and good, cannot give life, for we all come short of its requirements through the sinfulness and weakness of the flesh.

Lesson VIII.—Christ and the Man Born Blind (John ix, 1-11). Golden text, John ix, 5, "I am the light of the world." Every sinner is like this poor blind man, blind from birth, not through any special sin of our parents, but through Adam. If we know that we are only poor blind beggars, then Jesus stands ready to open our eyes and cause us to see, but if, while blind, we insist on thinking that we can see and talk about things of which we know nothing, as if we could see, then we are fools indeed and hopelessly blind. There is more hope for publicans and harlots who know they are sinners than for the self righteous.

Lesson IX.—The Raising of Lazarus (John xi, 30-45). Golden text, John xi, 25, "I am the resurrection and the life." As hopeless as was the case of Lazarus, dead and buried and corrupting, so utterly hopeless is the case of every sinner apart from the power of God, but there is nothing too hard for Him who made the heaven and the earth. This same Jesus who could open the eyes of one born blind and bring to life one who was four days buried is able to save to the uttermost all who come unto God by Him.

Lesson X.—The Rich Young Ruler (Mark x, 17-27). Golden text, Math. vi, 33, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." In this lesson we have one of the great hindrances in the way of coming to Christ. He can give sight to a poor blind beggar or life to a dead, corrupting body, but He cannot do anything for one who has life and sight and riches, which insnare and entangle him and come between his soul and God. Better to be empty and dependent as the child, wounded and helpless as the man who fell among thieves, blind as the poor beggar or dead as Lazarus than rich and self righteous as this young ruler.

Lesson XI.—Zaccheus, the Publican (Luke xix, 1-10). Golden text, Luke xix, 10, "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Although the rich young ruler did not receive Christ, here is a rich publican who did. The ruler was the one to be coveted for the church, some would think, while the publican was not so desirable, even though rich, but the Lord seeth not as man seeth, and His choice is often very unlike what ours would be. See Samuel looking upon Eliab and read carefully I Sam. xvi, 6, 7. Mark well the substantial evidences of Zaccheus' sincerity and remember that faith without works is dead, being alone. When Jesus is truly received, He will live His life in us.

Lesson XII.—The Mission of the Seventy (Luke x, 1-9). Golden text, Luke x, 2, "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth laborers into His harvest." The field is the world, and out of all nations in this field the Spirit is gathering a bride for the Father's only Son. Willing hearted men and women are the instruments whom the Spirit uses to gather out this elect body. The infallible and God breathed word is the all sufficient equipment for every Spirit filled worker.

STATE LAWMAKERS.

SYNOPSIS OF PROCEEDINGS IN THE LEGISLATURE.

What the Senators and Representatives Are Doing for the Benefit of Their Constituents—Bills and Resolutions Introduced—Other News of General Interest.

SPRINGFIELD, March 13.—A resolution was offered by Solomon in the senate charging gross immoralities in some of the big department stores of Chicago and calling for an investigation. It went over. A petition over 700 feet long and containing 18,000 signatures was presented for a law prohibiting the sale of liquor within four miles of any college in this state. A resolution was offered for an investigation of the Pullman company. The row at the Juvenile Offenders' Home, at Chicago, was taken note of in some more resolves. The woman suffrage bill was beaten for good. The street railway regulating bill was passed, as was the bill to increase the charge to counties for boys received at training schools to $10 per month. In the house a bill to reduce railway fares to 2 cents a mile was introduced. The bill appropriating $85,970 to repair the Anna asylum was passed, as was the bill to prohibit the use of explosive oils in coal mines.

SPRINGFIELD, March 14.—The Torrens land bill, after debate, went over in the senate to next Wednesday. The bill fixing the salary of member of the legislature at $1,000 for regular and $5 per day for special sessions failed of advancement to third reading, and notice of an motion to reconsider was given. The police commission bill was passed. The resolution attacking the whisky trust and the United States courts in connection therewith was rejected. In the house the report in Guinn - Poindexter election contest favor of Poindexter was adopted and he retains the seat. A resolution was offered for a constitutional amendment revising the entire state judiciary. The bill to make terms of mayors of cities of over 60,000 population four years, and one-term, was passed. The committee to inquire into convict labor was appointed—Eakins, chairman; Hallick, Fletcher, Olesen, Hawley, Breeder and Farrel.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., March 15.—Bills were introduced in the senate providing for a monument to Elijah P. Lovejoy at Alton to cost $25,000, and providing that the trustees of the State university establish a homeopathic medical school in connection with the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Chicago. The legislative salary bill was made special order for next Wednesday. Bills were passed providing for the destruction of weapons carried by persons arrested for carrying concealed weapons; to prevent adulterations of food for domestic animals; increasing the fees for incorporation of concerns organized for profit; abolishing the days of grace. The bill to prevent stealing the news from the wires of press associations went to third reading In the house Mo-Fee introduced a bill to regulate public warehouses. A memorial and resolution relating to the Forester's quarrel was ruled a petition and not a resolution. The bill to prevent the flying of foreign flags over public buildings was reported favorably.

SPRINGFIELD, March 16.—Only six senators were in their seats and an adjournment was taken until Monday evening at 5 o'clock. Lowenthal, of Cook, introduced a bill in the house which, if it becomes a law will abolish the office of printer expert, principally, as stated, because the printing is way behind. Adjourned.

GRESHAM'S STRONG WORDS.

Text of the Message Sent to Minister Taylor at Madrid.

WASHINGTON, March 15—The most belligerent message dispatched by this government to a foreign power since the memorable controversy between the Harrison administration and the Chilians has been conveyed through Minister Taylor by Secretary Gresham to the minister of foreign affairs at Madrid. It is a follows:

"TAYLOR, MINISTER, MADRID: This department is informed that on the 8th inst. the United States mail steamship Allanca, on her homeward voyage from Colon to New York, when six miles from the coast of Cuba, off Cape Maysi, was repeatedly fired upon by a Spanish gunboat with solid shot, which fortunately fell short. The windward passage, where this occurred, is the natural and usual highway for vessels plying between ports of the United States and Caribbean sea. Through it several regular lines of American mail and commercial steamers pass weekly within sight of Cape Maysi. They are well known and their voyage embraces no Cuban port of call. Forcible interference with them cannot be claimed as a belligerent act, whether they pass within three miles of the Cuban coast or not, and can, under no circumstances, be tolerated when no state of war exists.

"This government will expeot prompt disavowal of the unauthorized act and due expression of regret on the part of Spain, and it must insist that immediate and positive orders be given to Spanish naval commanders not to interfere with legitimate American commerce passing through that channel, and prohibiting all acts wantonly imperiling life and property lawfully under the flag of the United States.

"You will communicate this to the minister of foreign affairs and urge importance of prompt and satifactory response. GRESHAM."

GREAT COAL COMBINATION FORMED.

All the Bituminous Mines in Ohio in a Plan to Control the Output.

COLUMBUS, March 15.—As a result of the conference between the Ohio coal operators and representatives of the Ohio coal carrying roads, an organization to control the output of bituminous coal of the state has finally been formed. The new organization will probably be known as the Ohio Coal company, and its principal office will be in Columbus. Under the plan adopted the state is divided into seven districts representing the mines located on the various coal carrying roads.

The output of coal will be marketed and distributed to the various districts by a board of control composed of a representative from each district. The board of control elected is as follows: R. H. Johnson, representing the Baltimore and Ohio mines; B. F. Berry, Toledo and Walhonding Valley; A. G. Blair, Wheeling and Lake Erie; W. R. Woodford, Cleveland, Lorain and Wheeling; J. S. Morton, Toledo and Ohio Central; P. D. Turney, Columbus, Sandusky and Hocking.

A division of tonnage has been agreed upon, and a great factor in the division of tonnage will be the establishment of one general agency whieh will sell the output of all the mines at a price which shall not fall below a minimum agreed upon by all the parties interested. The operators are to be allowed a minimum net price for the coal—one that shall insure them a fair profit—the railroads to conform their rates to this agreement.

Under this plan the sales agencies in various cities conducted by the different companies and the traveling salesmen for each will be abolished, resulting in a saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars annually to the various companies, and enabling them to pay better prices for mining.

WIMAN GETS A NEW TRIAL.

Doubt of the New York Supreme Court of His Crimiual Intent.

NEW YORK, March 16.—Judgment has been reversed and a new trial ordered in the case of the people against Erastus Wiman. The decision was handed down in the general term of the supreme court. This practically affirms the position taken by Justice Barrett in granting a certificate of reasonable doubt that Judge Ingraham erred in refusing to charge the jury as to Wiman's criminal intent when he committed the forgeries for which he was indicted, and of which he was found guilty in the court of oyer and terminer.

Boodlery Charged at Chicago.

CHICAGO, March 15.—Direct charges of "boodlery" are made against numerous city aldermen in amended pleadings filed in the suit to have the sweeping Ogden gas and Cosmopolitan electric franchises annulled. Since the ordinances were passed Feb. 25 the newspapers have daily printed columns that the granting of the franchises was the result of liberal bribery of aldermen, and proceedings were recently begun to annul the action of the council. Tho amended pleadings charge explicitly that aldermen voting "yes" on ordinances had been promised "pecuniary advantages" for their votes.

Prince of Wales' Yacht Beaten.

CANNES, March 15.—The Ailsa, the Britannia and tho Corsica started in a race for the Ogden Goelet and James Gordon Bennett cup No. 1 for yachts over 20 rating. From the moment of crossing the line the Ailsa railed right away from the Britannia and in five minutes had a long lead, which she kept increasing till the finish, winning by ten minutes.

MISS FLAGG'S
LATEST NEW BOOK!

"A Prisoner of Hope."

COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.

Price, $1.25.

We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident. In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy, postage prepaid.

NEGROES SHOT DOWN.

BLOODY RIOT ON THE LEVEE AT NEW ORLEANS.

Men Armed with Winchesters Pick Their Time and Shoot Down Negro Laborers—Some White People Also Suffer Death and Wounds.

NEW ORLEANS, March 13.—The thick fog in the early morning in this city was the veil behind which desperate white levee laborers gathered, and which they penetrated with Winchester rifle balls aimed at the colored non-union men at work on the ships. The attack was made at points several miles apart, just before the arrival of the police, and as a result there are a half dozen corpses and a dozen or so wounded men. The police saw the attack, but no arrests followed, they claiming that they were too few to cope with the unexpected outbreak. The day before the mayor said all was quiet, and the governor saw no grounds for interference, but yesterday the business men were denouncing these officials; the militia was in readiness to move; an appeal to the federal government had virtually been made, and even the foreign consuls had decided to join in the move for peace at any price.

What Led Up to the Trouble.

The causes which led to the trouble have been of long standing and grew out of the attempt of ship agents and others interested to reduce rates. The white screwmen claim that the colored men, who were given a share of the work under an agreement, made secret cuts and violated the agreement in order to obtain more work and gradually crowd the white men off. The white associations then severed all ties with the blacks and refused to work with them or for the men who employed them. The white longshoremen joined the screwmen in this. Since then the steamship lines have been gradually going over to the negroes. Lately the white screwmen quit work on the lines still loyal to them, stating that they would not work until the whole affair was straightened out.

Several more lines then took on negroes from necessity. The wnites finally determined to retaliate on the stevedores by offering to reduce rates and deal with the ships direct. Ships in haste accepted the offer, but the agents stood by the stevedores. The latter offered to pay more than the screwmen asked, but the screwmen refused to deal with them. The agents offered to pay the screwmen their wages and place the stevedores over them as superintendents, but the screwmen again declined. Then the stevedores began importing colored screwmen from Galveston, and the whites, growing desperate, broke loose in riots. Much outlawry has been the result. Sunday night last shops were broken open and thousands of dollars worth of tools were thrown into the river, many riots have taken place, the white union screwmen being the aggressors, and in fact the levee has been an extra hazardous place ever since the troubles began.

Culmination of the Turbulence.

Yesterday morning was the culmination of the turbulence, and it looks more like a cold-blooded and deliberate massacre than a riot. The result was the following list of casualties: Killed—William Campbell, colored screwman; Jules Calice Carrobe, shoemaker; unknown man; unknown negro; Leonard Mallard, colored scaleman.

Injured—James A. Bane, white, purser of the steamship Engineer, shot in the head twice, once in the arm, dangerous; Henry Brown, colored screwman, shot five times, both arms and both legs; Tim Persten, colored coal wheeler, shot seven times, both legs and thigh, serious case; Lunis Cast, colored employed in sugar refinery, shot in hip; Billy Williams, colored screwman, shot in leg; Frank Lighthall, colored driver, shot in leg, dangerous; Robert Brooks, white longshoreman, shot with Winchester in right leg below the knee; two negroes, names unknown, jumped into the river and it is believed were drowned.

Calmly reviewing the happenings of the morning, everything would seem to indicate the attack to have been a prearranged affair. It is rumored, and there is every reason to believe the rumor is correct, that a secret meeting was held Monday night and the bloody affair carefully mapped out. The guns and rifles which were used by the down-town men, who went uptown, seem to have been deposited in the various saloons along the levee.

Was a Prearranged Plan.

It seemed to be generally understood that the guns used by the men who went downtown were taken to some place in the vicinity of the sugar refineries in a wagon and then were put away until such time as they were required. It also seemed to be agreed that in the preconcerted attack the shooting should be done between 6:45 and 7:30 o'clock, at a time when the men would be going to work.

A wounded negro, Leonard Mallard, has died, making six killed. Bane, the wounded Englishman, is not so badly hurt as at first supposed, and one of the unknown killed is identified. He is Henry James, a negro laborer. Henry Bland, a negro laborer, has his body full of small shot and may die. The police have made but two arrests and both were wounded by their comrades in the mob. Their names are Mike Fitzpatrick and Henry Brooks.

I take pleasure in heartily commending the volume herewith announced by Wm. Howe Tolman, Ph.D. Dr. Tolman has made careful and faithful study of the topics which he has discussed, having had peculiar facilities therefor, both in his university researches and because of his official connection with the City Vigilance League and other similar organizations. The Cartoons of St. Mark. By Rev. Robert F. Horton, D.D. Second edition. 12mo., buckram, $1.50.

A series of familiar yet carefully studied expository discourses, still alive with the glow of actual delivery. In a remarkable degree they illustrate what good expository preaching is. This is preaching such as people always are ready to listen to. The likening of the chapters of the gospel to cartoons also is a felicitous introduction and far from involving any great stretch of the imagination. The reader will find his heart touched and drawn toward Christ, while his intelligence is stirred and informed at the same time.—Congregationalist.

God's World, and Other Sermons. By Rev B. Fay Mills. Second edition. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

It must have been some such sermons as these of which Lord Melbourne complained the preacher insisted that men must apply their religion to their private life. . . These are good sermons because they are sermons that have worked.—Interior.

Peculiarly interesting for two reasons: first, because of the supremely important truths which these sermons bring into boldness of outline; and second, because of the preacher.—Advance.

FARM FIELD AND GARDEN

MUSHROOM CULTURE.

How the Edible Species May Be Grown In Beds Made In Cellars.

Considerable interest has developed of late years among market gardeners concerning mushroom culture. The usual method has consisted in growing the mushrooms under benches in greenhouses, but many an amateur, who desires to produce his own mushrooms, has not the convenience of a greenhouse, and it is for their benefit that the following illustrations, from a bulletin issued by the United States department of agriculture, are here reproduced. These illustrations represent beds made up in cellars, a method practiced by the French. The cellars should be warm and dry, dark and not exposed to drafts.

Fig. 1 represents a pyramidal shaped mushroom bed made on the top of cask bottoms, which should be at least 2 feet 6 inches in diameter. They are built in the shape of an old fashioned sugar loaf, about 3 feet in height. The pieces of spawn are placed 1¼ inches deep and 16 inches apart.

Fig. 2 represents mushroom culture in barrels sawed into two pieces crosswise, each forming a tub. Holes are made in the bottom of each tub, and a thin layer of good soil is spread over the inside. They are then filled with good, well prepared stable manure, as in the case of ordinary mushroom beds. When the tub is half full with material, well pressed down, six or seven good pieces of spawn are placed on the surface, and the remainder of the tub is piled up with manure well pressed down, the operation being completed by giving to the heap the form of a dome.

Mushrooms may be grown in a shelf in the stable. Strong bars of iron are driven into the walls, upon which are placed shelves of the proper size covered with earth, upon which is formed a bed that is treated exactly as those made upon the ground. These beds are just as productive as any other kind.

Truly Astonishing.—Miss Annette N. Moen, Fountain, Minn., says: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has had a wonderful effect in curing my brother s children of a severe and dangerous cold. It was truly astonishing how speedily they found relief after taking this preparation."

If the care of the hair were made a part of a lady's education, we should not see so many gray heads, and the use of Hall's Hair Renewer would be unnecessary.

Rich Red Blood

In the body of an adult person there are about 18 pounds of blood.

The blood has as its most important elements, small round corpuscles, red and white, in proportion of about 300 red to 1 white one.

If the number of red corpuscles becomes diminished and the white ones increased the blood is impure, thin, lacking in the nutrition necessary to sustain the health and nerve strength of the body.

Then That Tired Feeling, Nervousness, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, or others of the long train of ills, according to the temperament and disposition, attack the victim.

The only permanent remedy is found in a reliable blood medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts upon the red corpuscles, enriching them and increasing their number. It thus restores the vital fluid to healthy condition, expels all impurity, cures Nervousness, That Tired Feeling, Scrofula and all other diseases arising from or promoted by low state of the blood.

That these statements are true we prove not by our own statements, but by what thousands of perfectly reliable people say about Hood's Sarsaparilla. Read the testimonial in the next column from a beloved clergyman. Then take

"In view of the benefit I have had from Hood's Sarsaparilla I wish to give the following testimonial. I have several times been badly

Poisoned With Creeping Ivy.

As the old school of medicine simply tried to remove the symptoms instead of the sources of them, much of the poison was left in my system to appear in an itching humor on my body with every violent exertion in warm weather. At all times there were more or less indications of poison in my blood, up to a year ago last winter, when on my body. I then purchased a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after using that and a half of another bottle, the sores and humor disappeared. I attended the Christian Endeavor Convention in Montreal and also visited the World's Fair in the hottest weather of the summer. Was on the go all the time, but of the burning and itching sensation which had marred every previous summer's outing. I have reason, therefore, to be enthusiastic in my praises of Hood's Sarsaparilla." Samuel S. Schnell, pastor of Free Baptist Church, Apalachin, N. Y.

FAVORABLE FEATURES DOMINATE.

Longest List of Increased Prices for Many Months—Business Facts.

NEW YORK, March 16.—Bradstreet's says: There are fewer new and favorable trade features this week than unfavorable ones, but in most instances they outweigh the latter, which point to a continuance of small volume of business and quiet demand. In addition to increased competition here by Australian wools demand for the raw staple has fallen off and word is received that American dress goods manufacturers are using considerable Australian mixed with the American staple. The dry goods trade continues depressed, production being in excess of demand, cotton goods being moved generally only at concessions.

On the other hand prices present the longest list of increases within a week for many months. Among the prominent are the advances in Bessemer pig iron 10 and 15c.; 3-16c. on cotton; wheat, 2⅝c.; Indian corn, ¼c.; oats, ¼c.; pork, $1.25 per bbl.; lard, 30c., and sugar, 1-16c. Higher quotations are also reported for leather and hides, with demand more active and the falling off in stocks of petroleum is made a basis for higher prices for that staple. Material improvement in the iron and steel industries is indicated by the advance in Bessemer, by higher prices for manufactured iron at St. Louis, large orders placed for southern pig iron, and the receipt of orders for considerable lots of rails at Chicago.

This is significant among the favorable features of the week, but at the south gains are shown in sales of leaf tobacco and in the demand for naval stores. Among eastern industries makers of shoes report the recent advance fully maintained. Quotations are unchanged for wool, tin, iron ore, coke, lumber, coffee and live cattle, while concessions in prices are rumored to have been made on coal contracts and are apparent for print cloths, steel billets, copper and eggs.

Harry Hayward Sentenced.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 12.—"The sentence of this court," said Judge Smith to Harry Hayward, as the latter stood before him, "is that you be taken to the Hennepin county jail and be there confined until after a period of three months a time be fixed by the governor of this state, and you be taken to the place of execution and hanged by the neck until you are dead." Harry listened calmly and sat down without the slightest show of feeling.

Before the judge passed sentence he said he would examine the grounds urged for a new trial. He added that he had no doubt that the verdict was just and righteous.

Only two brace of the largest of each were taken from the vessel. The president looked well, and said his outing had done him good.

Two of them were instantly killed, a third died a short time after being taken out of the debris, and the others were all badly hurt, one probably fatally. All but one, John Bowen, were employes of the Wabash. The dead are: R. H. Bohlman, skull crushed, internally injured; J. J. Preston, back broken, skull crushed killed instantly; John Bowen, skull crushed, internally injured, killed instantly.

Must Be Separate Tickets.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., March 18.—In reply to an inquiry Assistant Attorney General Newell has rendered an opinion of some interest. A case has been laid before him wherein a county board had divided a township into two precincts and an election was held under the old arrangement and precinct. But when an election for township officers and a member of congress is held on the same day separate tickets must be used, prepared by the township and county clerks respectively. The same judges may preside, but separate ballot boxes must be used.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.....16

From the tone of the daily papers one might conclude that our nation is thirsty for war, and that there are several opportunities at hand. Spain does not yet reply to Secretary Gresham's message about the Allianca; and there is a rumor afloat that "the British would like to gain a foothold in Central America!" Well, of course that is not desirable, but even that would not be so bad as for Englishmen to own millions of dollars worth of breweries in the United States.

In the meantime, horrid war is going on, with all its sickening details, in a way that should make brave men shudder. Japan is reported to be of the opinion that "the time for peace negotiations has not arrived." The Cuban insurrection, which is considered by some as a "race war," goes on to the bitter end. In Lima, Peru, we are informed, "no foreigners were killed," but after three days of fighting there were some two thousand unburied corpses left in and around the city. Is it not amazing what men will do? Is it not comforting that: "In the shadow God keeps watch above his own."

Every right-minded citizen will be glad to know that Judge Carter is taking a stand for what is right and pure in the city of Chicago. May his term of office be long, and his courage always be equal to his convictions. The judges and clerks in four precincts were Thursday summoned to appear before Judge Carter in the County Court at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon to explain why they disregarded the orders of the election commissioners on Tuesday last, the day of registration, and changed the polling places assigned to the precincts by the board. The judges will be called upon to answer the charge of contempt of court under the election law, while the clerks will appear as witnesses. At least in two of these instances the judges adjourned to a saloon, and disregarded an order sent to them by the commissioners to return to the place originally appointed.

Mgr. Satolli has temporarily suspended the edict of Pope Leo XIII. affecting membership in the order Knights of Pythias. Dr. Collett, Dr. Da Grandepere and Hugo A. Dubuque of Lafayette Lodge, waited on Satolli, giving him the reasons why they and the 250 local Knights should be allowed to do their Easter duty. Lafayette Lodge is composed wholly of French Canadians who are Catholics. Satolli heard them, and after a day's consideration, granted their request, but did not give them any encouragement that the edict would or could be set aside except for a time.

The civil service reform bill has become a law in the State of Illinois. It was rushed through a little unceremoniously at the last, and is subject to some amendments, in order that the voters of Chicago might have a chance to ratify the action of the Legislature, as approved by the Governor, at their next municipal election. The law provides, in brief, for a (1) civil service commission, to be appointed by the Governor; (2) also for public competitive examinations which "shall be free to all citizens of the United States," with necessary limitations; (3) for promotions in classified service; (4) for reports to commission; (5) for preventing abuse of political influence; (6) for payment of salaries; (7) for penalties for violations of the act, (8) and for its adoption by the cities of our State. Much is expected from this law, and a great deal of satisfaction is expressed by nearly all classes at its passage.

The National Christian Citizenship League, organized a year since for the avowed object of educating the public conscience, and to secure a more generous support for all movements which are for the general good, is engaged in defeating if possible, in the House, the Humphrey racing pool bill. This bill, which seeks to legalize gambling, passed the Illinois Senate the 21st inst. The president of the League is Edwin D. Wheelock. By the direction of the Political Committee of the League President Wheelock has decided to circulate all over the State petitions to the members of the Legislature to defeat the pernicious legislation. The League has subordinate organizations in every considerable city in the State, and correspondents in almost every town. Through these organizations and correspondents it proposes to circulate petitions for signatures in every district, addressed to its representatives in the Legislature. The documents have been prepared, and they will be sent out to 500 different places. The following is the form of the petition: "To the Hon. William Burke, Representative from the Seventeenth District of Illinois—Dear Sir: We, the undersigned voters, resident in your district, hereby earnestly unite in requesting you to vote against the bill known as the Humphrey racing pool bill, which passed the Senate March 21, and to use your influence to induce other members also to vote against it. We further request that you oppose the Aspinwall bill and any similar bill which provides for gambling of any kind."

At last Utah has been admitted to Statehood. On account of the strong Mormon sentiments prevailing in that Territory, all efforts looking to its admission into the Union as a State have been unsuccessful hitherto. The effort that was made during President Cleveland's first administration to have Utah admitted as a State, was followed by more determined opposition by the government to polygamy, by the Republican regime that followed. Polygamists were fined and imprisoned under the Edmunds' bill, until at last President Woodruff of the Mormon church received a revelation that the obnoxious custom was not obligatory on good Mormons, and they were rather advised to give up the practice. Eugene Young, a grandson of Brigham Young, the great Mormon prophet, writes a long, interesting letter to the Chicago Tribune, representing that great harmony prevails in their State convention, and that Mormons now work amicably with those Gentiles who were most faithful in executing the law which it is hoped was instrumental in destroying polygamy. Mr. Young says: "Neither the church nor the law sanction any more plural marriages. It is hardly possible to believe the Mormon people want to have polygamy restored." . . . . "Now a veritable era of good feeling has supplanted the bitterness which raged only five years ago."

After making all due allowance for the exaggeration of newspaper reports, it seems to be plain that a good friendly relation does not exist between the United States and the European powers. The right of Great Britain to indemnity for the expulsion of Mr. Hatch from Central America is conceded; but men and papers are discussing the "Monroe doctrine," which simply asserts that our government would consider the acquisition of territory by any foreign power on this continent as a menace against itself, in a way that would seem to portend war in case England asked for territory in default of gold, which Nicaragua is not able to give. The Tribune of March 23 says it is believed the administration will concede that Great Britain has a prima facie claim on Nicaragua which should be paid, and that if the little republic concedes the same thing but pleads poverty Uncle Sam will see that its poor but honest condition is properly recognized. Which means that the United States will say to Great Britain, we are sorry, but you cannot have your rights in America. It is a short step from not fearing God to not regarding man. Mr. Cleveland was not altogether pleased with the state of affairs in Washington when he returned from his hunting trip, and is inclined to blame the Secretary of State; but to us it seems that the real difficulty is that forgetting that "Righteousness exalteth a nation;" we as a people have chosen for our rulers party men rather than God-fearing men, and we are learning by bitter experience what we should have learned from the Word, that "When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice; but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn."

THE WORK OF THE N. C. A.

BY REV. ALEX. THOMSON.

So almost universal has become the power of the secret empire that it has not only turned down the light that would otherwise show what dwelt within the shadows, but it has made it dangerous to attack these strongholds of the night. Now, whatever may be said of the lodge power, it cannot be said that it is beneath discussion. He would be a bold man who would assert that it was above it. Yet this discussion of the principles on which secret societies rest, or their methods and fruits, is just the one thing that is all but impossible in this country to-day. If anyone wants to test the truth of this statement, let him send a well-written article on the subject to any of our religious papers and observe its reception. I remember reading in the New York Witness, a number of years ago, that after an article against the lodge, it immediately lost hundreds of subscribers, and an officer of the Grand Lodge sent it a notice that on whomsoever the Masonic stone fell it would grind him to powder.

An evangelist who visited me about a year ago related a humorous experience. At some place in his travels he met with the literature of the N. C. A., was all fired up with the revelations, and without more ado fired them off point blank at his first audience. He left that town immediately after, a sadder and a wiser man. He at least discovered that the N. C. A. was not attacking a stuffed lion. He was, I believe, an injudicious man, and all such had indeed better be sure of their calling before attacking the secret empire. When I quietly told this gentleman that to the measure of my power to give, and of the people I ministered to, to receive, I was in this struggle for life, he looked at me with a strange expression, and said: "You are quite right, but you will have trouble in the flesh."

This brings us to another thought, that in most churches any attempt to come out with the whole truth on this question would almost, if not quite, destroy the church. I have now in mind a man who was exceedingly radical on this question, and poured before the people not prepared to receive it all the light that he possessed. He left behind him a train of divided churches. The Master said to his disciples at one time that they were not then able to hear all the truth he had for them. God does not throw the blaze of the noonday sun into the eyes of the half-awakened birds, but the light breaks softly as they are able to bear it. The true pastor, or perhaps one would better say the wise one, stands with his hand on the pulse of the church, and faithfully gives out the truth on all subjects as the church is able to bear it. If he be a faithful, careful, good man, after the church comes to know him, and to be sure that in all things he seeks the Master's will and not his own, he will be able to say much that no other man could say in his pulpit without giving offense, and doing more harm than good. But after all, in most of our churches the pastor's hands are more than half tied here, and he welcomes whatever will really help to give him freedom.

Here then is the province of the N. C. A. One of our lecturers comes to a town, secures a church, or better still, a hall, and posts a notice of the fact that he is going to speak on the subject. The man is free. His argument can be made overwhelming. All minds open to receive the fullest measure of truth receive it, and the pastor can judiciously gather up the fruits of the victory. If ever there was a call for godly men, fearless, and yet kind and judicious, each of whom would be an Elijah and John rolled into one, it is to this work to-day. We may indeed all pray God to bless the mission of the N. C. A.

But besides the lecture work, efforts ought to be made to secure a place for our speakers at the meetings of ministerial associations, to secure the names and ascertain as far as possible the lodge standing of town and city officers, its number of lodges in each town, the probable expense of running them, and report all this to the Cynosure. The Cynosure, the organ of the Association, ought to be kept at high-water mark. All friends of our reform may well pray God to bless the Cynosure, for after all it is the great light-giver on the question of the secret empire.

Looking at the whole field from the standpoint of a Christian and a patriot, it is clear to me that we must conquer here or the battle is lost everywhere.

WHO IS FREE?

BY CHARLES P. JONES.

He whom the truth makes free is free;
All men are very slaves beside;
No civil law gives liberty—
The manacles and chains abide,
While yet the heart is prone to sin,
And Satan claims the throne within.

No oath-bound clan, however great
Their numbers, or their influence, be,
Though they may rule a boasting State,
And spread their cult from sea to sea,
Has by its rites (nor ever can)
Imparted freedom to a man.

An oath but makes a greater slave;
Christ ne'er requires such things of men;
The proudest snob or poorest knave
Must each repent—be born again.
Who would be free, and free indeed,
Must have his heart from evil freed.

While loving sin, no man is free,
His wicked passions have him bound:
What mean respectability,
Deceptive boast, and empty sound?
Who would be free, and free indeed,
Must by the Lord of hosts be freed?

UNEQUALLY YOKED.

BY WILBUR N. COFFEE.

A large ox and a small pony were yoked together and pulling at a load The greater strength of the ox turned the head of the pony, and together they traveled around—the ox making the circle and the pony traveling inside it.

The yoke is a profession of equality. Says the ox: "Here are two holes; you put your head through one, and I will put my head through the other; that's fair. I can use but one end, and you use the other. The chain by which we pull is exactly in the middle. Isn't that right? You pull, and I pull. No one could complain about that, surely."

No, of course not, but if you wish to get at the merits of the case, talk to the pony.

Now, when the Christian and unbeliever are yoked together in the lodge, the former is to the latter what the pony is to the ox.

But says the Christian: "I am not obliged to co-operate with the unbelievers in their questionable entertainments—balls, banquets, suppers, excursions, parades, etc., and when it comes to voting upon them, I can vote against them."

O, yes! You could, and it would make about as much of an impression as a "mosquito kicking against a barn." You could, but the trouble with you, my friend, is that like the pony, your head gets turned, and you very submissively tread around in the circle made by the unbeliever, and he highly esteems you for your docility. He pursues a purpose, and as regards real Christianity you have become a subdued pony, and trot around as you are guided.

SECRECY.

A TESTIMONY BY A GERMAN BAPTIST.

It was my privilege to attend the anti-secret convention, at Xenia, O., last month, and participate in its deliberations relative to the merits and demerits of secrecy, as set forth in the writings and seen in the workings of secret orders.

Secrecy is a hydra-headed monster whose real character is disguised under the claims of charity and religion. It is a foe and not a friend to the Christian religion. Secrecy rejects Christ. Every utterance of the lips, every stroke of the pen against secrecy is an effort and a defence in the interests of truth, humanity and righteousness. Christ was not a patron of secrecy, but "visa versa," saying: "In secret have I said nothing." (St. John 18: 20.) And, "What I tell you in the dark, publish in the light; and, what is whispered in your ear, proclaim from the housetops." Matt. 10: 27.

Good works are of God. Secret orders are pretentious and misleading, the works of carnality, worldly in character, and, therefore, not of God. They have in their proceedings, prayers, etc., "a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof; from such turn away."–2 Tim. 3: 5.

Secrecy is not only wrong in letter, but also in spirit and principle; and selfish and discriminating in character, an enemy to faith, and, therefore, at variance with pure and undefiled religion. On the other hand, the spirit and principles of Christianity and our holy religion are, in kind, wholly unselfish, provident, charitable and Christ-like. Christ instructs us to do good unto all men; that is, without discrimination as to wealth, race, nation or tongue. Especially were his sympathies directed toward the poor, saying: "For ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will, ye may do them good." (Mark 14: 7.) The spirit and principles of the secret order is not only selfish and discriminating, but uncharitable. It helps those, and those only who support such orders.

The charity of the church is practically unlimited, open and free to everybody with no fixed bounds. The church needs no secret auxiliary. Her system is perfect, as its Author is perfect, hence "thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

The religion of the Bible is built upon the true foundation, Christ. Salvation is obtained through faith in him. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." (1 Cor. 3: 11.) Secret orders are not built on this foundation, because the religion and rites of the secret order reject Christ, and are therefore a Christless religion. Hear Christ: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." (St. John 3: 36.) Again Jesus saith: "This is the work of God that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." (St. John 6: 29) In short, the religion of the secret order is as broad as the congress of religions, at Chicago, in 1893: it is one of policy and not of principle, admitting to fellowship, Jews, Mohammedans, Socialists, Polygamists, and even professed Christians. Because, "not only the tenets of the Christian religion are excluded, but even the name of Christ is studiously excluded from their manuals, prayers, etc." (Tract by the Rev. I. J. Rosenberger.) What a mockery is this of the Christian religion! Christian faith! The light of the world can have no fellowship with such, the unfruitful works of darkness. (See 2 Cor. 6: 17.)

Paul, that noble defender of truth, purity and good works, speaks of himself and other Christians as "plants," having been planted into grace through faith in Christ, whereby they may grow, advance in the Christian graces, faith, love, hope, charity, developing into the full stature of manhood and womanhood in Christ Jesus. But how is it with the man who enters a secret order? He, by the power of the oath he is required to take and make his own, is also planted, but not into grace as in the case of the first, but into the rites, fellowship and religion of such order, however faithless, Christless, corrupt and soul-destructive it may be. Says Jesus: "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up—destroyed." (Matt. 15: 13) A religion and a worship which does not recognize Christ, is not only Christless, but also vain. "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips: but their heart is far from me. But in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Also if any man shall say, "Behold, he is in the secret chambers, believe it not." (Matt. 15: 8, 9, and 24: 26.) In this same chapter (15) we read of certain, who were accused of defiling themselves by eating with unwashen hands. Christ plainly answers: "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man, but that which goeth out of it," because, "those things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile a man. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies." (18, 19) The light of secrecy is darkness. There is no affinity or fellowship between Christ and Belial.

"Mackey, in his Lexicon, page 16, defines 'Acacian' as signifying a Mason, who, by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity, is free from sin." The Gospel teaches that, "the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin."–1 John 1: 4.

Which will you choose, which accept, the teachings of the Gospel, or the teachings of Masonry? If to give up manhood and become a slave, serve the lodge. If to be a man, free and Christ-like in manhood, character and life, serve Him. (Rev.) S. W. HOOVER.

A WORK OF GRACE IN WHEATON.

A work of grace remarkable in some of its features has been in progress in Wheaton for some weeks. It began in the Baptist church, with Rev. Fred Berry of Pullman in charge. It soon developed that Christians were in the way of God's work. Meetings for prayer and fasting were appointed, and for three weeks a company of believers "whose hearts God had touched" waited on him from 9:30 A. M. to 5:00 P. M. continuously. The prayer offered most of all was, "Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." Psa. 139: 23, 24.

Never have I seen such a meeting. The Holy Spirit, the sin-finder, was at work, and never were our hearts so searched and sin so hunted out; and as it was hunted out, it was with the help of grace put away. All who came into that room during those weeks were conscious of the searchings of God. The fire of the Holy Ghost began to kindle and glow. Believers became serious enquirers after the fullness of the Spirit, and many who were "hungering and thirsting after righteousness" sought instruction and prayer.

These all-day services continued for seven weeks with blessed results. The work spread to the students of Wheaton College. And for nearly two weeks the chapel exercises were conducted by Bro. Berry, and many of the students were led into a deeper spiritual life than they had ever known before. There have been as yet but few conversions, the work being nearly exclusively among believers.

The work continues with the pastors of the Baptist and College churches in charge, but with the Holy Spirit the gladly-acknowledged leader in the blessed work.

The secret of this really blessed work is found in the simple fact that we waited on God continuously, patiently, penitently, confessing and forsaking our sins; putting away the pride that invited divine resistance. We definitely sought the fullness of the Holy Spirit as the all-important qualification for joyful, victorious Christian life and labor. We are confidently expecting larger results. W. H. CHANDLER.

THE FRUITS OF THE ROMAN CHURCH.

LOUIS ACOSTA, A PROTESTANT MINISTER (MEXICAN) IN COLIMA, MEXICO.

(Translated from the Spanish.)

In Colima there exists a kind of inquisition for the evangelical Christians. Do not think that I will show that there are instruments of torture made use of. These have disappeared some time ago, to the great sorrow of the sattellites of Loyola and Guzman; but if anyone cries aloud as one who knows the doctrine of Jesus Christ, a doctrine without flaw and without stain of any kind; he is abhorred, detested, and persecuted —not openly—but in a manner followed only by low and cowardly souls. As soon as one resolves to become evangelical, his employment is stopped. If he is a mechanic, his work will be taken away, and no one is willing to rent him a house to live in.

Ah, Rome! You cannot say in your defence that only a few hate the evangelicals; that all are not alike; that among the apostles there was a Judas. Yes, 'tis true, so ought the worthy corporations and cultured societies exclaim; the very evangelicals have suffered the disgrace to have to lament some Judases. But it is not the twelfth of the preachers and apostles of Christ; it is not the hundredth, or thousandth part of the Roman Church that is false; but there are ninety-nine in a hundred, or nine hundred and ninety-nine in a thousand who are corrupt and full of wickedness, even going so far as to spill the blood of the evangelical Christians.

What dost thou say, Rome? If you remain silent, then let history speak. Following down the pages of our free nation, after the events in 1810 until the result in 1821; passing through the battlefields sprinkled with blood spilled by the clergy, the imagination recoils at the miserable ambitious Roman civilization of the nineteenth century.

Reason finds no support, and we see the national welfare dashed to earth by the rude strokes of wickedness and vileness. Dost thou not see the pain and woes of this destruction; the conflagration of property, the honor of the wife and daughter tarnished, the hatred of parent against child and brother against brother?

This is Roman civilization! These are the effects; the fruits of fanaticism and superstition. But after all, the people have been so educated that their fault is a relative one, not an absolute. If a child uses bad language, it is because he has heard it somewhere, and his other deficiences are often from the influence of bad example.

Beware, Mexicans! Forever leave behind those corrupt sentiments issuing from the convents. Do not make yourselves ridiculous, crying at the church door, and many times shedding the blood of the evangelical preachers; the truth is not quenched by killing the witness. The priests in the time of Christ put him to death through hatred and envy, and now you see his work is under way. Do not deny the truth. I challenge you to destroy the evangelical cause.

Romanism considers none of her enemies so terrible as Protestantism, from which alone she receives the mortal stroke. And again I repeat, not of the atheist, the dualist, the pantheist, nor of the Mormon, has she that dreadful fear that she has of the Christian. And well she may have, for never was Satan better conquered than when he appeared before Christ.

Permit me to ask a question. If you believe the Protestants lost and beyond all hope, why do you not leave them in indifference? Still another. If the piety and virtue of Romanism is so great and you consider the Protestants misled, and that it is possible to win them back to the good way; why do you not meet them in society to convince them of their error and win them by love from their sad state, thus bringing them to the fold of Christ? Why, in place of bestowing love and care, do you condemn and use violence by stabbing and stoning them? It is an actual fact that Mr. B. B. Blachly, an American Bible colporteur, has been insulted, persecuted and threatened, when in the street, by Roman Catholics.

O Romanism, you are the cause of a dreadful sore; and when Protestantism, declaring herself your friend, tries to help you, you cry out with pain because she puts her finger on your wound. Your attitude now is certainly painful; you know not how to turn the lie into truth; now you confess that commandment which the Priest Ripalda stole and which says: "Thou shalt not make unto thyself any image or figure of the holy Mary to worship." You speak of her merely as Saint Mary, as you would Saint Teresa or any other saint; and afterwards you will tell the people you did not understand what was taught you. You have fallen into idolatry; you have made Mary the mother of God when God is uncreated, and the people are ignorant. A priest once said to me: "The people are so ignorant they need dolls to worship God with."

Listen, Mexicans! Do not heed when the priest from his pulpit says to kill the Protestants. There will be some to say that the priests never preach so. I will prove that they do. The priest enters the pulpit, and after praying the rosary to the holy Mary, he exhibits relics, responses and indulgences like merchandise to the people at good price, and at the same time cheap; and then he says: "Protestantism is a horrible, poisonous and venomous animal, and those who extend it are destroying souls." Putting Protestantism in such a horrible light, the people resolve to exterminate it.

If I say to a person, seeing an animal coming directly to him, "That animal is poisonous; its sting is death. I have told you in plain language, kill it."

I have in my possession, published in the State of Hidalgo, Mexico, by Gabino Chavez, a minister of the Roman Church, a catechism with indulgences, granted by different bishops of the same church, to those who read the catechism. On page 33 there is this question: "Is it a good method to hiss and stone the Protestants?" The answer is: It is an excellent method, for a good fight will warn them.

LODGE CHAPLAINS.

"What is the duty of a chaplain in the Good Templar lodge? The answer is ready in a moment. To lead the devotional exercises, of course. I wish to ask, can anyone but a Christian be chaplain? Is it not mockery to install any person but a Christian for this office, and is it not worse than mockery for anyone but a Christian to lead these exercises? If you have a minister of the Gospel in your lodge it is certainly more fitting to have him for chaplain, or if not, elect some other person who has the cause of Christ at heart. It is a shame that in some lodges a chaplain is elected and installed, and performs these duties who does not even profess religion."

By a universally-recognized principle in all the secret orders, one who is eligible to membership is eligible to the office of chaplain. The fault lies not in the selection of the officer, but in the inherent nature of the system. It is an insurmountable objection to Good Templarism that its chaplain is always liable to be one who knows nothing of the nature of prayer. We do not wonder that unconverted people join such societies, but surely Christians have no right to connect themselves with an order that habitually makes a mockery of prayer.—J. Blanchard.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

A subscriber of the Herald and Presbyter, after calling attention to the fact of "the multiplicity of societies for this and that good object, each with its fees and duties requiring time and money, asks: 'Would it not be well to combine these all into one society for being good and doing good?'" The Herald replies: "The church is just such a society." We would therefore suggest that the church be re-organized, for in the midst of so many other societies it seems to have been lost sight of, and well nigh passed out of existence.—Selected.

REVIVING THE CHURCH.

Our church was holding a protracted meeting. Good Mr. Taylor preached faithfully and earnestly, night after night, but with no apparent success. The members sat there like monuments, as if it were the pastor's meeting and not theirs. But one evening, after a very impressive sermon, still no one willing to lead in prayer, or even testify for Christ, the minister said: "We will be dismissed, and after the benediction I want every member of my church to remain."

They did so, when Bro. Taylor said to them: "I want every member that has aught against another to go to that person, whether it be brother or sister, and make confession or ask forgiveness before the next evening's meeting. All that will do this may rise to their feet." And again he said: "I want to know how many of you have family worship. All that do, rise to their feet and remain standing a few moments." There were three or four families that did not rise. To each of these he said, in solemn, but kind words (calling them each by name): "Bro. Truax, I want you when you go home to-night to set up your family altar; will you?" After being answered in the affirmative by each, they repaired to their homes, and from that evening it was as if the dews of heaven were showered upon that church. Such a glorious revival and ingathering of souls into that little church will never be forgotten by any that witnessed it. Are there not some churches still that need to be shaken by the shoulders, as it were, and awakened out of their slumber?—Christian Conservator.

GERMAN KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

Waldock Lodge No. 136, of the Knights of Pythias, has appealed to the courts to prevent the Grand Lodge of the State of Illinois from taking away its charter, for refusing to comply with the edict of the order abolishing the use of a ritual in German. Judge Brentano issued an injunction to restrain the Grand Lodge from carrying out an order to expel the Waldock Lodge until the case can be heard in court.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Recent legislation submitted or defeated.—Sunday saloons. —A practical joke —Vegetarianism.

The bill providing for the punishment of persons convicted of assaults on children and of unnatural crimes, by the whipping post, was defeated in the Assembly by the narrow margin of four votes, after it had almost unanimously passed the Senate. It was called the Gerry bill, because it was pushed by Commodore Elbridge T. Gerry, president of the society for the prevention of cruelty to children. Opposition to it was based upon the claim that it was barbarous and a relic of antiquity; and also that in Delaware and Maryland, where this kind of punishment is inflicted, the percentage of crime has increased beyond the increase of population, the percentage being greater in these two States than in any other States in the Union, and illiteracy in them being three times greater than in the State of New York. These statistics were presented to show that the whipping post is co-existent with ignorance and crime.

The cause of woman suffrage has gained a point, for the Assembly has voted to submit the question to the people for settlement by a vote of eighty to thirty-one. They have thus gone back on the work of the late Constitutional convention, which refused to allow the people to vote on the proposition to strike the word "male" from the constitution. The question must also pass the present Senate and both branches of the next Legislature, however, before it can be submitted to the people. It is said that the Republican bosses have learned that it was a mistake to antagonize the suffragists, and so gave orders that the amendment should pass the Assembly at any rate, the fate of it in the Senate being left for the future to decide.

Last Thursday eve., there was a largely-attended and enthusiastic mass-meeting held in Cooper Union, for the purpose of advocating open saloons during some part of Sunday. The most astonishing feature of the meeting was the presence of two Protestant Episcopal clergymen, Rev. Dr. W. S. Rainsford and Rev. Dr. J. H. Rylance, and the sensational speeches which they made upon the subject. Dr. Rainsford proclaimed himself a socialist on the liquor question, and denounced the "hayseeds" who were trying to obstruct such legislation. He claimed that open saloons on Sunday would diminish drunkenness, remove hypocrisy and greatly promote the interests of temperance. Of course, he was cheered to the echo by the German and other foreigners who were present, and who are so anxious to substitute for the American Sabbath the Continental Sunday, with its beer-guzzling, cock-fighting, brawling accompaniments. The other reverend speaker denounced what he was pleased to call the intemperance of the temperance fanatics, and pleaded for the adoption of a law similar to that in force in London. The result of the meeting was to organize a permanent movement to advance the cause of so-called Sunday liberty.

What drinking man would not be willing to wait till noon for legalized drinking, especially if he could keep it up thereafter for ten hours? Why do not these worthy logicians go a little farther and modify other laws to suit the man? Beside giving the right for Sunday liquor selling between the hours of twelve and ten o'clock P. M, why do they not say: "Since stealing is such a temptation, and men will break the law, we will make the law to suit the man, and for a few hours in the afternoon, or at dusk, we will legalize stealing." So might we go through the Decalogue, considering all possible temptations, until all laws were abolished, and pandemonium reigned throughout the world.

These clerical critics also argued that since the rich man had his club-house open on Sunday, it would be only just to allow the poor man to have his saloon. Why do they not try to shut up the rich man's club-house and promote the cause of temperance by abolishing an evil, instead of legalizing and adding another evil to those already existing?

A practical joke was recently perpetrated which savors of the horse play of the lodge-room, the results of which have made the perpetrators both sad and penitent. Fifty pupils of the Teachers' Normal College, in Harlem, are using for a temporary dormitory a part of the old Bloomingdale insane asylum. Some of the girls found a lot of old commitment blanks and notices to relatives of patients, and they thought it would be a good joke to fill them out and mail them to the friends and relatives of their fellow-students. Very soon the faculty were deluged with letters and telegrams, and distracted and hysterical relatives appeared, hunting in vain for the physicians whose names had been signed to the notices. The matter turned on its originators in a way that was not foreseen. One father wired to the faculty that he always thought his girl was weak-minded, but he thought she would get over this attack if kindly treated. The girls feel so keenly the folly and cruelty of the hoax that farther punishment was deemed unnecessary.

Within the past two weeks the first vegetarian restaurant, in New York, has been opened, on West 23d St., by Mrs. L. Volkmann. There is a large and flourishing local society, the members of which believe that eating flesh was the original sin, and who are doing all in their power, through the distribution of literature and personal solicitation, to restore man's bill of fare to the primitive vegetarian basis. Hereafter at this cafe florid-faced club-men and dyspeptic bon vivants can find a regimen that will regulate and restore their abused stomachs, and relieve the purse at the same time, for the economy of a vegetarian diet is a strong argument in its favor. On the back of the menu cards, in this neat and novel eating-house, the following acrostic and sonnet is engraved, which is probably the pæan of some unknown but enthusiastic vegetarian poet:

"Vision prophetic that Isaiah saw,
Earth had no brighter, fairer sight to show;
Guiltless of blood and innocent of woe,
Ever was rule of love the ample law.
They did not slay in all the holy earth;
All gentle life was sacred and was free,
Ranged in the air and sported in the sea;
In man and brute they saw life's common fount,
And in a chain of love bound all below,
Neither child nor lamb lacked a caressing hand.

"Let us then make our beautiful earth to glow,
Isaiah's vision of the righteous land;
Free from all tyrant force, by blood unstained,
Eden once more! Lo! Paradise regained."

REFORM NEWS.

PUSHING IN PENNSYLVANIA.

WILKINSBURG, Pa., March 22, '95.

DEAR CYNOSURE.—Juging by the stir it made among those who love darkness rather than light, my lecture on last Monday evening was a decided success. It was given in the Free Methodst church, New Brighton, Pa. I spent Sabbath with friends there preaching to a good audience in the morning. A number of the brethren connected with this church before conversion belonged to various lodges. Bro. Bentley, the pastor, was connected with three or four, and so can testify to their injury from experience.

The church in which I spoke is the largest of the denomination in this section. There were 500 or more persons present Sabbath and Monday evening. Chairs were placed in the aisles, and many remained standing. The following note appeared in the Commercial Gazette:

Last evening Rev. W. B. Stoddard of Washington, D. C., a member of what is called the National Christian Association, addressed the congregation of the Free Methodist church at this place on the subject of "What Secret Societies are Doing." Rev. Stoddard scored the Masons and Odd-fellows in particular, and the Knights of Pythias, American Mechanics and lesser secret societies unmercifully. There were quite a number of Masons, Odd-fellows and other secret society men present, and they seemed to look upon the whole affair as a huge joke. A collection was taken up and these same secret society men were the heaviest contributors.

If this statement is correct the lodge men in New Brighton are not like their brethren elsewhere. It is not the rule that those who are "scored unmercifully" contribute heavily to the one thus serving them. Perhaps they felt sorry for the evil they had done and were trying in this way to atone. Perhaps those who left before the lecturer concluded and slammed the door "looked upon the whole affar as a huge joke," and left a heavy contribution with the reporter. It might be difficult to account for his knowledge of the "heaviest contributors" in any other way.

Bro. Broadhead, pastor of the F. M. church, Rochester, Pa., is holding special meetings, but writes that he desires lectures later. Friends in Beaver Falls were in for reform as usual. Some expressed the wish that our next State convention be held there. We would have good local support. There is much dormant interest in Beaver Valley that would be aroused by an enthusiastic State gathering. A visit to Midway, Primrose and McDonald, Washington county, revealed an increasing interest in reform. Some contributed to State work, others subscribed to the Cynosure. Friends at Midway and McDonald wish lectures, in the former place as soon as the roads are better, in the latter as soon as the liquor fight is off their hands. A Masonic lodge has just started publishing in the paper that they were of the kind that was before Abraham. I do not know whether they trace their origin to the one who induced the first pair to wear the apron. If so, the evidence is in their favor. It is not thought that it will exert much influence, as the baser element are at the head. I go to McKeesport, Elizabeth and Turtle Creek, Pa., speaking according to arrangement in the latter place Sabbath. The spring opens. Business revives. Reformers should be ahead. Let us keep pushing.

W. B. STODDARD.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST AGENT.

SPOKANE, Wash., Mar. 11, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Since my last letter, I have called on a number of the Portland pastors to secure their co-operation in our convention, which meets there next September. I found Dr. Grant of the First Baptist church exceedingly careful as to what he said about the orders. I was glad to hear from his own lips that he was not a member of any secret order. His extreme opposition to Romanism had led some of his admirers to suspect him associated with the A. P. A. He is not.

Dr. H. F. Wallace of the United Presbyterian church greeted me most cordially, talked the subject over very freely, subscribed for the Cynosure, and accepted a place on our program to address the convention. He is true to the principles of Christ's Church, and not afraid to be found defending them.

I found Rev. Hawes of the First United Presbyterian church engaged in a revival. I think we can depend on the pastor to assist our convention work.

On Sabbath morning I listened to Dr. Wallace of the First Congregational church. His text was, "Whose image and superscription hath it." He went on to mention some elements in our national and social life that prove that this nation hath not the "image and superscription of Christ." As I listened to his eloquent, earnest words, I thought, "Why not tell them plainly that the secret lodge system has not Christ's image or superscription."

On Monday I started for the Sound, stopping two nights on the Cowlitz, and spoke to large congregations at Ostrander and Stockport. Rev. L. F. Clark is the U. B. pastor, and is having good success. He is loved by all the people. He was called by special invitation to Ostrander to hold a revival, and was promised that nothing should interfere with the meeting if he would come. He went, but was notified that the Good Templars was bound to hold their claim to the house on Tuesday night, So, after some had been saved, others seeking, and on the eve of a gracious outpouring of the Spirit, he had to give way to them.

I went on Wednesday to Seattle, arriving at 4:45 in the evening. On Saturday afternoon I called at the Seattle Seminary, a Free Methodist institution, presided over by Prof. Shay, assisted by two lady teachers. They were having quarterly meeting. Rev. C. E. McReynolds is the district elder, and Rev. Alex. Beers pastor. These brethren and their wives are as true to God and our reform principles as the "needle to the pole." They have quite a membership here, and their influence for good is being felt. May they succeed most gloriously. Being urged we stayed over Sabbath and worshiped with them, preaching for the elder on Sabbath evening. This was a day well spent.

I cannot mention all the good people who have treated us so kindly. All these have a warm place in our affections. Prof. Shay is the right man in the right place. He is seeking to secure the salvation of the last student. One must indeed be hardened who will pass a year in that college without being converted.

At 11 P. M. on the 10th we took the Great Northern railroad for Spokane, arriving here at 5:05 P. M. on the 11th where we are at present writing. Tomorrow, we go to Mica, then Rockford, Latoh, Pioneer, Tekoa, Oaksdale and Elberton. Then probably return by another route to Seattle. Pray for us.

P. B. WILLIAMS.

HILLSDALE COLLEGE, MICHIGAN.

KINGSTON, Ill., March 22, 1895.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On my way to Chicago, I turned aside and visited Hillsdale College, in Michigan. While trying to find the president, a student told me that there were seven secret societies in the college, and two of them were young ladies' societies.

In the library I saw most of the anti-secrecy books placed there a few years ago, but when I spoke to the assistant librarian about giving the students copies of the Lodge Lamp, he asked me to consult the librarian. As I failed to find him, I went to President Moshier, who told me I could distribute them on my own responsibility. So, as the advanced classes came out of their recitation rooms, I handed out a large number of copies of the Lodge Lamp, with my letter, on the subject to the students, enclosed. I had supposed that this institution was under good, moral and religious influence; and it appears to be well endowed, and to have a good number of students in the classes, and I was altogether surprised to find it dominated by such organized selfishness.

I also visited the Baptist University at Kalamazoo. There are no secret societies among the students there, and it has a large number of both sexes in the various classes. The theological department has some young men in it who are already ordained ministers, and on the Sabbath they labor as pastors in the churches around. I preached on Sabbath morning, in a large Baptist meeting-house, at Allegan, by invitation of one of them who is pastor there. The reform books, placed in the library a few years ago, I found in good condition, and two theological students undertook to distribute the Lodge Lamps among the young people. Yours,

S. F. PORTER.

CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES IN ALEXANDRIA, MINNESOTA.

ALEXANDRIA, Minn., March 15, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Douglas county, of which Alexandria is the county seat, is not only famous for agriculture, but it is also famous as a summer resort for people of leisure, and such as need to recuperate their vital energy. It has more than one hundred and sixty lakes. It is near the dividing ridge where a part of the water flows northward to the Red river of the North, and part to the Minnesota river, and east of the Mississippi southward. On one of its lakes, Lake Miltona, Chicago people, representing $5,000,000, have a club house; and other States have club houses for summer resorts on this and other lakes of this county. The area of the county is thirty miles east and west and twenty-four miles north and south, and is equally divided in its areas of water, timber and prairie, one-third of each. This village is the home of our ex-Governor, Senator Nelson, and where he has his law office. Free Methodists, Swedish Baptists, German Lutherans, Norwegian Lutherans, Swedish Lutherans, German Evangelical, an independent body of Evangelical Christians, Methodist Episcopal and Congregational are the Christian societies represented here. The latter two bodies, however, are a mixture of paganism and Christianity, being secretists in part, and cannot have fellowship with such outspoken people, as Elijah, John the Baptist, and other true prophets and apostles, were.

Last evening, Thursday, March 14, we held a meeting, in the Swedish Baptist church, on the subject of secret societies. There was a very good attendance; five of the pastors were present and brought some of their people with them. They gave me much encouragement, and desired me to remain some days with them.

This town is about fifteen miles from Glenwood, where Bro. Elsee is pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian church, the only one of that denomination that I know of in the State, except they have recently organized one in Minneapolis.

Secret societies are flourishing in Alexandria, and are well-supported and backed up by the Congregational and M. E. pastors, who themselves are secretists; that is, they have got a dark-lantern religion in their lodges, into which they bait the people; and in order to deceive them, they had, I am told, one of the distinguished M. E. doctors of divinity, (?) who is an adept in these dark-lantern pagan religions of the lodge here, to preach up Odd-fellowship to the people by telling them that Odd-fellowship is not a religion. I know the dangerous adept well. He preaches charity, charity, charity for all, even the devil and all his angels, of whom he publicly declares from the pulpit that it is his opinion they will be saved in heaven at last; but he has no place in his heart for the truth. He is a high Mason, and glories in it in a most public outspoken way. Expecting to write more about this very interesting town next week.

Yours very truly, W. FENTON.

ENLARGEMENT IN NEW ENGLAND.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Encouraged by the success attending the late National Reform convention, and by the co-operation of several pastors in this city, the friends have decided to attempt an enlargement of the work in New England. By request of the field secretary and agent, Rev. Lucian C. Kimball, the executive committee met to-day, Dr. Hershey presiding. The agent laid his plans before the committee, and after consideration, they were approved, and Bro. Kimball left on a P. M. train for Laconia, N. H., where he is to open the campaign to-morrow evening. Bro. Kimball is by no means a novice in radical Christian reform work, and he enters the field with a zeal begotten of conviction; and any church or community that give him a hearing will find a blessing in his services, and in turn help forward the much needed reform in civil government. His address is Middlefield, Mass.

General Booth's visit to our city has given a fresh impulse and added many friends to the Salvation Army. I chanced to be in New York, and witnessed the royal demonstration given by thousands gathered on the pier, who waved and sang and shouted a hearty God-speed as the ship left her moorings and swept gracefully out into the deep blue sea. On Sabbath eve I fell into line with a company of "lads and lasses," who secured a motley following to an open space, where they sang, prayed, testified and exhorted for a few moments, and then invited everybody to their hall, on Washington street. In common with many others, I accepted the invitation. Some fifty members of the army, male and female, clad in their peculiar uniforms, occupied the platform, and did most of the speaking. Remarkable conversions were related in simple but fervid words, and the unsaved were urged to accept Christ at once, as the only and all-sufficient Saviour. No one can question the sincerity or doubt the zeal of these devoted workers, and certainly there is a field for them where their somewhat erratic methods arrest the attention and carry the "glad tidings" to many who are not reached by ordinary methods.

CORRESPONDENCE.

JEWISH BURIAL FOR A CHRISTIAN.

CINCINNATI, O., March 21, '95.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Our city has for some time been visited by kings, potentates and priests, representing nearly all the tyrannies that have existed in past ages. What place have these relics of barbarism in civilized free America? Our papers were filled, for weeks, with the doings and exhibitions of secret orders, in which humble citizens suddenly were raised to the thirty-third degree of eminence, from which they could look down with pitying contempt upon all the rest of mankind.

Pictures and nauseating descriptions of puissant imperial potentates dressed in tinseled petticoats, with golden crowns and sceptres, and seated on gorgeous thrones, filled day after day our daily papers, till we wondered if all the dead monarchies and proud oppressers of the past had been resurrected. Among those that figured in these silly exhibitions were some Christian ministers. I wonder if it ever occurred to any of those to compare themselves and their surroundings and companions with the meek and lowly Master whose servants they profess to be.

I was called, not long ago, to make a funeral address at the burial of a friend whom I had often visited during his sickness. I did this out of respect to the deceased and regard for his friends, who are good Christian people. In my discourse I dwelt upon faith in Christ as the only ground of hope for the future.

There followed this address, which was largely made up of Scripture references to Christ as the only Saviour, a Masonic burial service. Many of the Masons present were Jews. The service was led, and the Masonic prayer was offered, by a Jew, closing with the words: "In the name of the lion of the tribe of Judah."

I do not blame the Jews for participating in these religious services, but how can anyone claim that there is any Christianity in it? I was afterwards told that the Jews claimed that my references to Jesus Christ and my prayer in his name was much out of place at the funeral.

Yours truly, J. C. SMITH.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION AT BRADFORD.

DE GOLIA, Pa., March 14, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A new religious organization has just been formed in Bradford; its religion, however, is confined to the name. In all other respects it is quite irreligious. It looks to me as though the Universalist preacher at Bradford will have to put a barbed-wire fence around his flock, and pretty high at that, or he'll not have as much wool to clip in a year from now.

The president of the new organization is a rank infidel and a lawyer; he whacks at Christianity at every chance, and is instant in season and out of season.

It seems to me that Luke 11:24–26 applies to ex-rabbi Weil's case; he has certainly taken to himself spirits more wicked than himself. I think the Parliament of Religions helped him from his Jewish moorings, and landed him among infidels. F. Shiverea, speaking of the same individual, said: "You have an infidel club in Bradford; some of them are pretty saucy fellows."

I've not learned that any of his Jewish brethren followed Mr. Weil. I gathered from the papers at first that some were expected to furnish a congregation for him.

Praying that God may continue to furnish brains, sinews, grace and power to the grand pole star of reform, I am yours in the conflict,

J. C. YOUNG.

DOINGS IN SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., March 15,
(Christian Citizenship Headquarters.)

As I predicted, the ladies killed the Township Suffrage, and more. They returned this week and repeated their extreme partisan talk, and put to sleep the Municipal Suffrage bill. Truly certain ladies need a school for lobbying. This has been decidedly ladies' week. The suffrage was more than quadrupled by the lady school-teachers, who were here in the interest of a bill permitting the teachers to establish a pension bureau of their own. One member said to me: "You ought to have heard a silver-haired lady talk; she was immense." Some women know how to lobby; these ladies were successful, the committee voted to recommend. Mrs. Flower, one of the new trustees of the State University, is working for Senator Bogardus' bill to provide a special truant chidren's school. The lobby has been full of all kinds and condition of seekers.

The License Committee has fourteen Cook county men on it out of a total of twenty-one, and in addition, has the only saloon keeper in the House. It met for the first time this week and sent to the House Mr. Kaiser's bill, which provides that a vote should be taken in all cities and villages under 15,000 for or against license each year, and those terms shall be on all party tickets. This takes the option out of political party hands and its enforcement from the control of bad men who may be elected.

Mr. Black's bill will come before the committee next week, and we are making a hard fight for it.

It would effect seventy-one counties, and if successful would clean out all Southern Illinois, except St. Clair and Alexander counties.

On motion of Mr. Selby, Wednesday, the use of Representative Hall was granted for the large Christian Citizenship mass meeting, which will be addressed by Dr. Carlos Martyn on Saturday night, March 23 Very great endeavor is being put forth by local workers for this meeting.

JAMES H. SHAW.

HE THAT DOETH EVIL HATETH THE LIGHT.

GOODWIN, Ill., March 10, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—On the L. E. & W. R. R. a lady on the seat just in front of me pointed out at the window, remarking that she formerly resided on a farm in the direction indicated. I observed she had a ring on her finger which I deciphered as the "three links." Of course it was not a far drawn inference to suppose that in addition to the Christian name her parents had given her, she had a heathenish and idolatrous name "Rebecca," perhaps, and which a little further inquiry fully corroborated. This lady was the wife of a Christian minister and, from her admissions, both she and her husband were hypnotized by the lodge. And when confronted with the statement that her pet order had other uses for skeletons aside from learning from them lessons in anatomy and physiology, she became quite nervous. It is sad to find people—and especially women—so infatuated with lodge worships and practices as to almost unbalance them when it comes to facts; so much so that they will make the most unreasonable statements.

Yesterday, in coming out from ———, Mrs. ——, wife of Rev. ———, M. E. pastor at that place, when the lodge question was brought up, remarked that the lodge was "silly and ridiculous," and yet her husband is high up in the A. F. and A. M. degrees. Of course this reverend divine has to toady to the order in order to stand in with his rich members so as to get boodle—for that is about what it is. It is a corruption fund paid to this preacher so as to give the order a good send-off, so that the lodge will be well received by the people.

We have the advantage of the lodge, however, if we will just keep moving. Turning on the light makes lodgemen twist and squirm and move about, as worms and bugs skurry away when uncovered so that the bright light falls upon them. The devotees of the lodge will lie and make the most unreasonable statements when the light of truth confronts them. The lady first above referred to, when we said seceders had given the Odd-fellows away, said she would not believe such people if they stood on a stack of Bibles and swore to it. I told her on one occasion I had a very exemplary young man working for me, and that he said their lodge robbed an Indian grave to get a skeleton so that they could have a complete working outfit. At this she turned her back to the writer and said nothing more.

J. S. HICKMAN.

THE COAST AGENT AT MICA.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—From Spokane I came to Mica, on the 12th, at 10:45 A. M. Revs. Fisher and Barnhart are the pastors of the Evangelical Association. They were both absent on duty, but had made arrangement for me to be met by a brother, who was detained at Spokane. Mica being a flag station, I looked much like a cat let out of a sack in the midst of a woods, when I stepped out in the snow at this point. I started down the track, and was not long in finding a good home at the comfortable parsonage. I found my appointment announced. The pastors returned in good time to attend the lecture. The night was somewhat stormy and cold, and consequently a limited crowd came out. They listened with marked attention. I spoke here one hour and three-quarters.

At the close I was cordially invited to remain, and preach for them next night, which I did. Three subscribed for the Cynosure, and two bought books on the subject of Masonry. One brother who has been a Mason for years, agreed not to affiliate with them any more. After he heard my lecture, he said: "Now, I see that the whole principle is wrong." He testified to the truth of our exposition in the main; said there are a few discrepancies in our statements. He gave an incident of how they depended on Duncan's Ritual to "post up with," so as to become "bright" Masons in their lodge. One man had especially used it in sharpening up so he could be elected Worshipful Master. He said the Masons all acknowledge Duncan to be correct in everything so far as meaning goes, and correct in almost everything so far as the wording goes. This man, he has never (as I understand) yet publicly renounced the lodge, sat there and sanctioned what we said, and afterward bid us and the N. C. A. a hearty God-speed in our noble work. May God bless him, and may he live long to let the true light of Christ shine through him to the glory of God and the good of souls.

Pastor Barnhart has been an Odd-fellow, but, under the light of the Holy Spirit, has spewed it all out, and is standing with Jesus in every true work of reform. He is giving himself to the work of the ministry, and is destined under God to be a success.

Rev. F. M. Fisher, the senior pastor, is a man full of faith and the Holy Ghost. He is beloved by all. They wonder how they will get along when he leaves. His health is very poor. The sword is cutting through the scabbard early in his case. We hope and pray that he may be spared many years to pursue his noble calling. This world needs many just such consecrated young men as Bro. Fisher. He related to us an incident coming under his own observation, which needs more than a passing notice. An Odd-fellow who had kept a saloon in Rockford for some time before, moved to Palouse, and died with symptoms of tremens. In his last moments he exclaimed: "Hand me my knife and I'll kill him." He was brought back to Rockford for burial by the Odd-fellows. The minister of one of the popular churches officiated as chaplain, and said: "Our brother died at his post as a faithful Odd-fellow, and has gone to the Grand Lodge above. Let us all follow in his footsteps, emulating his example, and meet him at last."

The responses to the minister (Bro. F. says) were joined in by the most ungodly men of the country. He was so disgusted that he could not listen to the man preach after that. While these parades in feathers and plumes and gaudy regalia and paraphernalia may lead some to join the orders, certain it is that it disgusts many, and forever sours them against the whole business. Let us continue to pour on the light.

P. B. WILLIAMS.

TRUTH GAINING GROUND IN CALIFORNIA.

OAKDALE, Cal., March 9, 1895.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am in receipt of a letter from Rev. P. Beck, of Grafton, Cal., in which he requests me to write you with reference to the reform work in California, etc. As I have canvassed this State pretty thoroughly, I can say: (1) That of all the places I have ever been in, California is the most completely infested with secrecy; so here is a good field to find reform work. (2) Then, while this is true, everywhere we find good, staunch anti-secret men and women, who are, I believe, willing to help in any way to bring about a reform on this question, when they are assured the means used is worthy their support. So far as I have learned, Rev. P. B. Williams made a good impression wherever he lectured, on his flying trip through this State, last winter, and if he can come again his labors will no doubt be more fruitful. I think we could organize in this State if we could have some one like him to rally the friends of reform. I know of no one so well adapted to do the work as he. Hoping and praying that something may be done in the way of supplying us with a lecturer, and promising to aid in every way possible any measure that will be the means of awakening the masses to the evils of organized secrecy, I am your friend and fellow-laborer, with God, against all sin, and for the establishing of pure religion and undefiled in all our beloved land,

(Rev.) JOHN MCBRIDE.

[We, last week, received a letter from a friend in Shasta Co., Cal., and signed by seven persons who wished to unite their efforts against the secret and false lodge altars which curse that State. If Bro. McBride should, in a similar way, interest those near him, and by lectures or sermons, and scattering Cynosures, or other literature on the subject of secret societies, disseminate light and awaken an interest, Mr. Williams, when he returns to California, will be able, by the help and blessing of God, to reap an abundant harvest.—ED. CYNOSURE]

CRY ALOUD, AND SPARE NOT.

DEKALB, Iowa, March 18, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Sound conversion to Christ, in which the salvation of God separates one from every evil, including the lodge or a compromise with the anti-Christ, is unpopular with the world, but is in favor with heaven. This battle belongs to God, and we cannot think of losing it with such a leader as Christ. Noah was wonderfully in the minority, but had confidence in God. His leader is ours, and we must have the same spirit as Elijah and the Hebrew children, and the same victorious faith in the Lord's reform work.

God's "straight and narrow way," in which "Jesus saves his people from their sins," including lodge idolatry, is unpopular with the world. The cunning craftiness of men has fixed up a more easy way to save people in their sins. A popular Christianity which, by acts and words and silence, admits people to be saved in their sins, is one of the things of the broad way, and it is the greatest hindrance to the real salvation of God. If it can be inferred from the way the minister handles the Word of God that it is not necessary to "strive to enter the straight gate," which is too narrow for the lodge or any other sin, it will be popular with the majority; and the uncompromising few need the same God and spirit of Elijah. Large numbers will seek a religion in which they are not obliged to give up their idolatry. God says: "Many will seek to enter in and shall not be able." The reason why they are not able is because they are unwilling to give up sin. Thousands are resting in carnal security, and but few are giving the warning voice, and a large majority are gathering in members covered with lodge leprosy, and innocent people become contaminated with it, and "perish for want of knowledge." "Cry aloud, and spare not."

LITERATURE.

THE OLD TESTAMENT UNDER FIRE, by A. J. F. Behrends, D. D., 12 mo., paper, 25 cents (stamps). Butler Bible-Work Co, 85 Bible House, New York.

This timely pamphlet embodies, in clear, compact statement, the conclusion of a profound thinker and competent scholar, touching the claims of a self-styled "Higher Criticism." It deals with the fundamental principles and facts underlying the radical question in debate, and thus exposes the fallacies and assumptions which comprise the chief material upon which the destructive theories are based. The following quotation reveals in part the line of argument followed, and the conclusions arrived at in this important work: "It certainly is a reversal of all scientific and sensible criticism to seize upon the variations in the historical narrative, and by their use to discredit the entire record and to reverse its general movement; as unreasonable and absurd as it would be to make the battle of Waterloo a fiction, or to convert Bismarck and Napoleon into legendary persons, because the accounts of eye-witnesses do not agree. Few things are more important for the critical study of the Bible than a liberal supply of downright common sense; and when historical criticism parts with common sense, applying tests to Scripture which would not be applied to any other historical literature, the critical results are discredited in advance. The Bible, after all, is the hand-book of redemption. It tells us how to go to heaven, not how the heavens go. It has been given us to make us wise unto salvation and to perfectly equip us for every service in righteousness."

"Anti-Vivisection" is the name of a pamphlet in the interest of humane treatment of animals, and opposed, as its name indicates, to the barbarous custom of cutting up living animals for scientific purposes. "The whole spirit of true humanity revolts against the idea of dealing with a living, conscious, sensitive and intelligent creature as if it were dead, senseless matter." Address Mrs. F. Allen, 104 N. 4th St., Aurora, Ill.

"The Changed Rite." This little work has evidently been compiled with great care and research. It gives a multitude of quotations to show how sprinkling came to be used in the Christian church as a mode of baptism. For sale by the author, A. M. Paull, box 86, Riverside, Rhode Island.

HOW TO MEASURE AN ACRE.

A Simple and Sure Method Within the Reach of Everybody.

It is desirable—in fact, indispensable—for good work that a farmer should know how many acres are in his field. Otherwise he cannot apportion seed or manure for it, nor can he tell how much time it should take to plow, harrow or cultivate it. A good cotton cord, the size of a plow line, should be kept for this purpose. To make one, buy 67 feet of cotton rope an inch round, fasten a ring at each end and make these rings precisely 66 feet apart. This is four rods. Tie a piece of red rag in the center. One acre of ground will be a piece four of these cords long and 2½ wide, equal to 16 by 10 rods, making 160 square rods to an acre.

The advantage of the rings is that one person can measure also by driving a stake in the ground to hold the rope while he stretches it out. The rope should be soaked in tar and then dried. This will prevent its shrinking.

Last year a neighbor of the writer had a heavy sod plowed by contract at $2.50 per acre. Three persons stepped it off. One said it was four acres, another made it a little over five, and the third said it was 3½ acres. The contractor sent over and got this rope, and all five men measured it, and it was found to be just 3½ acres. He had paid to have the grass cut off it for three years $1 per acre, or $5 each season, counting it to be five acres in extent, thus losing $4.50 through ignorance.

Get a measuring line, and when not in use put it away, so that the hands cannot get at it, or they will be very apt to cut a piece off it to tie up harness, thus making it worthless for measuring purposes.

How to Kill a Horse.

The Society For the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has issued a card showing how horses may be killed scientifically. The information is especially for policemen, who are ordinarily called upon to dispose of sick or suffering animals.

To shoot a horse so as to kill it instantly it is only necessary to aim so that the bullet will enter the brain by passing through a spot in the middle of the forehead above the eyes. The card issued by the society bears a drawing of a horse's head, showing the exact spot.

How to Cure by Delsarte Rules.

No. 1.—If your right shoulder has grown higher than the left by careless habits of sitting at school or by desk work, drop that shoulder down backward and simultaneously lift the left shoulder. Repeat many times.

No. 2.—If your head has been twisted around to the left from desk work, turn your left side to the desk and reverse and exaggerate the usual desk position; also straighten up. Do this frequently, and you will find relief and restfulness from it.

No. 3.—If you are troubled with writer's cramp in the hand, lay aside the pen; hang down the hand and shake the stiffness out of it; now expand it to its utmost; allow it to slowly close of its own will; now sway it aloft and shake the stiffness from it; expand it to its utmost; now allow it to close of itself; now swing the hand relaxed around in a circle, the action mainly at the wrist; now drop the hand for three seconds and return to your writing feeling comfortable.

"Aye! there's the rub!"
And that ought to be enough in itself to seal the doom of bar soap. This rubbing with soap may get clothes clean, if you work hard enough, but can't you see how it wears them out?
Follow the directions that come on every package of Pearline, and you'll find that you not only do away with the hard and ruinous work of rubbing—but that you save time, and actually get better results. At every point Pearline is better than soap. But the mere fact that Pearline saves the rubbing—that ought to settle it. 463

The Christian Cynosure.

WM. I. PHILLIPS, PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 28, 1895.

As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord.—Num. 14: 21.

"We cannot know how much error in the brain is consistent with the grace of God in the heart."
—Jonathan Blanchard.

Bro. A. Thomson's suggestion that the National Christian Association should be represented at ministerial, or church, associations, is timely and important. During the next two or three months there will be many such meetings. It will be impossible now to appoint and send speakers, but will not all the readers of the Cynosure, who attend association meetings, remember Christ's command: "Let your light shine," and as God shall give opportunity, enlighten the churches in regard to the "pagan institutions," which in all the world are seeking to destroy the Christian church?

THE AMERICAN PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

It is but a few months since a gentleman by the name of Walter Sims was being mobbed by Romanists because of his lectures in favor of the secret order above indicated. He is now out in a circular letter in which he renounces all connection therewith, and brings against the association the objections which thoughtful people were making at the time he was lecturing for it. After an introduction, he says in his letter:

"I have heretofore championed the order because I have always been a firm believer in the principles under cover of which I am grieved to confess its present practices to be most unjust and unpatriotic. In the course of my public discussions with the Hon. Ignatius Donnelly last spring, when that gentleman charged the order with overriding our national Constitution, I replied that if the time ever came when the A. P. A. or any other organization set itself above the Constitution and laws of our beloved country, that then, as a free American citizen, I would fight it with the same energy that I was then defending it. Little did I dream at that time that I would be called upon within the year to make good my words."

Continuing the subject, he makes the following declarations:

1. Its secret partisan political methods are a conspiracy against the rights of American cit zenship, and a menace to honest popular government.
2. Its constitution by which despotic power is vested in its officers is a violation of the Constitution of the several States and of the United States, and a menace to the personal liberty of its members.
3. Its usurpation of powers such as are alone vested in the constitutional courts of the Republic, and its refusal to allow its members to appeal from its actions to the civil courts, make it organized insurrection.
4. Its so-called advisory boards, in which are vested all the political action and liberty of its members, are a conspiracy to control their franchises of citizenship in violation of the constitutional and legislative provisions and laws for the protection of the independence of the citizen voter.
5. Its systematic persecution of its members and councils by the secret propagation of slanderous and libelous accusations, suspensions and expulsions by its officers for refusing to comply with their unjust, arbitrary and illegal dictatorship is despotic and un-American.
6. Its claim to be a protective association of the liberal institutions which are founded upon the Constitution, under existing conditions, is a misnomer, under cover of which it is organized as a secret political machine run in the interest of boodling politicians.
7. As now constituted and controlled it is the enemy of free speech, a free press, liberty of conscience, religious liberty and political independence.

Now there is not one of these things which Mr. Sims has just ascertained which he should not have anticipated. Secret societies are not needful to protect Protestant institutions or any other good thing. The good end is always avowed in order to float the secrecy which is naturally condemned by fair-minded men. The result must always be what this member and advocate of the lodge has found it. Why, then, should not all men when asked to unite with some lodge as a means to some good purpose, simply stand on reason and Christianity and refuse?

SUNDAY OPENING.

About two years ago the newspaper world was in a flutter, from end to end, on the subject of Sunday opening of the World's Fair. Of course, what gets into all the papers, starts somewhere else. Congress discussed the question; churches, conventions and mass-meetings discussed the question. Petitions, representing the wishes of millions of people, were sent to Washington. Congress, after mature deliberation, said the Fair should be closed. Churches almost unanimously, and the National Christian Endeavor convention, numbering twenty thousand or more, said it would never do for the World's Fair to be open on Sunday, and finally the directors themselves concluded that they were bound in honor to close the gates on the Sabbath. But the saloon element of any community is not conspicuous for its law-abiding tendencies, or for its Sabbath-keeping propensities.

Two Sabbaths, if we mistake not, the gates were closed, and then the weak and wicked and worldly united their efforts, and succeeded, by means of a drunken judge, in setting aside the national government and the opinion of the nation.

The old familiar heading, "Sunday Opening," rather startled us a few days since, and we looked again to see if we had picked up an old paper. But no, the paper is new enough, and we look to see "what next," when lo, we discover that the saloon wants to be open on Sunday! We were ignorant enough to suppose that the saloon was open Sunday. Oh, yes, in Chicago, but New York! Perhaps it is different there. Really, we never spent but one Sunday in New York, and did not even look for a saloon; possibly it's better there.

But in all seriousness, what could be the call for "an enthusiastic mass-meeting in Cooper Union, addressed by two ministers, advocating open saloons part of Sunday." The Voice asks, very pertinently: "What reason have we to think that the saloon will obey prohibition half a day Sunday any more than it now obeys prohibition for the whole of Sunday?" Another suggests that we go through the Decalogue, and let it read: "Thou shalt not kill, a part of Sunday;" "thou shalt not steal, a part of Sunday," etc. A minister, (D. D.) who addressed this "enthusiastic meeting," claimed that "open saloons on Sunday would diminish drunkenness, remove hypocrisy, and greatly promote the interests of temperance." How pious! "Promote temperance!" We never heard before that that was what saloons were for. But when the minister got through Satan must have appeared on the scene, for the result was to organize a permanent movement to advance the cause of so-called Sunday liberty.

"It is bummer rule, not 'home rule,'" that most of the advocates of Sunday saloons want."

CHRIST THE NEED OF THE NATIONS.

It is a time of perplexity. Never were so many promises of reform made by candidates for office; never was crime more prevalent than now.

The ship of state rocks and reels under the storm of political confusion and corruption. Nor is our government alone in trouble. "Nation is lifting up sword against nation." There are "wars and rumors of wars."

Never probably were there so many really good people trying to benefit and bless the world, in so many different ways, yet the temptation is strong at times to be discouraged and give up what seems to be so unequal a struggle, when we look back and see how little our efforts seem to have accomplished.

There are multitudes of societies, as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Moral Educational Union; benevolent societies, secret and open, ad infinitum; and connected with the church, missionary societies, home and foreign; young men's and young women's Christian associations, societies of Christian Endeavor. While in the political world half-a-dozen or more parties are clamoring, each wanting to show that its way is the right one to bring order out of this confusion; a good and just form of law and government out of the chaos of wrong and oppression which now exists.

The Congregational Club, a few days since, at their March dinner in the Grand Pacific Hotel, unanimously resolved to "urge upon the Legislature of Illinois the necessity for the passage of such laws as will give to the cities of the State responsible and honest government." Whether the resolution of these banqueting ministers will really have any purifying effect in our State affairs, we cannot say. We cannot always tell what causes produce effects in God's moral universe.

To every thinking man and woman, such questions as these arise: What does this state of things signify? What is truth? Where so many, professed, moral lights are being held up, how shall we distinguish the "true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world?" How shall this state of things be remedied?

He were rash, not to say arrogant, who would attempt to answer. It were wise, because true, to say, with Joseph of old, "it is not in me; God shall give an answer of peace."

Some things are plain to the Christian beholder. In the words of Mr. Moody, "Christ is what men want!" Just imagine, for an instant, that for one day Christ's word, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," were obeyed in the home, the church, in society, in the state, in the world. Why, the effect would be like that of his word to the tempest-tossed Sea of Galilee: there would be a great calm! But Christ has risen up on high, and works and speaks now to the world in and through his obedient disciples.

When Jesus came on his mission of mercy to earth, he came first to a home. The first and most satisfactory field for Christian work is in the home. First impressions are lasting. Truth impressed on the opening mind of childhood by a right example, a holy life, attended with God's blessing which he is pledged to give, is the kingdom of God set up on earth.

In society and the church, as in the home, the nearer we keep to God and his Word the more perfect and immediate will be results. Great care should be used not to multiply meetings to such an extent that young (or old) Christians will be encouraged to neglect the meeting alone with God. Jacob was alone with God, when he "prevailed with men." Gen. 32: 28.

In the state and world, as in the church and society, when the wisdom prevails of which "the fear of God is the beginning, national and international questions will stay settled. It is not because there is not enough, or because there is too much gold in the United States, that there is unrest and disfatisfaction; it is because men all over our land bow at altars not Christ's, therefore Satan's! (1 Cor. 10: 20.) God's holy law is broken every seventh day by us as a nation! It is because as a nation we barter souls in the liquor traffic!

But we should not be discouraged, the moral conflicts that are going on all around presage victary. It is because Christ is coming to reign that these exist. "A fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him." Psa. 50: 3.

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time,
In an age on ages telling—
To be living is sublime.

"Hark! the waking up of nations,
Gog and Magog to the fray.
Hark! what soundeth? Is Creation
Groaning for its latter day?

"Will you play, then, will you dally
With your music and your wine?
Up! It is Jehovah's rally,
God's own arm hath need of thine.

"Worlds are charging, Heaven beholding:
Thou hast but one hour to fight:
Now the blazoned cross unfolding;
On, right onward for the right!

"On! let all the soul within you
For the truth's sake go abroad!
Strike! let every nerve and sinew
Tell on ages—tell for God!"

MASONRY AND MARAUDERS.

However surprising it may or may not be, that the captain mentioned below chose to join the lodge, and so become a brother to the bandits from whom he so narrowly escaped, we are surprised that the Masonic Chronicle should wish to call attention to the fact, already well known, that many desperate characters are Masons:

"In the London Freemasons' Review, for December, 1841, there are related the following circumstances which show the strong and lasting impressions made on the mind of men by the teachings of Freemasonry. A man may become depraved and dead, as it were, to all moral obligations toward his fellow-man, but when the solemn duties he has promised to perform toward a brother of the craft are brought to his remembrance, they appear to have made a lasting and deep impression on his mind and conduct, and he seldom, if ever, fails to comply with the obligations he has voluntarily assumed. It also shows what Masons claim to be true, that Freemasonry is universal.

"About the year 1821, Capt. E———, late a member of one of the English University lodges, was traveling in Egypt. The captain was accompanied by a servant, an active and intelligent young man. They were attacked in the desert by the Arabs; the captain made a very resolute stand, and slew two of the robbers. He was, with his servant, soon overpowered, and conducted to the robbers' retreat, where they were separated. It was determined that the captain's life was forfeited, and he was condemned to be shot in the morning. He awaited his cruel destiny with as much fortitude as a brave man could feel under the circumstances, and employed his time in making the necessary preparations and instructions for his servant to take to his family.

"Instead of his sentence being carried into effect, he was very agreeably surprised in the morning by the approach of his servant, with the joyful intelligence that his sentence had been remitted, and that he was at liberty to pursue his journey; and he was given a word that would be a safeguard to him and his servant, should they be again attacked, and this generous act of justice was accompanied by the return of all the property of which they had been plundered.

"It is not surprising that under these peculiar circumstances the captain should embrace the first opportunity to secure a nearer connection with his servant as a brother of the craft, for by the exchange of the mysterious secret the robber of the desert had kept his faith with his brother. The servant and the Arab chief were both Masons, and through his servant the captain had received the benefit of the mystic tie."

THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.

Our attention has just been called to a criticism of the Cynosure, made by the Evangelical Messenger, last February. If the then Cynosure editor made a mistake, as seems to be the case, will our brethren remember that,—

"To err is human,
To forgive, divine."

We are glad that the Cynosure's mistake brought out the following good confession: "The Evangelical Association is, to all intents and purposes, an anti-secrecy church, and it has always discountenanced secret oath-bound organizations. The lodge is no doubt one of the causes of the trouble in many churches, but we do not believe that it has any appreciable bearing upon the Evangelical Association. It may be the case in localities, but not as a rule. In fact, we do not know that our own church has suffered at all by the absence of men from our services."

NOTICE.—Sample copies of the next number of the Lodge Lamp will be sent to subscribers of the Cynosure, with the hope that they will be used in the interest of truth.

During the year ending March 1, the missionaries of the American Sunday-school Union in the Northwest, under the superintendence of F. G. Ensign, of Chicago, opened 929 Sunday-schools in needy settlements and frontier communities where the children were not cared for by anyone else, having in them 3,494 teachers and 27,262 scholars. They visited, aided and re-visited these and other schools with a view of securing their permanence, 5,835 times, distributed 6,137 Bibles and Testaments, visited 70,000 families in the interest of the Sunday-schools and for religious conversation or prayer, and delivered 9,884 addresses. The missionaries in the drouth-stricken regions of Nebraska and South Dakota afforded temporal relief to over 2,500 families. The first fruits as far as heard from are: 4,928 professed conversions, the development of 101 churches and 36 Y. P. S. C. E. from the schools, and the going of 197 young people to high schools, academies and colleges. Truly this is a fruitful work.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—R. Canning, of Galva, Ill., writes a friendly letter and sends the Cynosure office some Masonic reports, for which thanks are due.

—Our friend Edward Brakeman writes: "I have always disliked the accursed thing (the lodge religion), but simply let it alone, until about two years ago, when the trumpet tones of the Cynosure roused me to aggressive action."

—Bro. J. M. Hitchcock drops in frequently and lightens up the Cynosure office with a few inspiring words. It would be pleasant to see more of the N. C. A. directors, and oftener.

—Rev. O. T. Lee, Northwood, Ia., sends an order for literature, and says, "Last Sabbath my congregation at Elk Grove requested that my next sermon should be on secret orders."

—J. L. Strahl, Glouster, Ohio, writes for information. A World's Fair leaflet prompted the request. "We know not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."

—Mrs. L. J. Wilcox, who has for eleven years been connected with the Cynosure office, in her quiet, unobtrusive, helpful way, goes soon with her husband to Elkhart, Indiana. God bless them and make them a blessing in their new home.

—Bro. J. P. Stoddard writes that Mr. Isaac Flagg, the father of our New England correspondent, was stricken with paralysis March 20, on his eighty-ninth birthday. Miss Flagg will have the sympathy and prayers of many who never saw her face, in this time of affliction.

—George W. Clark, the once famous "Liberty Singer" writes for Cynosures from a bed of pain. He says, referring to his broken leg, "it is not as bad as it might be!" Bro. Clark shows remarkable "grit" (and we are sure it must be sustained by grace) for a man close to ninety years old.

—Rev. G. R. Wannemacher, Joppa, Md., subscribes for the Cynosure, and asks for information in regard to the Junior Order of American Mechanics. The Cynosure will give the desired information as soon as it can be obtained. [Can any reader furnish us with a copy of the ritual of this order?.]

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard sends us a slip, from which we gather that the United Presbyterian church, in Mars, Butler county, Pa., is endeavoring to get into working order by a sifting process. Members of the church have joined secret societies, and so are "partakers of the Lord's table and of the table of devils." (1 Cor. 10:20.) These have been kindly labored with, and will, at the end of a year, leave either the church or lodge. Christians should pray that this church may not be rent before the lodge demon goes out.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

All peaceful at Washington.—Temperance items.—Epworth League.—Important decisions on reform.—Jefferson's faith.—List of patents.

Notwithstanding the sensational and alarming dispatches which have been sent from Washington, during the past week, it can be positively stated, on high authority, that neither the President, the Secretary of State, nor any other official of prominence, regards any of the numerous international complications which have lately been so grossly exaggerated by sensation-mongers as in any way seriously endangering the present peaceful relations of the United States with the rest of the world. Some of them are vexatious and aggravating, but there are no indications that a satisfactory settlement of all of them cannot be had through the ordinary methods of diplomacy.

Here are some facts and figures used by Judge Kimball, of the Washington Police Court, in a temperance address: For the fiscal year 1894, the U. S. government issued 228,000 liquor licenses, which is equivalent to one licensed saloon for each 298 people, not to mention the unlicensed liquor sellers. In Washington there are 605 licensed bar-rooms, one for each 445 people. Deducting women and children and temperance people, and there are less than 100 drinkers to support each saloon. The estimated annual consumption of intoxicating liquor in the U. S. is per capita: whiskey, 4 gallons; wine, 1 gallon, and beer, 46 gallons. This, at the lowest wholesale price, amounts to $833,000,000, spent directly, but the indirect cost by loss of wages, loss of health, position and life, is far greater. "We are all," said Judge Kimball, "individually and collectively responsible for this state of affairs, and we must not shirk the responsibility, but fight the battle of temperance until we win, always remembering that we have God on our side, and that God and one is a large majority in any fight. The temperance organizations are doing a great work, and will be victorious in the end. I may not be here to see it, but I will wait for the glad tidings at the gates above."

Rev. F. G. Coxon, of Philadelphia, in an entertaining address at the regular monthly mass-meeting of the Epworth League, told what the Epworthians of his city were doing to prepare for the fourth conference convention of Leaguers, which is to meet there on the 26th of next May. His reference to his belief that a reunion of the M. E. church, North and South, would eventually be brought about by the fraternal spirit engendered by the work of the Epworth League, was well received. Eighteen chapters were represented at the mass-meeting, and each of them was accompanied by the pastor of its church.

Two decisions in the interest of moral reform were this week handed down by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, the first upholding the validity of the law against book-making, or any other form of wagering money on the result of a horse-race, base-ball game, foot-ball game, foot-race, cock-fight, or any form of contest in which there is the element of uncertainty. The race-track gamblers, who are causing so much trouble in Washington, made a strong effort to have this law overturned. The other decision, that the Edmunds' polygamy law applies to the District of Columbia, was the result of a case in which the defense was made on the ground that the only law in force in the District of Columbia, under which a bigamist could be tried, was the old English statute of James I, which says: "If the couple are separated by one of them going beyond seas, they may re-marry."

Dr. Byron Sunderland preached a striking sermon, the first of a series on kindred subjects, dealing with the religious belief of Thomas Jefferson, whom he characterized as the Nicodemus of American history. The two paragraphs following will give an idea of the character of the sermon: "Jefferson was a Unitarian, and so was Nicodemus. Nicodemus was a member of the Sanhedrim, and we all know Jefferson's exalted place in the formation of the new American republic. Nicodemus admitted openly that Christ was sent from God; Jefferson was non-committal on that point, but trusted implicitly in the moral teachings of Jesus. Nicodemus embalmed the body of Christ after the crucifixion, and we may readily believe that had Jefferson been there he would have done it the same honor. Nicodemus came to Christ by night to learn of Him; Jefferson was equally circumspect, and deprecated open profession of his faith."....."There was no question, however, of Jefferson's implicit belief in Christ. His respect for Christ's teachings was above everything else. He, in fact, sent at one time to Boston, and secured several copies of the New Testament, clipping from them all the absolute utterances of Christ, and from these compiled a small octavo tract for his own use, which, he said, was the most perfect, ethical and moral guide ever delivered in the form of words to men."

List of patents granted to Illinois inventors, this week, reported by C. A. Snow & Co., solicitors of American and foreign patents, opp. U. S. patent office, Washington, D. C.:

Hugh Andrews, Anna, eaves-trough. F. G. Becker, Peoria, nipper for twine-machines. Anton Goldammer, E. St. Louis, device for registering shaves, hair cuts, shampoos, etc. D. Gruhlkey, Marseilles, automatic railway frog and switch. F. Harbers, Peoria, jointed oar. R. G. Hebden, Peoria, dust-pan. Fred W. Lechner, Garfield, gate-spring. Edwin Norton, Maywood, tin-plate drying and fluxing machine. Joseph E. Porter, Ottawa, hay-carrier elevating-pulley and yoke. A. N. Rooks, Iuka, coin-delivering and cash-recording device. H. T. Smith, Kent, stove-pipe damper. H. H. Sponenburg, Wadsworth, apparatus for leveling railway-tracks. *

Freeport Consistory Scottish Rite Masons, one of the oldest and largest Masonic bodies in Illinois, closed its four days' reunion with a brilliant reception, followed by a banquet and ball. Query: What can there be, which would be attractive to a Christian, in an organization which closes its sessions in the above fashion?

Three Ships.

Three ships there be a sailing
Betwixt the sea and sky,
And one in Now, and one is Then,
And one is By and By.

The first little ship is all for you.
Its masts are gold; its sails are blue,
And this is the cargo it brings:
Joyful days with sunlight glowing,
Nights where dreams like stars are growing.
Take them, sweet, or they'll be going,
For they every one have wings.

The second ship it is all for me,
A-sailing on a misty sea
And out across the twilight gray.
What it brought of gift and blessing
Would not stay for my caressing,
Was too dear for my possessing,
So it sails and sails away.

The last ship, riding fair and high
Upon the sea, is By and By.
O wind, be kind and gently blow!
Not too swiftly hasten hither.
When she turns, sweet, you'll go with her—
Sailing, floating, hither, thither,
To what port I may not know.
—Harriet F. Blodgett in St. Nicholas.

THEOLOGY SIMPLIFIED BY REV. MADISON C. PETERS.

Man Must Be Changed Into the Moral Likeness of God Before He Can Hope For Eternal Life—Obey the Divine Command. Put Love Before Theology.

We do not teach that we are guilty of Adam's sin or responsible for his act in the sense of being criminal, but that we have inherited from Adam a depraved nature; we have lost original righteousness. Our corrupt nature is called original sin, because it is the nature of sin, because it comes from the first parents, because it is the source of all other sins in the individual, and to distinguish it from actual sin. We have inherited from Adam a depraved nature. Now, what are the facts in the case? Does not the babe suffer? Is not suffering the natural consequence of sin? Do we not see that the very first tendency in children is to disobey? Do they not naturally incline to the wrong? Why so? Do not men inherit a diseased moral nature? Do not men willfully disobey the moral law and alienate themselves from God? Sin is born in the child as surely as fire is in the flint. It only waits to be brought out and manifested. Surely no one can deny actual sin. Now, did you ever see a tree growing without a root?

Our nature is depraved. Contrasted with the character of God, man is unholy, unclean, impure, as demonstrated by the records and by the facts of daily life. Man is the very opposite of what he should be and must be before he can hope to find that heavenly way which leads unto eternal life. Man, in order to bring himself into sympathy with God, must be changed into the moral likeness of God, so that there can be some basis for union and some ground for fellowship, for "what concord hath light with darkness?" Man must begin life anew, on different principles, with new convictions, affections, resolves, inspiring a new manner and course of life. This must be the result of a higher power operating upon him. If you ask, "What power hath God over me?" I respond he has as much power over you as the man you employ to graft your trees has over those trees. Man can take a tree that bears this year sour apples and make it bear, a few years from now, sweet ones. Is not God able to do as much with your heart as that man is with the trees you never made, but only bought? If man can change the tree, cannot God change you? Try it, my friend. Ask him in faith to graft you with a new order of life, and your life will henceforth be sweet.

How may you know that you are among "the elect?" If you choose to come to God, he has solemnly declared, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." The question is: Come or not come? Choose or not choose? When you decide the question and come, then you settle the matter of your election. By obeying the divine command you make "your calling and election sure." The eternal decrees of God are that the farmer shall have a crop if he do his part—plow and sow. The farmer knows this, and he knows that he will not have a harvest unless he sows the seed.

The decrees of God are made conditional on his doing. So in the matter of salvation God has "elected" that your soul will or will not be saved, and he tells you that you will be saved if you come to Christ and will not be saved if you do not come to Christ. "Whosoever will may come." The whosoever will are the elect; the whosoever won't are the nonelect. Don't tease yourselves with useless inquiries and perplex yourselves with the secret counsels of God. Attend to your plain duties, repent and believe, and your salvation will be sure.

Do not allow the technicalities of religion to stop your salvation. There are men who are all the time asking questions and making discussion the refuge of their guilt. They debate in order that they may not decide. They have studied redemption, but not the Redeemer; Christianity, but not Christ. Instead of discussing whether the serpent in Eden was figurative or literal, or fighting the wars of the Jews and worrying Jonah, or troubling yourself about the difficulties suggested by the book of Revelation, look to Christ. Believe on him, and take him as your Master and model, and you will not be slow to find out that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God." You may never have all your difficulties solved or all your objections met, but you may plant your feet upon the Rock of Ages. The great point with you is not this or that doctrine, not whether you agree or disagree with evangelical Christians. The great point is this: Are you at peace with God? Do you think and feel as he wishes you to feel? Is your soul, is your conscience, is your conduct in harmony with him? How do you stand before God? I leave the level of faith and come to that of practice and conduct. Love and repentance first, theology second.

True Living.

John the Baptist preached about 18 months. But he had the courage of his convictions. He did his duty, and his glory streams down the ages and floods the whole earth. He died at the age of 33 years, and yet the angel said he should be "great in the sight of the Lord." We may not preach long, but let us preach courageously. We may die young, but we can leave behind us footprints on the sands of time, reminding others that they, too, can make their lives sublime.

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
We should count time by heart throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best,
And he whose heart beats quickest lives the longest—
Lives in one hour more than in years do some
Whose fat blood sleeps as it slips along their veins.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning March 31. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Christ's yoke.—Math. xi, 28-30; John xiv, 14, 15.

A yoke represents a burden, and we are all born under or willingly take on some kind of a yoke. We are all carrying some kind of a load or burden. The Jews to whom Christ spoke the words in Math. xi, 28-30, were under the burden or yoke of the law. But a hard yoke it was. It required much of them, but gave them no strength or assistance in their burden bearing. Christ, therefore, called upon them to give up the yoke of the law, to become His disciples and to take His yoke upon them. To all wearing yokes, whether the yoke of the law, the yoke of pride, of sensuality, of worldliness, of ambition or self indulgence, Christ comes with the same request to give up these yokes and take His yoke upon them.

Christ's yoke is obedience to His commandments. He does not try to allure us into discipleship by telling us that as Christians we shall have no burdens to bear. Indeed Christ is very careful always to guard against such a false impression. He founded His kingdom upon a cross. He said, "If any man will come after Me, let him take up his cross and follow Me." He urged those to whom He appealed to become His disciples to count the cost before they did so, because it might be necessary as His followers to suffer much in the world. Christians have burdens to bear and yokes to wear as well as those who are not Christians, but with this difference: Christ's yoke is easy, and the others are not.

Christ's yoke is easy. This is Christ's own testimony. "My yoke is easy, and My burden is light." The Christian's yoke is easy because Christ helps him to wear it. He gives him strength and grace to obey His commandments. The yoke is often a cross, and yet it is light, for Christ Himself always bears the heavier end of it, as He did on the way to Golgotha, when Simon was compelled to assist Him. Christ's yoke is easy because it is a labor of love. Love lightens burdens always. To obey those we love, to bear burdens for them is a pleasure. It is not a hardship or a difficulty, be the burden ever so heavy or the way ever so long. Christ's yoke is easy, too, in the light of what it brings to us. No cross, no crown. It is through tribulation that we win heaven. It is through the light afflictions of the present that we obtain glory hereafter. Christ's yoke is indeed "like the plumage of the bird, an easy weight, enabling it to soar heavenward."

Wearing the yoke of Christ is the test of our love to Him. "If ye love Me, keep My commandments" (John xiv, 15). Obedience is, therefore, the test of love. Let us, therefore, obey His commandments, let us take His yoke upon us that we may prove our love to Him who first loved us.

Bible Readings.—Deut. vi, 2; x, 12, 13; Eccl. xii, 13, 14; Isa. ix, 2-4; x, 27; Ps. xix, 8-10; cxix, 127, 143; Mark ix, 41; Gal. vi, 9; Eph. vi, 2, 3; Phil. iv, 3, 4; Heb. xii, 1, 2; I John v, 3, 4; II John vi; Rev. ii, 10; vii, 13-17.

Memorial For Rev. Dr. Gordon.

At the first meeting after the death of their beloved pastor, Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., his Christian Endeavor society decided, upon the recommendation of their foreign missionary committee—for the society has two missionary committees, home and foreign—to attempt to raise $200 as the nucleus of a special memorial fund to Dr. Gordon. This was to be in addition to the $600 already pledged for the support of their missionaries. None but the young people was present in the room, and yet at once more than $400 was raised for this purpose. A debt of $200,000 rests heavily upon the American Baptist Missionary union. It is the splendid purpose of these Endeavorers of the Clarendon Street Baptist church of Boston to arouse the Baptist young people of the land to pay off this debt. They hope their $425, which will doubtless soon become $500, will be added to by every Baptist young people's society in the United States, in proportion as God has blessed the members. In no better way could they honor the memory of the noble Christian minister and missionary worker who has gone. It is not too much to hope that with the earnest and prompt co-operation of all Baptist young people even so large a sum as $200,000 can speedily be raised. Were all the societies to do only a tenth as well as Dr. Gordon's Endeavorers, the task would be accomplished.

False Ideas of Happiness.

Though Cupid is said to be blind, he is a far better guide than the rules of arithmetic. Love is the golden chord in marriage. What false ideas of happiness we have! When John Jacob Astor was told that he must be a very happy man, being so rich, he said: "Why, would you take care of my property for your board and clothes? That's all I get paid." Have a fortune in your husband, which is better than to have one with your husband. It is better to have a man with money than money without a man.

New York City Churches.

According to latest returns, there are in the city of New York 522 churches, of all denominations. These afford a seating capacity of 400,000. The most numerous churches are Episcopalian with 103 church edifices. Then come the Roman Catholics with 84: the Presbyterians follow with 70; the Methodists have 65 and the Baptists 50; the Jews have 46, and the Congregationalists only 7. The Roman Catholics have increased the most rapidly during the last 20 years, having more than doubled in that time. But only a small part of the inhabitants of the city attend church at all.—Journal and Messenger.

Tripping Into Town.

A little lass with golden hair,
A little lass with brown,
A little lass with raven locks,
Went tripping into town.
"I like the golden hair the best,"
"And I prefer the brown."
"And I the black," three sparrows said,
Three sparrows of the town.

"Tu-whit, tu-whoo!" an old owl cried
From the belfry in the town.
"Glad hearted lassies need not mind
If locks be gold, black, brown.
Tu-whit, tu-whoo, so fast, so fast,
The sands of life run down!

"And soon—so soon—three white haired dames
Will totter through the town.
Gone then for aye the raven locks,
The golden hair, the brown,
And she will fairest be whose face
Has never worn a frown."

Washing Flannels.

An English woman, author of a popular book on laundry work, gives in the London Queen her method for washing flannels, which she says keeps them as soft and unshrunken as when new. Cut into shreds a pound of good yellow soap in a saucepan, cover with 2 quarts of water and set over the fire until dissolved. Set away until the next day. Fill two large saucepans with water as hot as you can hear the hands in and add enough of the soap jelly to one of them to make the water soft and soapy and to have a creamy lather. Take the dirtiest flannels, put them in the water and rub lightly with the hands, giving any spots that are very much soiled an extra rubbing. Squeeze from the soapy water and wash thoroughly in the other water to free from the soap. This water should be as hot as the first. Wash the garments one by one, so that they do not soak in the water. Pass through a wringer or press out the moisture in a dry sheet. Pull into shape and dry quickly. Press with a warm iron.

Social Distinction Worth Having.

Remember that for women, as for men, social distinction is not worth the having until it can be commanded. Do not try to kick your way in at the doors of fashion. You may succeed, but your self respect will be gone, and when you arrive you will find those already there jeering and sneering at you, and with good reason. Wait until these people want you and give you the chance to see whether you want them or not.

Above all, be careful and rational and serious in your judgments of men. Do not put much faith in the theory of women's correct intuitions, about which so much fudge is afloat. Reason is better than instinct, although instinct is of much value to such as are incapable of reason.

And this, if any justice and truth be in it, applies to the new woman as well as to her of the old school. In fact, the new woman is nothing but the old woman, conscious of her eternal virtues of a clean, strong body and a straightforward, active mind.—New York World.

The Home Circle.

Irritability at home is condoned by those who love us because they are prone always to cover up our faults and endeavor only to see our virtues, but our lapses from grace are felt just as keenly, though we perhaps have an idea that they are passed over without thought or comment. The home circle will all too soon be broken up, the dear ones scattered far and wide, some perhaps going on that journey from which no traveler has ever yet returned. Therefore it behooves us to make the most of that love, that closeness of kinship that is the most precious gift mortal can possess.

Keep the brightest, the sweetest and the best for mother, father, wife, husband, sisters, brothers and children. Live up to your ideal among those who are so ready to gloss over your faults and glorify your virtues. No one will appreciate your grace of mind and manner more than they, and if only in payment for their blind devotion you should endeavor to give the best in your nature to those who are the best in the world.

Dr. Helen Webster of Wellesley college is the only woman who has ever earned the title of doctor of philosophy. She went to Germany and literally won it by hard, unremitting labor. She is a calm natured woman, with iron gray hair and a face full of strength and determination.

My Neighbor.

He lives over the line
In the valley of "ne'er do well."
His clothes, once fine, have a sickly shine,
Like moonbeams in frozen dell.

His locks are faded and thin,
His eyes have a hungry stare.
The "might have been" he failed to win
Seems mocking him everywhere.

His poor old shoulders are bent.
They carry a grievous load
Of strange ills blent through long years spent
On a darksome down hill road.

Unsteady his step and slow,
As if he had journeyed far,
And the sun were low, with never a glow
From hope's fair beaming star.

My neighbor has naught in store
For time or eternity's needs,
Though straight before to the evermore
His piteous pathway leads.

His record? Nay, let it pass,
But link to his soul's unrest
The social glass! Alas, alas!
For a life that has missed its best!

FREE LUNCH IN SALOONS.

An Ingenious Preparation Calculated to Make Men Drink.

A New York Sun reporter asked Chauncey M. Depew to say something on the subject of free lunches in liquor saloons.

"Free lunches!" exclaimed Mr. Depew. "Well, I did say something about free lunches, didn't I? And if I'm not mistaken I referred to them as ingenious preparations too. Well, they are. Now, seriously, although these poor people have twisted my remarks into all sorts of shapes, I meant all that I said about young men becoming slaves to drink. It's a terrible thing, and I think the free lunch is largely responsible for it. It's a most ingenious contrivance, and do you know that it's simply put in a place to make a man thirsty? Yes, sir, I tell you that the free lunch is composed of food of such a character that it keeps a man thirsty and forces him to buy liquor to keep himself comfortable. It is made up of pickled herring, corned beef, fish cakes, salted potatoes, pretzels, cheese, smoked beef, potato salad and dozens of other dishes the main ingredient of which is salt. And as sure as a man eats free lunch just so sure will he be a drinking man, unless he is possessed of rare self control. Why, I tell you the free lunch is more to blame for the number of drunkards around than anything else. A man takes a drink and a bite. The bite makes him thirsty, and the drink makes him hungry, and many a man who would leave a saloon after having imbibed one drink will stick all day as long as the free lunch is there. It isn't the drink that keeps him, but the ingenious makeup of the free lunch, and that's why I say it's a blotch on civilization and should be wiped out.

"Perhaps you wonder how I know all this. I'll tell you. I travel a great deal, and wherever I go I always make it a point to talk with the man next to me. I ask him his business and make him tell me all about it. Now, among others, I have talked to many hotel men and liquor dealers, keepers of fashionable cafes as well as German saloon keepers, and as the free lunch is a sort of a hobby of mine I always make them tell me about what they spread out for their customers in the eating line. I used to wonder how they could afford to spread a free lunch, but all liquor dealers tell me that it's the most paying investment they make, and I believe it is."

Hereditary Appetite.

The ablest lawyer whom I ever knew—and that is saying a great deal—came from a family where the men had for generations all died drunkards at an early age. This gentleman, who had every advantage of education, was inordinately ambitious and possessed of ability which amounted to genius, determined to reverse the family history. His process was to give his days and nights to the most exhaustive labor in the prosecution of his profession. At 45 he was retained in every case within 200 miles of the village where he practiced, and a supreme court judgeship was to be his at the first vacancy. He had a wife to whom he was devoted, and a most interesting family of children. Those who knew the story of his heredity thought he had outlived and outgrown its curse, but at 47, after a trial in which he had been almost sleeplessly engaged for three weeks, he endeavored to recuperate by the aid of brandy and went on a prolonged spree. From then until he died he was never sober. His clients left him, he abandoned his family, settled in a remote part of the country and died in two years.—Chauncey M. Depew.

Alcohol as a Medicine.

My own experience of 34 years in the practice of my profession, says Dr. Norman Kerr, has taught me that in nearly all cases and kinds of disease the medical use of alcohol is unnecessary, and in a large number of instances is prejudicial and even dangerous. Having given an intoxicant, in strictly definite and guarded doses, probably on the whole only about once in 3,000 cases (then usually when nothing else was available in an emergency), and having had most varieties of disease to contend with, my death rate and duration of illness have been quite as low as my neighbors'. The experience of the London Temperance hospital and other similar institutions, the current reports of that hospital being now reliable scientific records, amply support this experience.

Intemperance and Lunacy.

An article in The Good Templar's Watchword gives the sad record of lunacy in Great Britain at the present time. The writer finds an alarming increase, the present proportion being 1 to 326 inhabitants compared to 1 to 536 in 1860. The total number confined is 92,607. Twenty per cent of the patients among the men are directly attributable to their intemperate habits, and 8 per cent are among the women. This percentage would be largely increased by those cases which could be indirectly traced to alcoholism.

MILLIONS FOR WHISKY.

United States Spends More Money For Rum Than to Run the Government.

Americans are accounted a fairly sober people in the hurly burly of nations, but the figures of the internal revenue commisioner for the last year are enough to make a temperance crank stagger without a drop of whisky or beer.

We distilled last year 87,346,384 gallons of liquor, not including 1,430,353 gallons of brandy, making in all 88,777,187 gallons of alcoholic spirits. Expert bartenders estimate 63 drinks to the gallon. Therefore there were 5,604,062,891 drinks produced in this country. A conservative estimate of how much was imbibed across counters is about 6,090,000,000 glasses of whisky, for which we paid over the bar $609,000,000, or $5,000,000 more than all the annual appropriations of congress combined.

This represents a consumption of 100 glasses of whisky each year for every man, woman and child between the rock bound Pacific and the storm tossed Atlantic, or, counting only the male adults, 500 glasses per year each.

Of beer the figures are equally astounding. The consumption was 31,962,943 barrels—that is, 12,785,169,200 glasses, representing the expenditure for this mode of Teutonic hilarity of $617,258,400, or about 10 cents for each inhabitant.

In the neighborhood of 220 glasses are charged up in this calculation against each of us as our annual allowance. Therefore if we do not average our daily glass we may be sure that our neighbors are getting the benefit of our abstinence.

By estimating this year's internal revenue receipts from spirits on the basis of last year's product with the increased tax of $1.10 per gallon, the internal revenue receipts will be $97,674,905.—Atlanta Constitution.

Children Killed by Whisky.

Mrs. Barbara Heins, a widow living in Long Island City, N. Y., gave a party in honor of the fourth anniversary of the birth of her daughter Mamie. The party lasted well into the night, and a considerable quantity of whisky was consumed. The children drank of the stuff, and next morning the little girl in whose honor the party was given was taken ill. She died at 5 o'clock. Her brother Joseph, who is a year older, was also taken ill. Both little ones were suffering from convulsions, when, about 4 o'clock, Dr. John S. Burns was called to attend them. Soon after his arrival the girl sank into a coma from which he could not revive her. He directed his efforts to preventing the boy falling into the same state, but it was useless, and an hour after his sister died the boy was beyond hope. He died at 9 o'clock. The Queens county grand jury found an indictment for manslaughter in the second degree against Mrs. Heins.—Exchange.

A Nonalcoholic Thirst Quencher.

The Woman's Budget credits recent temperance efforts in Great Britain with the substitution of nonalcoholic drinks for beer in harvest time. A new drink, called "stokos" (because it is largely used by the stokers) is now gradually finding its way into gas works, iron foundries, the dock and shipbuilding yards, etc. It is not only pleasant to drink, but is most thirst quenching. It consists of a composition of fine ground oatmeal, lemon and white sugar. A gallon of this drink can be made for threepence, and if six gallons are made at a time it only costs twopence a gallon.

Death Rather Than Brandy.

When Joseph Livesey, who organized the first teetotal society in Great Britain, was 76 years old, in a severe illness and all hope of recovery was said to be gone unless he would drink brandy, although unable to move hand or foot, he whispered to his son, "Raise me up and let me tell them that, whether I die or not, I will not drink the stuff." He did not drink it, but lived on 15 years longer.—Frances E. Willard.

Saloons In New York.

There are 9,028 licensed liquor saloons in New York city, which certainly seems enough, though not as many by 1,000 as ten years ago, when Manhattan was a smaller place.

Some one estimates the number of inebriate women in British jails at 6,000.

Glasgow has 400 prison cells for women, and drink most frequently puts occupants in them.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON I, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, APRIL 7.

Text of the Lesson, Mark xi, 1-11—Memory Verses, 9, 10—Golden Text, Mark xi, 9—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "And when they came nigh to Jerusalem, unto Bethpage and Bethany, at the mount of Olives, He sendeth forth two of His disciples." This so called triumphal entry of today's lesson is recorded by each of the four evangelists. It is probable that the order of events as given in John xii is the real order, as very often events are grouped together not in the order of their occurrence, but to prove or show that which the Spirit, through the writer, had in view. After being received by Zaccheus Jesus seems to have come to Bethany and to have tarried and supped with Martha and Mary and Lazarus, at which time Mary anointed Him beforehand for His burial (Mark xiv, 8). That supper may have been after the Sabbath, or, as we would say, on Saturday evening. If so, then this entry would be on the first day of the week, now called Palm Sunday.

2. "And saith unto them, Go your way into the village over against you, and as soon as ye be entered into it ye shall find a colt tied, whereon never man sat. Loose him and bring him." We are not to suppose that the ass and the colt were there by any prearrangement of the Lord with any one, but being there the Lord knew it, as He knows all things, and the owner was all unwittingly accomplishing the Lord's pleasure by having them there at the right time for the Lord's purpose.

3. "And if any man say unto you, Why do ye this? say ye that the Lord hath need of him, and straightway he will send him hither." I have no doubt but that the owner of the colt was a disciple of Christ, for it is not His way to make use of the property of an enemy. Neither would He have His followers have any alliance with or seek any aid from those who are not His, for the friendship of the world is enmity with God (James iv, 4), and He does not need the help of His enemies.

4. "And they went their way and found the colt tied by the door without in a place where two ways met, and they loose him." They found it just as Jesus said they would. So did the man who believed the word that Jesus had spoken concerning his son in John iv, 50, 53. It is perfectly safe for us to say concerning all that God has spoken, "I believe God that it shall be even as it was told me" (Acts xxvii, 25). To believe is the way of peace and rest and joy; to obey is the way of prosperity and victory. The willing and obedient cannot fail to eat the good of the land (Isa. i, 19). All the affairs of the kingdom are His, and He will see well to them all. It is the privilege of all His people to know and enjoy His peace, quietness and assurance forever (Isa. xxxii, 17).

5. "And certain of them that stood there said unto them, What do ye, loosing the colt?" Luke says that the owners asked the question. We need have no fear of people or their questions if only we are sent of God, for He is the possessor of heaven and earth and doeth according to His will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can stay His hand or say unto Him, What doest thou? (Gen. xiv, 19; Dan. iv, 35.)

6. "And they said unto them even as Jesus had commanded, and they let them go." When the Lord Jesus sends His messengers, He always tells them what to say. When those who profess to be His messengers have a message of their own and not His, it is safe to conclude that He did not send them. He Himself spake only what the Father told Him to say (John xii, 49; xiv, 10), and both prophets and apostles were under orders to speak only what they were commanded to say (Jer. i, 7; Ezek. iii, 10; Jonah iii, 2). David says that his psalms were not his own composition, but that "the Spirit of the Lord spake by him, and His word was in David's tongue" (II Sam. xxiii, 2).

7. "And they brought the colt to Jesus and cast their garments on him, and He sat upon him." It is written in Math. xxi, 4, 5; John xii, 14, 15, that all this was done to fulfill the prophecy recorded in Zech. ix, 9, another illustration of the fact that everything that God has said shall be literally fulfilled, and since Israel's Messiah actually rode upon an ass' colt, as the prophet said he would, we may be perfectly sure that His feet will actually stand again on the very same hill from which He ascended, as the same prophet has said in chapter xiv, 4; that He shall yet be King over all the earth, and that all nations shall go up from year to year to Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, as it is written in the same chapter.

8. "And many spread their garments in the way, and others cut down branches off the trees and strewed them in the way." If all believers would cast themselves at Jesus' feet for His service as readily as these people cast their garments under Him, how quickly the kingdom might come! What a kingdom it will be when all things animate and inanimate shall be under Him, "for He must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet, for all things shall be subdued unto Him, and in all things He shall have the pre-eminence" (I Cor. xv, 25, 28; Col. i, 18).

9. "And they that went before and they that followed cried, saying: Hosanna! Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord!" This is from Ps. cxviii and is associated with Israel's joy because of the salvation of Jehovah. Some of the words of the psalm are found in the song of Israel at the Rod sea, and also in Israel's millennial song, which shall be sung when Christ shall come again in power and glory to bring the kingdom.

10. "Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest!" Hosanna is simply an untranslated Hebrew word, or two words, which you will find in Ps. cxviii, 25, translated as "save now." The kingdom they expected was the restoration of David's kingdom, the kingdom of Israel (Acts i, 6), and they were right in expecting it.

11. "And Jesus entered into Jerusalem and into the temple, and when He had looked round about upon all things, and now the eventide was come, He went out unto Bethany with the twelve." Luke says that before He entered the city He wept over it because it knew not the time of its visitation. He would gladly have saved them. He would have set up the kingdom if they had received Him, but they received Him not. On the contrary, they were ready to crucify Him. Consequently the kingdom is postponed, while Jesus Christ, by His Spirit, gathers out of all nations His church, after which He will return to build again the tabernacle of David and restore all things of which the prophets have spoken (Acts xv, 14-17; iii, 19-21). Never was anything more plainly written by the Spirit.

THREE SCORE DEAD

The Awful List of the Victims of the Mine Horror.

FIFTY-THREE MEN DIE IN THE PIT,

Fifty-One of Those Who Went Down to Death Leave Families, the Orphans Numbering 250—The Whole Mine Wrecked and Rescuers Work in Peril of Their Lives—Heart-Rending Scenes.

EVANSTON, Wyo., March 22.—The details of the explosion of the Rocky Mountain Coal and Iron company's mine No. 5 at Red Canon Wednesday afternoon mark it as one of the most horrible in the history of coal mining in the west. There are forty men lying dead at the bottom of the mine at this writing, covered with debris. As many men as can are working to recover their bodies. The bodies of nineteen have been recovered. Fifty of the dead men were married and nine single. There are fifty widows and 250 orphaned children as a result of the disaster.

The Long List of the Lost.

The names of the dead as gathered from the company's pay roll are: James Bruce, foreman; O. B. Maltby, superintendent of motive power; Albert Clark, Henry Scothern, William Graham, Jr., Hugh Sloan, William Sellers, Sr., James Hutchinson, William Weedup, Aaron Bull, Gus Kazola, Charles Kazola, John Wilkes, William Pope, H. A. Hyborn, Matt Johnson, George Hardy, John Fearn, Baptiste Julian, John Lapar, Isaac Johnson, Samuel Halston, Henry Burton, John Dexter, Thomas Hutchinson, Walter Miller, Matt Silta, Joseph N. Lesti, James Hyden, Charles Clark, William Wagstaff, John Lester, John Theby, George Critchley, John T. Martin, David Loyd, Marshall Langdon, William Langdon, Sr., James T. Clark, John Morriss, William Morriss, David W. Lowrey, George Hydes, John G. Locke, Willard Brown, W. H. Grieves, Fred Morgan, Jerry Crawford, James E. Clark, Samuel Clay, James Limb, William Sellers, Jr., and W. E. Cox.

When Death Swooped Down.

About thirty of the men killed belonged to the A. O. U. W., in which order they were insured for $2,000 apiece. The greater part of the men who have perished are covered with debris at the seventh level, where they were gathered awaiting the car. Work is being pushed with all possible speed to uncover the dead. There is no fire in the mine. The explosion is supposed to have come from a blast setting fire to the dust, making a dust explosion, since the mine was supposed to be free from gas, being well ventilated. This is the third disastrous explosion in this vicinity. In 1881 No 2 mine, Rocky Mountain, exploded, killing thirty-six Chinese and four white men. In the spring of 1886 Union Pacific mine No. 4 killed thirty-six men.

Not Less Then Sixty Dead.

The total number known at this writing to have lost their lives is sixty, seven of whom were killed outside of the mine. Of the dead fifty-one are married men and nine young men and boys. Up to this time the bodies of the following out of a total of fifty-three who met their death in the mine have been recovered and turned over to their relatives: W. B. Clark, John Morris, D. Laurie, G. Hyde, John Locke, W. H. Grieves and Samuel Clay—single; Samuel Hutchinson, William Morris, Thomas Booth, Ben U. Cole, Charles Clark, Willard Brown, James Limb and Fred Morgan—all men of large families. This leaves thirty-eight unrecovered bodies in the mine.

Searching Party in Danger.

The timbering is largely blown out and and the walls and roof of the whole interior are wrecked and shattered so that the volunteer searching party of eighteen now seeking the bodies of their comrades are every moment in danger of being buried. A coroner's jury has been empanelled which views the remains as brought out and turned over to relatives. The agonizing screams of widows and children about the mouth of the mine beggar description. The mules that were in the mine are so burned that they have to be removed on account of the odor before the work can proceed.

Besides the dead there are a number more or less injured, but these were all outside the mine. Not one inside escaped. Dr. Gamble, the resident mine physician, has about twenty-five under treatment for more or less severe injuries.

GREAT FIRE AT SIOUX CITY.

Warehouse of the Western Transfer Co. and Linseed Oil Mills Destroyed.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., March 22.—One of the most serious fires in the history of Sioux City completely destroyed the warehouse of the Western Transfer company, at 200 Iowa street, with its contents, entailing a loss of more than $200,000. The high wind which was blowing communicated the flames to the Linseed oil mill across the street, and it was partially destroyed and the greater part of its contents consumed, making a total loss of $400,000.

The storage building was an immense structure 150x60 feet, including a brick oil storage annex. The main part of the elevator was five stories high and had a capacity of 150,000 bushels of flax seed. In the bins at the time were stored 100,000 bushels, and on the lower floor several thousand tons of linseed oil cake were ready for the market. In the annex the oil was in huge tanks, having an estimated capacity of 120,000 gallons. Neighboring towns were telegraphed for help and Council Bluffs offered aid, but it was found that the local department could do all that could be done.

The building of the Western Transfer company was a mammoth frame structure, four stories high, covered with corrugated iron. The iron aided the flames and kept the water from reaching the wood work. The warehouse, 100 by 150 feet in size, and with four stories besides a basement, was filled from top to bottom with farm implements and machinery, the value of which was about $200,000. This machinery was owned by about twenty implement companies in different parts of the United States. The building and contents were insured for $61,750, but the National Linseed Oil company handles the insurance on its plants and the amount cannot be obtained on the mill.

Death of Lycurgus Dalton.

WASHINGTON, March 25.—Lycurgus Dalton, of Indiana, postmaster of the house of representatives, died at his residence in this city last night, aged 50 years.

DOES NOT WORK MIRACLES.

Intelligent people see nothing strange about the great variety of diseases which Hood's Sarsaparilla is capable of curing. They know that a large majority of ailments are caused by impure blood and they have learned that Hood's Sarsaparilla is the great blood purifier. Hood's Sarsaparilla does not perform miracles. It acts according to natural laws. It makes pure, rich, healthy blood, thus laying the foundation for good health, and then good health follows as a matter, of course. A recent illustration of the blood purifying powers of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the case of George Hildebrant, 432 Hayes St., San Francisco, California. He says:

"I suffered with a sort of rash which came out all over me, and I could do nothing but scratch. I took three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and the rash has entirely disappeared, and I feel much better."

R. B. Sangster, of Kensett, Ark., writes as follows; "I cheerfully certify to the efficacy of Hood's Sarsaparilla for overcoming the effects of the grip and curing dyspepsia and nervous prostration. I was attacked with what the doctors termed a complication of the above named complaints, last winter. I could not get a good night's rest or eat anything except the most soothing diet. I tried three different doctors, but their treatment did not afford me any relief.

"Finally, after reading some testimonials printed in the newspapers of cures effected by Hood's Sarsaparilla, I resolved to give it a trial. Although my doctor remonstrated, I resolved to take it, at least one bottle to test its effects. To my joy I found after taking nearly one bottle, that my appetite was improving and my sleep was not so much broken, and that I got up in the morning much refreshed. I therefore continued, and after taking three more bottles find myself entirely cured, and to-day feel as well as ever in my life. I feel indeed thankful that I became acquainted with such an agreeable, pleasant and effective remedy as Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven itself in my case. I cheerfully recommend it to all others similarly afflicted. My age is 54 years, and having been a resident of White county for a long time, I am quite well known."

"Was hat die Kirche mit der Loge zu thun?" (What is the relation of church and lodge?)

BY PROF. GEO. J. FRITSCHEL.

This is a valuable tract of forty pages which should be widely scattered. The Litteraturblatt of Reading, Pa., says:

"On so few pages we have hardly ever read so much material of correct explanation concerning the lodge question. A better guide, than this which says about all and warns in such a fatheriy way, can scarcely be offered." We recommend it to our German readers.

MISS FLAGG'S
LATEST NEW BOOK!

"A Prisoner of Hope."

COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.

Price, $1.25.

We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident, In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy, postage prepaid.

LEAD FOR LI HUNG.

AN OVER-PATRIOTIC JAP SHOOTS THE CHINESE ENVOY.

Great Excitement at Shimonoseki, Where the Peace Conferences Are Taking Place —The Would-Be Assassin Arrested— The Wound Not Serious.

SIMONSEKI, March 25.—As Li Hung Chang, the Chinese peace envoy, was returning to his lodgings in this place after having attended a conference with Count Ito and Viscount Mutsu, the Japanese peace plenipotentiaries, a young Japanese fired a pistol at him. The bullet sped straight, but most fortunately did no more harm than to inflict a wound in Li Hung Chang's face. At the time of sending this dispatch it is impossible to learn whether or not the wound is serious. The attempt to assassinate the representative of the emperor of China caused the most intense excitement and on every side there were expressions of deep regret. The would-be murderer was arrested. It is believed that he was prompted to the crime by misguided patriotism.

The Wound Not Thought To Be Serious.

The name of the young man who attempted the life of Li Hung Chang is Koyama Rokunosuki. His antecedents are unknown. Li Hung Chang was shot in the cheek. It is believed that the wound is not serious. Prime Minister Ito has telegraphed to Hiroshima asking that Dr. Sato, the imperial physician, be sent to Shimonoseki to attend the Chinese commissioner. The ministers of state and a number of other officials have visited Li Hung Chang and express their deep sorrow at the occurrence. Every precaution has been taken by the police and military to prevent any trouble. The government profoundly regrets the affair.

Caused a Sensation at Washington.

WASHINGTON, March 25.—The news of the assault on Li Hung Chang caused a sensation in diplomatic circles in this city. Cases where an envoy of any kind has been assaulted in the country to which he is accredited are rare, and those in which a peace commissioner is attacked are almost unheard of in modern days. The opinion here is that Japan will suffer greatly as a consequence of the assault and that the position of China will be so strengthened that she may be able to secure better terms of peace than she could otherwise have hoped for.

May Break Off the Negotiations.

The incident may lead to the breaking off of peace negotiations which were proceeding so satisfactorily, or at least may postpone further action in this direction until Japan has guaranteed the safety of China's envoy and made proper reparation. No news of the attack on Li Hung Chang has been received by the Japanese legation here and Minister Kurine was unwilling to discuss the occurrence. The members of the legation realize that it is a serious matter. They say no one will deplore such an affair more than the Japanese themselves.

Chinese Minister Not Talking.

The Chinese legation received prompt notification of the matter. Minister Yang Yu did not care to discuss the matter. It was stated at the legation that it was not believed that it would lead to the total breaking off of the peace negotiations, although it might cause them to be interrupted for a time.

The News at Yokohama.

YOKOHAMA, March 25.—The news of the attempted assassination of Li Hung Chang created much excitement here. The emperor and empress will send a messenger to Shimonoseki to express to the distinguished Chinese statesman their regrets at the most unfortunate occurrence.

LOVE TOKENS.

To fall heir to a big estate or to inherit large sums of money is a desirable happening to anyone who is constituted to handle it properly, and use it wisely, but such an event has been expected, looked forward to perhaps, and comes as a naturally pledged piece of fortune, by right and title. It is not looked upon as a memento of personal affection and regard, and does not awaken a feeling of reverence that comes from the heart alone, for in time the possession becomes a part of every-day existence, and the privation and toil that amassed a fortune are not a part of the inheritance. Some little thing, such as an article of jewelry, or a piece of bric-a-brac that commemorates an event, or is deeply associated with the personality of the donor, becomes a love-token, a keepsake that time cannot rob of its sentiment. It has an individuality that may take one back to scenes of childhood days, keep the heart young, or re-kindle the fires of ambition. It is surprising that you find in so few homes a memento of the great World's Fair, the embodiment of all the attributes that carry out God's glorious purpose that mankind shall search out a higher plane. The World's Fair was a poetic dream, that will live in the hearts of future generations as a fitting climax to a century that has given to the world so many great minds, and shattered the last vestige of slavery. The souvenir spoon is a beautiful memento of the Fair, and as a present to a friend as a keepsake or to preserve in a family as an heirloom, there is nothing so purely a love-token. The advertisement of the Leonard Manfg. Co., 20 Adams St., Chicago, on last page of this paper, will interest every reader.

Prepare for Spring

If you were about to journey to a warmer or colder climate you would make careful preparations.

Besides taking a supply of warmer or cooler clothing, as the case might be, you would thoughtfully select a stock of medicines as safeguards to keep you in good health.

The cures accomplished by Hood's Sarsaparilla tell what it does more eloquently than any argument which can be written. Read the frank statement below:

"Last spring, on account of overwork and bad humors, I became very much run down. About June a scrofula bunch appeared on the left side of my collar bone. It was very sore continually, and after a time my left arm began to feel disagreeable. In a short time it pained me nearly all the time. With that and the scrofula I was in perfect misery all through the summer. I became so bad that my friends tried to me get to have a doctor, but I thought I would try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I have taken five bottles and part of the sixth and am feeling like myself again. I have gained flesh rapidly The scrofula bunch and my lameness has all gone, and I feel like a new creature." Miss Hattie M. Clark, Parkman, Maine.

Purify Your Blood

Now we are all about to change to a warmer climate, though not of our own volition, and what is more reasonable than to take a reliable medicine to resist the debilitating effects of higher temperatures?

Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine needed. It thoroughly expels from the blood the impurities which have accumulated during the winter, increases the appetite and improves the digestion, drives away that tired feeling and nervousness, and gives the strength and vigor without which we cannot appreciate beautiful Spring. It is Experiments With Tomatoes.

At the South Dakota station experiments were made with seeds from green, sun ripened and normal fruit, with cuttings and with different methods of training and pruning the plants, with the following summary of conclusions:

1. There is not enough gain to warrant the additional trouble and expense of sowing tomato seeds before March 1, and for the ordinary field crop they should not be planted later than the middle of March. 2. Single stem training makes the crop earlier, but reduces the quantity materially. 3. Seeds from green fruits gave larger fruits and a greater weight of fruit per plant than sun ripened or normal. 4. Cuttings are decidedly earlier and more productive during the early part of the season than normal or parent plants. 5. Pruning plants before setting in the field retards maturity of the fruit.

Crossing Leghorns and Brahmas.

By crossing Leghorns and Brahmas you will get a bird much more meaty than the Leghorn and a much better layer than the Brahma, but you can't have all the qualities of both. The Leghorns are great layers, but poor poultry. The Brahmas are great poultry, but sluggish layers as compared with Leghorns. By crossing them we combine a portion of the good qualities of both breeds, and get both a good layer and a good market fowl, and get also the extra vigor always seen in crossbreeds.

News and Notes.

In recent years the total exports of tobacco from all ports of the United States have averaged about 250,000,000 pounds a year, of which about 150,000,000 pounds on an average have been shipped from New York.

Next to New York the largest shipments of tobacco are made from Baltimore; then New Orleans and Boston rank in order.

Poultry keepers are assured by an English exchange that traps baited with sunflower seed will never fail. The rats cannot resist these seed.

The biennial convention of the American Pomological society in California was a very successful affair. The society re-elected the old list of officers.

The botanist of the United States department of agriculture says that it is a fact, well known and admitted by leading European importers, that American clover seed in general maintains a higher standard of purity than that from any other country in the world. This is owing largely to the fact that American seed cleaning machinery has reached a higher state of perfection than that of other countries.

A GENUINE NOVELTY.

Think of making a fence and putting it up at the same time. That's the idea with the Star Woven Wire Fence Machine. Take it out in the field with a man to work it, and a boy to spool the wire, and you can make and put up from 40 to 60 rods per day. It makes a fenoe that is "horse-high, bull-strong and pig-tight." THE DOCTRINE OF THE JESUITS, with supplement containing speeches of M. Paul Bert in the Chambers of Deputies, in Paris, France, at the debate (1879) on the Law Relative to the Liberty of Higher Teaching: "M. Paul Bert, who translated Gury's works from the Latin into the French (from which French this translation has in turn been made), was a statesman of great ability, having the courage of his convictions. He saw the harm done to society by allowing the Jesuits to become educators of the French youth, and struggled successfully to have them disqualified by law from management of such education. This book is a terrible exposure of the principles of these would-be teachers of religion. Their religious principles are simply statutable crimes, unnatural and repugnant to all good men; and how we Americans can let them train our children, when the great French nation across the water have decided that they are unfit to control the instruction of its youth, it is not easy to tell. Surely, we should have as much concern that our future citizens be not indoctrinated in crime, as the French.' 612 pages, paper, 60 cents, but now sent postpaid for 40 cents.

SPRINGER AND "BUCK" KILGORE.

Appointed by the President to Indian Territory District Judgeships.

Washington, March 22.—The president has found places for two representatives in congress whom the recent political landslide left by the wayside—Hon. William M. Springer, of Illinois, and Judge (called by his friends in congress "Buck" for short) Kilgore, of Texas. Nobody in the west needs to be told the career of William M. Springer, but a good many people probably do not known that he was born in Indiana, at Lebanon. He removed to Illinois in 1859, and is 59 years old. His services in congress have been long and notable and he has always been a prominent figure in the house. His appointment is to be judge of the United States court of the northern district of Indian Territory.

Constantine Buckley Kilgore is made the judge of the southern district of the same territory, and, although not of as long service in the house he is almost as well known as Springer, chiefly because of his "vigorous personality," one of the manifestations of which was the kicking down of a door of the house chamber at the time Reed made his first effort to show that there was an actual quorum present, and had the doors locked to prevent members from slipping out into the cloak rooms. He is a Georgian by birth, and has plenty of "grit," a quality that will serve him well in dealing with the tough characters who will come before his court in his new field of usefulness.

The two Indian Territory judgeships are newly-created offices established by an act of the last congress framed for the purpose of checking in a measure the great spread and growth of lawlessness and crime in the Indian Territory, which had become a refuge of robbers and outlaws.

What our Uncle Sam has to Say About It.

Books and Pictures of the Great Fair are all well and good but they won't last. They're in the nature of opinions and there's a thousand different kinds and new ones coming, so that they partake merely of the thoughts of some descriptive writer—there's nothing sentimental about them. With the Souvenir Spoon it's different—The Spoon was made for the World's Fair as a memento for you to take care of, to pass along to your children—they won't tear the spoons apart nor wear them out like books, consequently see to it that you have a set to commemorate the fact that you lived in the time of the wonderful Dream City or participated in that glorious event. You will not appreciate the spoons as much as your children will, and by the time your great grandchildren have come into possession of them, World's Fair Souvenir Spoons will be heirlooms—priceless treasures of historical value. Is this not a worthy reason why you should buy a set when they can be had so cheaply? They are beautifully made of heavy coin plated silver, gold plated bowls,—after dinner coffee size—each spoon showing a different World's Fair building in the bowl. The price is only 99 cents for the entire set of six in elegant plush lined case. Why not order now? Remit by either Post Office or Express Money Order. Address in full.

Many readers of the Cynosure would send for a set of these souvenir spoons could they be convinced that what we say is true, that we offer a set of six spoons for 99 cents—the same that were sold on the Fair Grounds for nine dollars and that we are a perfectly responsible firm, and do as we agree. How could we continue to refer to the First National Bank of Chicago and all the express companies, and advertise so extensively in all the leading religious papers in the land, if we were not responsible? Do you imagine the editors of these papers would permit us to do so if there was any doubt about our standing? If you are in doubt, ask our references about us. If not in doubt order without delay before the stock is exhausted.

Why We Can Do It!

The readers of the Cynosure may doubt the statement that these spoons sold on the World's Fair Grounds for $1.50 each or $9.00 for the set of six, but no one bought them for less, and everyone may learn from the Exposition authorities that the privilege of selling souvenir spoons was awarded a syndicate of private dealers, shutting out the manufacturer of these million spoons, which we now offer, leaving them on his hands. We bought the entire stock at a price that enables us to offer them to you at 99 cents for six spoons—each one representing a different World's Fair Building. It is a genuine bargain that you cannot afford to miss.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.....16

The Annual Meeting of the National Christian Association will be held in the Carpenter building next month. Official notice next week.

Admiral Mede, of the U. S navy, received a cable dispatch March 28 ordering him to dispatch two war vessels of his fleet to the vicinity of Greytown and Bluefields, Nicaragua. Great Britain will have a man-of-war on hand by the 16th inst., when the time allowed for the Nicarauguan government to raise the indemnity in the Hatch case expires. This action on the part of the United States is interpreted to mean that our government, as the stronger nation, will see that no undue advantage is taken of Nicaragua. And if indemnity is allowed England it is claimed that on similar grounds a much larger indemnity is due the United States.

An important crisis is pending in Canada. Manitoba, a large province in the central or western part of the Dominion government, comprising about 78,000 square miles, has since the year 1890 been enjoying a free public school system not unlike our own; but at the instigation of the Catholic minority the Dominion government has ordered the Legislature of Manitoba to restore to the minority: (1) The right to build, maintain, equip, manage, conduct and support Roman Catholic schools in the manner provided for by the statutes, which were repealed by the two acts of 1890. (2) The right to share proportionately in any grant made out of the public funds for the purposes of education. (3) The right of exemption of such Roman Catholic schools from all payment or contribution to the support of any other schools. In reply to this order of the general government Premier Greenway, of Manitoba, says: "We shall not allow the state to support religion; we shall not allow the church to control the state; we shall not return to the civilization of the Dark Ages; we shall not recognize Rome as better or in any way different from others; we shall hold to the principle of equal rights for all, and that principle shall be dearer to us than confederation itself." Thus a crisis is imminent. God speed the right.

Mrs. St. John, to whom reference is made in our New York letter, has made a statement in which she suggests that Masonry may be a fraud after all. She said: "If Robert Macoy defrauded me, then I have defrauded many. I assisted him many years ago to establish the Order of the Eastern Star, giving freely of my time and substance. As I am now the supreme matron of the world of the adoptive rite of Freemasonry, and the first royal matron or queen of the exalted degree of the Amaranth, silence is therefore set upon my lips that cannot be broken. In 1882, before a select audience at Fifth avenue and Thirty-third street, in the city of New York, Sir Robert Macoy accoladed me royal matron. I qualified my office publicly in 1884 in the Knight Templar room, Masonic building, Twenty-third street and Sixth avenue, New York, in the session of the Grand Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, where a distinguished member of that body was accoladed by me, and the degrees of the Amaranth were for the first time exemplified before an audience, Sir Robert Macoy acting as second officer, royal patron or prime minister. This proves conclusively my right and title, also the necessity of carrying a sword, for in the ceremonies this is the instrument I use specially to exalt a Master Mason to a Knight, and a female member of the Eastern Star to the dignity of a lady in this highest degree of the adoptive rite.

The inmates of the Illinois Home for Juvenile Offenders have been disorderly and troublesome for some time. Some two weeks since about fifteen girls rebelled at the punishment inflicted on one of their number, and several arrests were made. One girl, Mamie Davis, was sent to another institution on account of her stubborness. The others, it was thought, would do better, and were returned. On the evening of March 28, however, when the girls were excused from supper, a young girl arose and said it was time for their fun to begin. The lights were immediately put out; the doors closed so that the matrons and trustees of the institution could not escape, and for an hour pandemonium reigned. A few of the girls withstood their associates and prevented their doing personal violence to the matron; but about thirty strong young girls shouted and tipped over tables and smashed furniture, dishes, windows, and whatever they could destroy. No adequate cause is given for the outbreak. Mrs. Henrotin, one of the trustees, says: "The trouble is, we are trying to run a penal institution in a paper house." To us it seems that such occurrences cannot but be expected. They, as the strikes, mobs, and riots now so terribly frequent, are the natural, the inevitable result of irreligion in the home, the discarding of the Bible from the public schools, and disregard of the law of God, especially the law of the Sabbath in our nation.

One noticable feature in the speeches of and for Mr. George B Swift, the Republican candidate for mayor, is their disclaimer of all party interests. On the evening of March 29 a mass meeting was held at Central Music Hall. Two thousand five hundred persons are estimated to have been present. The chairman, Fred W. Peck, opened the meeting with these words: "We have come together to-night as citizens, not as partisans;" and at the close of the meeting resolutions were adopted with unanimity, beginning with the words: "We, citizens and voters of Chicago in mass meeting assembled, regardless of party," etc. At a German mass meeting held the same evening, one of the speakers said: "He" (Wenter) "is in favor of having saloons wide open all day Sunday, contrary to the law of the State and the will of respectable citizens. Germans do not want to make the saloon their meeting house Sunday, and are not enthusiastic for an open day. Swift, if elected, would compel saloons to close at midnight instead of being, as now, the resort of thieves and gamblers." Such sentiments expressed at a caucus are very encouraging, especially those of the German caucus.

Von Bismarck is in a sense, perhaps, the greatest living man. It is at least doubted whether such enthusiasm could be aroused in all civilized countries to do honor to any other, as is being evinced on the occasion of the celebration of Bismarck's eightieth birthday. In 1847, when thirty-two years of age, he was elected to the landtag, when Germany was a comparatively weak confederation. He was strongly opposed to Austrian rule in Germany; and with almost unerring judgment, unselfish zeal and a great intellect, labored to make Germany what she is, a mighty empire with Prussia at its head. Germans in almost all the world are celebrating Bismarck's birthday with the exception of the three classes in Germany who hate him cordially, and who by vote in the Reichstag refused to send congratulations to him. (1) The Radicals remember him as their successful political opponent. (2) The Center Party cannot forgive him for his successful resistance to the aggressions of the Pope in Germany; and (3) The Socialists are not of course pleased with Bismarck's fidelity to law and order. Emperor William, however, sent congratulations and presented him with a sword with his majesty's portrait set in brilliants on the pommel; while the House of Burgesses recognized him as "The creator of the German Empire, our great honorary citizen." Bismarck's first medal was received from the hand of Frederick William IV., for saving a life; of the many received since, very likely none has given him more real pleasure than this. It is related that this great man, the recipient of the homage of Europe, has said "that in his long eventful life he never had a whole day of unalloyed happiness." How forcibly this confession brings to mind that great never-to-be-answered question, what shall it profit a man?

THE CREDULITY OF SKEPTICISM.

BY REV. H. H HINMAN.

I have just been reading an elaborate and learned work by an English author, entitled "The Rise of Christendom," and designed to prove that Christianity originated in the tenth and eleventh centuries of our era, and came forth from the imaginations of the monks of that period. It attempts to show that Jewish and early Christian history are myths; that Moses, David, Solomon and Christ are imaginary beings, and that what we call "the Bible" was compiled from the Koran, which is the older and original fiction.

Christianity, its author would have us believe, is an outgrowth of Mohammedanism, and both are vastly inferior in ethical teachings to the old pagan philosophy. Both, it is thought, will go down under the rising tide of historical investigation. A society, it is said, has been formed in London to propagate these views.

There is much misapplied learning as well as labor bestowed on this book, and none can dispute the boldness and the ingenuity of the argument. To say that the conclusions are shocking to common sense, and require as great a credulity for their acceptance as the wildest stories of the "Arabian Nights," is to express the truth but mildly.

The conclusions of some of the higher critics are scarcely less absurd. For example, it is held that David could not have written the book attributed to him, and that it was written in the time of Antiochus Epiphenes, that is, less than 200 years before Christ. It was held that it must have been written then, since it describes the Babyonian, Medo-Persian, and Macedonian empires. They fail to tell us how he could also describe the rise and universal dominion of the great Roman Empire.

Precisely on a par with such reasoning, is that which concludes that Paul was a Mason and the Master of a lodge. Was he not a "wise master builder?" Did he not lay foundations on which others built? Did he not deal in mysteries? Was he not caught up to the third heavens (the Grand Lodge above), and heard things that it was not lawful to utter? It is hard to understand how the learned Dr. Robt. Morris could have believed such nonsense. And yet he intimates that when Paul wrote to the Corinthians, "This is the third time I am coming unto you," he was going to confer on them the third, or Master's, degree of Masonry.

How any one should believe that John the Baptist and John the Evangelist were Freemasons seems incomprehensible; but that thousands do believe it, is unquestionable. Equally absurd is the skepticism about the expositions of Masonry. The evidence on which they rest is as strong as anything that rests on human testimony; and yet the great majority of professed Christians apparently do not believe them, else there would be one universal and united protest against the abominations of the lodge. Apparently they prefer to believe that the men who have told us the facts about the lodge were liars. But how thousands of witnesses should all agree to tell the same elaborate lie, and tell it in the same way, is a mystery which they do not solve

The truth is, that credulity comes as often from the perversity of the will as from the weakness of the intellect. They are not all children nor fools who believe lies. Some love not the truth but choose a lie. In the description of the heavenly city, it is said that "without are dogs and sorcerers . . . and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie."

SHALL CHRISTIANS JOIN SECRET INSURANCE SOCIETIES?

PAPER READ AT A MINISTERS' MEETING, BY REV. C. C. FOSTER.

I am at a loss to understand why I am called to the discussion of this subject. When it was broached in a question at the last conference, I made an answer that was intended to be plainly seen was an evasive answer:—a quiet declination to discuss the subject.

When I am in a minority (which I generally make out to be with some of my opinions at all times) I ever wish to be as modest as loyalty to the truth will permit. And when once those opinions are well known, so that no one is robbed of needed light, I am content—I desire to hold them in unobtrusive silence; remembering what one writer has well said, that "in a community where toleration is the custom and the law, one can persecute a whole community, as well as a whole community one." I have no instincts leading me to become a persecutor.

When asked the question last month if I thought it wrong for Christians to join insurance societies, I answered that "I never knew that anybody thought it was wrong." Of course all who know me understood that that was not all my thought, but simply all that I wished to express. I received another request that I write upon the subject. Then if you insist, loyalty to perhaps greatly needed truth demands that I should be ever ready to give a reason for the faith that is in me.

To make clearer the answer and its application to my well-known real position, let me suppose a case in illustration. As I purchase and pay for a hat in a clothing store, the clerk asks, "Have you any objection that men you trade with should make you presents?" I answer, "Not the slightest, if they wish to." The trader then says: "There is in that window a glass jar full of beans. All who trade here to the extent of a dollar we permit to have a guess at the number. Next month they will be counted; and the one who first guesses the exact or the nearest number will have given him ten dollars in gold. Shall we register your name?" "No, thank you." "Why? You said you had no objection to receive a present." "I have not; but I have a great objection to gambling." "Why, they don't call this gambling; everybody does it" "If Satan gets any matter so finely mixed that the masses do not see the evil, and are being seduced, all the more reason that I, who can see, and am God's servant, should raise my warning voice."

It will be pardoned if in this connection I use the first person. It may seem egotistic, but it is not necessarily so. I do not like to say a man "cannot do" so and so "and be a Christian." There are few things possible but that some have done who seemed to be Christians.

You ask me if I have any objection to an insurance society. I answer: "Certainly not, if that is all of it." But you say, "That isn't quite all. It is a little social society, having a few secrets just to make it attractive." "Ah! then, it is one of the finer arms or tentacles of that octopus, secretism, which is stealthily attempting, and horribly near succeeding, to strangle the religion of Christ, and civil liberty from among men. I cannot assist it." But you say, "What harm in such a little secret society as that?" I answer, Yankee-like, "What harm is a church raffle?" If I am to answer both I would say there is in each case at the head an organized and studied wrong,—an appeal to the evil in man, an attempt to remove the very foundations of pure society. These diluted and honeyed steps popularize and lure to death, where the open and plainly evil societies are powerless to charm or sear the human conscience.

When Masons took the life of Wm. Morgan for revealing the secrets of Masonry, it seemed to be God turning the light on a hidden and lurking danger, that true-hearted men might know what was being nourished in their midst. If men reject the light it would change from a misfortune to a guilt.

The people of the great State where the crime was concocted, committed and concealed, rose in their might to see to it that the real conspirators should be sought out and punished. They found all Masonry confederate against them. After five years of earnest effort they found themselves beaten at every point, thwarted by the most violent outrages upon justice from men who had been considered respectable, but to whom the oaths of Masonry had proved a higher law, leaving them to know no God nor honor elsewhere. They could not be touched by justice, until almost in despair Judge Marcy exclaimed from the bench, "If men will defy heaven and earth, what can human courts do!". The conspiracy was too wide, unscrupulous, complete. But all the more the public conscience blazed its wrath at those who could compose or defend such an order. The question, "have you taken such oaths as that?" roused to a state of feeling many a conscience that had slept easily enough before. Five thousand lodges surrendered their charters, and many renouncing Masonry, tacitly confessed the truth of the revelation. Many—at one time more than a hundred—made affidavit that the revelations were true; and many of prominence among them suffered life-long persecution, which is God's strongest way of proving the truth of that for which one suffers. There isn't a chance to doubt that Masonry has been correctly and fully revealed. Such proofs abound as bear with them perfect conviction to the human mind. They leave it self-confessed an idolatry in religion; a deistical religion seeking to subvert and supplant the Christian religion, and replace it by a world-wide religion in which all men (i. e. all unconverted men) can join without objection; and the Christians that may be present are not allowed to produce anything of their system which will interfere with this beautiful harmony. If they will take share in the pretty compliments that are tossed round to all religions, well and good; but all the time the system goes on to repeat over and over, and over again, ideas that, while they seem plausible, cut to the death the fundamental ideas of Christ's religion, and it bars forever against his claims those hearts which take it fully.

All idolatries are pretty and gorgeous in the outstart; always morally degrading in the final result. This will prove no exception. It stands also self-shown to be an absolute despotism in the midst of a republic, holding itself superior to it, and aiming to be, and by wide consent becoming, a vast normal school for teaching those to whom the republic's life is to be committed, its lessons of sycophancy, subserviency and ring rule.

Once this hideous conspiracy lay apparently dead at the feet of the American people, slain or put out of influence by its own deliberate record. Now it has arisen to an immense and all-pervasive life. How did it all come about? The dulled impressions of 70 years could by no means cause it alone. It was the shrewdness that, while keeping out of prominence, started up a myriad of little societies——simple, harmless, seeming—founded upon, patterned after and led by Masonry, and allied to all sorts of social, moral and business projects. Immense and ceaseless effort was made to draw the select, the cream of social life into them—any of them—little matter which. These became sympathizers with, or apologists for, Masonry, and also loaned the system a respectability which at length has brought it back to prominence and power. Masonry, or some of its simpler offspring, is to-day the religion of a large mass of our people; and the Gospel no longer makes its own natural impression upon any considerable fraction even of those who do not entirely dismiss it; but rather that of the liberalized heresy intimated and referred to in secret society.

And Christians are building all this against themselves and the kingdom they profess to love; bringing the corn and wine and oil which God has given them, and pouring it on Baal's altar. You ask me if I will take just a little of it in my cup. Would Christ if he were again among us?

Suppose a man comes to my native village and starts a saloon, an open bar. He is doing a rushing business; sells anything from whisky straight to a glass of soda water. How easily I could take that glass of soda water somewhere else, or if not, go without it; shall I walk to that bar and help to make his murderous enterprise a success, and by my purchase lend to him a leash to catch his victims, anything of the respectability that a godly life is supposed to have given me? God forbid! While the world standeth "I will eat no meat," not even the finest minced meat, "that must cause my brother to offend."

THE RELIGIOUS TEACHINGS OF SECRET ORDERS.

Anyone may know the teachings of these institutions who has the patience to wade through the hundreds of pages of silly, childish, blasphemous nonsense. These institutions have been thoroughly exposed, and it is but adding sin to sin for a secret society man to deny it. Not only have they been laid open to the inspection of the public by seceding members, but they have been exposed by their own writers, whose books have received the hearty endorsement of the societies about which they have written. Grosh's Manual bears the same relation to Odd-fellowship; the writings of Mackey, Webb, Sickels and Morris to Masonry, as the Westminster Confession of Faith does to Presbyterianism. I hold that there is enough revealed by these authorities, and by the admissions of secret society men, to condemn these institutions in the Christian's mind. I am not going to base what I have to say upon the revelations of seceding members of secret orders, although I know that these are in the main true; but will call attention to their religious teachings as gathered from their own public utterances.

THEY TEACH RELIGION.

If this is not true, why is it that a majority of their members are satisfied with their order as "a good enough religion" for them? Why is it that so many men will give up their church in preference to giving up their society? There must be something in these orders of a religious nature.

I think that it is very clear that there is.

First, These societies have a creed. It is the same in them all. No man can get membership in Masonry, Odd-fellowship or Knights of Pythias who does not profess to believe in a "Supreme Being," or in "a Supreme Architect of the universe." That is a religious creed.

Second, Their rituals, ceremonials, emblems and officers' names present most clearly and distinctly the religious idea. All of these societies have their rituals with their forms of prayer; their chaplains or prelates; their high priests; their worshipful masters; the ark of the covenant; the brazen serpent; the altar, etc. Now what is all this but religion? If these things are not for the purpose of teaching something, what are they for? If they do not teach a religion, what do they teach? Anyone who reads over their forms of prayers; the statements that are made in reference to their ceremonies of initiation; the high-sounding names of their officials; and listens to the statements that are made by many of their members in regard to the religious character of the orders, may be convinced of the fact that they teach religion.

Third, Grosh says, "True, we have a religious test—we use forms of worship; we have a religious faith for the basis of our fellowship, and to unite us in religious duty." Mackey says, "The truth is that Masonry is undoubtedly a religious institution—its religion being of that universal kind in which all men must agree." The fact that they teach religion will be more fully shown in answering the question,

WHAT KIND OF RELIGION DO THEY TEACH?

These orders are called by their books, "living temples." Let us enter and behold the deity at whose shrine the worshipers in these "temples" present their offerings. As we have seen, the law requires that the member must be a believer in a "Supreme Being." Who is this "Supreme Being"? Is it the Christian's God? Let us see. Grosh's Manual, p. 378: "The descendants of Abraham, the divers followers of Jesus, the Pariahs of stricter sects, here gather around the same altar as one family, manifesting no difference of creed or worship." And again, "The members of the order must leave their prejudices at the door, and mingle in one circle of brotherhood, harmony and love." What are these prejudices that the professing Christian must leave at the door, not only of the Odd-fellows' lodge, but of every Masonic and K. of P. lodge in the world? You are obliged to leave aside everything when you enter the lodge-room that distinguishes you from a Jew, a Mohammedan or a heathen! You must believe in a god, but the god in whom you believe and worship in the lodge-room in common with the Jew, Mohammedan and heathen is a "Supreme something," whom no man can know, and to whom no man can approach. Christianity teaches that the only being who is God, is he who is manifested through Jesus Christ, but you don't dare to teach that in the lodge-room. That is a Christian "prejudice," and you must leave it at the door! The god of the order, in whom you must be a believer, and to whom all worship in the lodge-room must be offered—is the deist's god, and the religion of these societies whose common creed is "a belief in a Supreme Being" is deism.

THEIR PRAYERS.

Their prayers are all along the same line. These societies have many authorized prayers; but in all the forms for prayer in the rituals of Masonry, Odd-fellowship and Knights of Pythias, not one reference is made to our Lord Jesus Christ!

These Christless prayers confirm us in saying that the institutions to which they belong, teaching as they do religion, teach a Christless religion. These prayers teach us that men may approach God in some other way than the way of divine appointment. How directly opposed this is to the teaching of our holy religion! Jesus says: "No man can come to the Father but by me." These societies, therefore, make it unlawful in the lodge-room to go to the Father in prayer. I am aware of the fact that sometimes prayer is offered in the name of Christ in the lodge-room; but bear in mind that such a prayer is not authorized by the order: that it is not legitimate; and that if a Jew, Mohammedan, or any other unbeliever is present and objects to such a prayer, his objection is sustained, and the name of Jesus is ruled out It makes no difference how strongly any member of these societies may deny the above truth, I am prepared to prove what I have said by the written law and decisions of these institutions themselves. But to further show their religious teachings, I want to call attention to a few extracts from their authorized works.

THEIR PUBLISHED TEACHINGS

I have not room to give more than a glance at their written religious teachings. I wish that every one who reads this would obtain for himself a copy of "Grosh's Manual," and get a view of Odd-fellowship, and a copy of "Mackey's Manual of the Lodge," and get a view of Masonry. I tell you, my brother, if ever you feel like singing an imprecatory Psalm, with the spirit and with the understanding, it will be when you see the indignity which these societies bring upon our Christ and his Word!

Here is a specimen from Grosh: "What regeneration by the word of truth is in religion, initiation is in Odd-fellowship." "The aims of Odd-fellowship are, the imbibing of the mind of our brethren with proper conceptions of their powers and capacities, giving them just and practical views of their duties and responsibilities, exhibiting their dependence upon God, and bringing them to a knowledge and practice of the true fraternal relations between man and man." "May your initiation and consequent practice aid in releasing you from all blindness of moral vision, set you free from the fetters of ignorance and error, and bring you from death in selfishness into a life of active benevolence and virtue."

And here is a specimen from Mackey: "In the early ages of the Christian church, the newly-baptized convert was invested with a white robe, to denote that he had been cleansed from his former sins, and was thenceforth to lead a life of purity. With a similar meaning, the same undefiled color has been preserved in the apron of the Freemason." "We, as free and accepted Masons, are taught to make use of it (The Common Gavel) for the noble and glorious purpose of divesting our hearts and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life; thereby fitting our minds as living stones for that spiritual building, that house 'not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.'" "Darkness, applied to Masonic symbolism, is intended to remind the candidate of his ignorance, which Masonry is to enlighten; of his evil nature, which Masonry is to purify; of the world, in whose obscurity he has been wandering, and from which Masonry is to rescue him."

And this is just a sample of the published teachings of these institutions. From beginning to end they teach that there is salvation without an atonement, and regeneration without the power of the Holy Spirit. Christ and his Spirit are excluded from the religion of the lodge. And yet there are to be found professing Christians who, in the face of this clearly-established fact, stand up and tell us that a connection with these orders is consistent with all the requirements of the Gospel of the grace of God! Shame on such in the light of God's Word. "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, giving thanks to God and the Father by him."

If I have the ear of a single secret society member, who professes to be a follower of the Christ, let me beseech you by the mercies of God, that you remain no longer with an institution that at any time denies that holy name by which you are called—an institution that teaches a Christless religion. "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." "Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you and ye shall be my sons and daughters, said the Lord Almighty."—Rev. W. P. White in Christian Union Herald.

WESTERN SUFFERERS.

I have been waiting for Bro. Austin or some other presiding elder to explain the situation in this country, but if you will permit I will herewith give a brief account of the state of things here, in the Conservator. In the first place I wish to say that there is plenty of aid sent to the State board at Lincoln to supply all; but they do not send it where it is needed. They held seventy-seven carloads there till much of it spoiled, though cry after cry was coming from the West where the people were starving and freezing to death. In the second place, those who need it worst seldom get it. The poor who do not belong to some secret society have but little hope of getting anything from the State board. To show this, I want to give a few facts which I know to be true. In the year 1890, there was a carload came to our county-seat, and a neighbor of mine, a well-to-do farmer and a high order man, got ten sacks of flour at one time; and another neighbor, a poor man, at starvation point, but not an order man, went for help but failed to get anything. He came back past our place after dark and told a straight story and said they had nothing to eat, and we gave him a half sack of flour. The second case was last week. A poor man with a large family tried to get some aid, but was refused. He is a strong anti secrecy man. Another neighbor belongs to two or three different orders, and has a good farm, with about eighty head of hogs, horses and cattle; besides he gets a government pension of $12 per month. This man got a good supply of this same aid. You ask, Is there not some remedy? If so, please tell me what it is. There is but one remedy, and that is to knock secrecy out of existence, and place every man, woman and child on an equality as God intended they should be. Then, and not till then, will we get what we ought to have. May God deliver us as a nation from the grasp of the lodge and the devil —Rev J. J. Haskins in Christian Conservator.

TRUTH AND POLITICS.

The idea that the temperance question has suffered anything by coming out of the realm of morals into the realm of politics, is a false one. Truth is truth anywhere. Truth sits to-day in the throne of God in heaven, and truth abides in hell and makes the devils believe and tremble; but it does not hurt the truth any to abide in hell; it makes it uncomfortable for the devils, but it won't hurt the truth. And so it will not hurt morals to come into the realm of politics. If politics and politicians are not up to the white lines of God's righteousness, it may make it uncomfortable for them, but it won't hurt morals. Sometimes when I hear people deprecating the coming of morals to the realm of political discussion, it makes me think they may have the same idea of politics that the old woman in Connecticut had of religion; she was having a discussion with her friend on foreordination and predestination; he had gotten the better of her; finally in her impatience she said: "I don't care what you say about predestination and foreordination, but if you take away my total depravity you take away all the religion I have got." So some people seem to think that if a little morals should get mixed up with politics and spoil its total depravity, it takes away all the politics we have.—Selected.

"The Supreme Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, in retaliation for being ousted from doing business in this State, now comes into the Federal Court and demands that the Iowa Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen be restrained from using the name, on the ground that it is in fact and law a mutual insurance association, and therefore it deceives the public with the false belief that it is a benevolent order with moral and social advantages; that it has abjured the jurisdiction and control of the Supreme Lodge, and the provisions, terms and conditions under which it was originally chartered. Meanwhile the Iowa lodge keeps on sawing wood."

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Police officials indicted.—Strike declared off.—Russian church.—Masonic sensation, etc.

The Oyer and Terminer Grand Jury have handed in between thirty and forty indictments against police officials, and consternation reigns throughout the department. Inspector McLaughlin heads the list, charged on five counts with bribery and extortion. Captains, ward-men and detectives are included among the others. The inspector's bail was placed at $20,000, and the others ranged from $11,000 down to $2,500. The police commissioners promptly suspended them all from duty. The district attorney, Col. Fellows, will personally conduct the prosecution, and they will be placed on trial during the April term of court. In its presentment the Grand Jury declared that it received no help whatever from the police in its investigations, and that it has a great quantity of evidence against other officers not of a kind to secure legal conviction, but such as to make it certain that the corruption is even more extensive than the indictments would suggest. It also comments severely on the "enjoyment by the executive head of the force of a considerable fortune accumulated as a result of favors granted in recognition of the performance of official duty."

Supt. Byrnes admitted while on the witness stand before the Lexow Committee that in return for favors extended to Jay Gould and other operators in Wall street they had assisted him in speculation so that he had realized several hundred thousand dollars. The Grand Jury intimated, with a tinge of sarcasm, that the moral distinctions between these rewards and those for which some of his subordinates had already been indicted were not such as to be appreciated by the minor officials on the force.

These revelations make it apparent to the most obtuse observer that an entire re-organization of the whole police department is imperatively necessary. Meanwhile the Legislature maintains its attitude of indifference to the wishes of the people who desire reform, and the bills proposed by the Platt partisans are given the precedence over those formulated and favored by the Committee of Seventy. A monster mass meeting was held at Cooper Union Wednesday evening, March 27, to insist on immediate legislative action.

Another big strike has collapsed, and 10,000 men who have been idle for five weeks have returned to work. The strike ends what is practically a victory for the Electrical Contractors' Association. The electrical workers struck Feb. 18, because the employers would not grant them the eight-hour day at once, but postponed it till May 15. The agreement which has just been signed grants them the eight-hour day on May 1st, a concession of two weeks on the employer's part, for which the men have suffered five weeks' idleness. That the strike was not prolonged was due to the efforts of Bishop Potter of the Episcopal church, and Felix Adler of the Ethical Society, who constituted a Committee of the New York Council of Mediation and Conciliation. A general conference was arranged, at which the agreement to settle was reached. The feeling is prevalent that the walking delegates made a big blunder in ordering the strike.

A Russian church is shortly to be established in New York. A priest and deacon have been sent from St. Petersburg, and will hold the first service on Good Friday. Services will be conducted in a dwelling on Second Avenue until a suitable edifice can be bought or built. Both the clergymen are married, as the Russian church, like the Greek, requires its parish priests to be married. The service will be chanted in the old Slavonic language as in the religious ritual, but the sermons will be preached in Russian.

Masonic circles are stirred up over a recent episode in Brooklyn. Last January an eminent Freemason, Robert Macoy, died. He had taken the thirty-third degree many years before, and was the founder of the Order of the Eastern Star rite of Masonry for women. He was also Grand Recorder of the Grand Commandery of the State of New York. Many prominent Masons gathered to attend his funeral. The knight's chapeau lay upon his coffin, but the sword beside it was a borrowed one. His own sword was in the possession of a Mrs. St. John who resides at the headquarters of the Theosophical society, and she refused to surrender it. The secret leaked out at a recent conclave of the Dewitt Clinton Commandery, of which the deceased had been a member, and it was expected that his sword would be deposited there. While this conclave was in session, it was announced that some ladies sought admission to present the missing sword. The conclave adjourned to receive them, when Mrs. St. John entered, holding the sword above her head. She wore an evening dress of white satin, and was covered with the jewels of several Masonic orders. She paraded around the room and then retired, carrying the sword with her.

She said afterward that the sword and jewels had been given her by Mr. Macoy, and that she considered that she had presented them to the Commandery by walking through the room with them, and now she proposed to keep them. The friends of the late knight contend that he was not responsible for all that he did, although he attended to business every day. F. W. Farr.

REFORM NEWS.

PROGRESS IN PITTSBURGH.

March 28, 1895.

Dear Cynosure:—The trip from which I am just returning has been in some ways among the best of those I have made to Pittsburgh and vicinity. The circle of our friends there is enlarging with each visit. While United Presbyterian, Free Methodist and other friends show a live interest, none are more generous in contribution and cordial in their welcome than the Covenanters. Were I to report personal kindness received I should not know where to stop. I have been honored with entertainment in some of the best Christian homes. May the Lord reward them richly for kindness shown.

The meetings in the United Presbyterian church, Turtle Creek, showed the result of good advertising by live workers. This church is the largest of the five in town. It has a seating capacity of 500 or more. I spoke here three times and had a full house each time, the attendance being especially large the last evening. Many came from Brinton, Wilmerding and other nearby towns. The lodgemen, evidently feeling that their craft was in danger, came out to hear the strange preacher. The collection taken amounted to $12.25. Varied expressions were heard regarding the speaker and his work; some not altogether complimentary; others more favorable. I secured a list of Cynosure subscribers here as elsewhere. If there were some enemies, there were many warm friends who assured us of a welcome should we pass that way again.

While the upward movement in the business of the Iron City is not rapid, there are many evidences of returning activity. Wages in some industries have advanced. The wheels of the mills turn with less interruption. My next trip will probably be to New York City.

Let us pray that God may abundantly bless these times of seed sowing, that they may add to the glory of his name in the earth.

W. B. Stoddard.

THE ENEMY STIRRED IN EASTERN WASHINGTON.

At Rockford I was met by Rev. Peter Desgranges, who stands out for "reform and benevolence" on Christ's plan. His wife is an excellent helpmeet. Though getting old, they are still doing aggressive work for God. They subscribed for the Cynosure.

I spoke at night in the M. E. church on the Saloon Evil, touching the lodge question slightly. Our address was well received. I called on the pastor (Rev. Utter) next morning, and found him opposed to all secret societies. I was more than pleased to hear him say, "Not a member of my church here belongs to any secret society." He subscribed for the paper. I secured four subscriptions at this point. The pastor testified that the lodge needed antagonizing as much as any evil in the land. May God bless him and give him success on these lines.

I next came to Latah, where I was met by my old comrade, Daniel Doty. He and his excellent companion are true blue anti-secretists. Mr. Doty has been a member of the G. A. R., but has left them.

I called on the M. E. and Baptist pastors, and find them in hearty sympathy with my work. They both seemed much pleased to hear of the good work being done by the National Christian Association. They both promised to attend my lecture at night. The pastor of the Baptist church invited me to preach for him on Sunday.

That hero of many a battle, Rev. H. O. Kerns, of Elberton, assisted us. He is in his element when opposing sin and the devil. We had an excellent congregation. They listened very attentively. Only a few lodgemen were present, it being lodge night with the Masons and Oddfellows. The Masons had one of their Grand Lodge men present to strengthen the weak and comfort the faithful. There were intimations that he would be present at our lecture to ask questions, but he failed to show up. So we had it all our own way. Five took the Cynosure. Quite a number signed our constitution. This was a fine congregation. I went home with Bro. D. W. Bridgeman after the lecture. He is the man who was instrumental in my making this tour of the State. He is a reformer after my own heart, and an exceptional business man. He is not afraid to oppose secret societies for fear it will injure his business. He puts principle above business or anything else. He has a noble Christian family, and a most beautiful home.

I preached for Bro. Kerns at Lone Pine, on Sabbath morning, to a full house. After the discourse the pastor introduced a testimony meeting, which continued until one o'clock. Oh, what a blessed time! This was a meeting ong to be remembered.

On Sabbath evening I spoke on the lodge at the Pioneer M. E. church. The house was filled. Here I met for the first time Bro. and Sister Cozier, old-time reformers, Cynosure people from away back; one feels at home with such. I only regretted that I was too busy to accept their kind offer to rest a few days with them. At Pioneer I received the best collection I have had since I left Roseburg in January.

On Monday night, I spoke on the evils of secret societies, in the Baptist church at Tekoa. This is a new railroad town. It is where the Mullan branch leaves the main line of the O. R. and N. railroad. It is said that about every man in the place who is at all acceptable is a member of some lodge, The house was crowded. I have never seen so much brass in a congregation. I mean brass buttons, badges, chains, gewgaws, etc. It was evident the lodgeites were ill at ease after a volley or two. One man showed the white feather, and ran. Had it not been for the remarks following him, I think he would have had a following from the fraternity men. At times they seemed like a pent-up cyclone, ready to burst out any moment. When they were dismissed they reminded one of a full hive of bees just ready to swarm. As we were getting in our rig, we overheard a man among them say: "If we had a box of rotten eggs they would suit him." I answered, "Those are genuine lodge arguments. They are the very best you can produce in defense of your rotten system." Some one went back to the big mogul of the lodge and wanted him to come up and ask me some questions. He answered, "No. The best thing for us is to keep still." Had they taken his advice, the lodges of Tekoa would have stood in a better light; but their own actions are the very best arguments against them that one can have. The collection was forty-five cents.

The night before some man threw in a beer check which reads, "Good for one drink. W. Leach." I thought, the Leach has sapped the financial veins of the poor fellow, till a beer check is all he has left.

At the four places I secured eleven subscribers to the Cnyosure, and near fifty signatures to our constitution. We had most of the people on our list when here one year ago last November. Good has been accomplished by this trip. God help us to save from the lodge and win souls to Christ.

P. B. Williams.

THE ST. PAUL MEETING.

As announced in the Cynosure, recently, a meeting in opposition to secret societies was held in Market Hall, St. Paul, March 27 and 28. The hall was heated, lighted, and freely given to us by the City Council on application of our friend and brother, Rev. Wm. Fenton. There was considerable doubt as to the wisdom of holding the meeting, but it, on the whole, appeared wise to make the attempt.

Secretary Phillips came on a week early and attended to the publication of notices and other arrangemeuts. On the evening of Wednesday, the 27th inst, a good audience gathered in the large hall and a welcoming address was given by Mr. Rufus Johnson of Winnebago City, and a reply was made by Prof. H. C. Stub. This gentleman is of the Lutheran Theological Seminary at Robbinsdale, near Minneapolis. He is a pleasant, Christian, scholarly gentleman, who has lectured extensively on the lodge question in this country and in Europe.

He was followed by Secretary Phillips, who spoke on "Secret Societies in Politics;" and he, by Bro. Fenton, who had his map on Egyptian mysteries, and spoke at length on "Ancient and Modern Mysteries Compared." At ten o'clock the audience, which had listened with interest for over two hours, was dismissed.

The day sessions of Thursday, the 28th inst., were held in the small hall, formerly the old Municipal court-room. Prof. Stub was elected chairman, and Bro. Fenton acted as secretary. There were in attendance a number of city pastors, and a good delegation of Prof. Stub's students, fine looking young men preparing for the ministry. There were also several members of the Good Templars and of various insurance orders, who were interested listeners. The topic for the entire day was "Minor Secret Orders," the leading address in the morning being given by Secretary Phillips, and in the afternoon by Pres. Blanchard.

The evening session of Thursday was held in the large hall, as before. The audience was good and listened thoughtfully throughout. After a brief song and prayer service, Rev. Wm. Fenton took the chair, and Pres. Blanchard spoke over an hour on "The Duty of the Church Respecting Secret Societies." At the close of this address the meeting closed.

Among the attendants were Bro. Rufus Johnson and wife, as above intimated; and it would not be proper to close this report without a special word respecting them. They have been for many years interested in our work, and came to this meeting resolved to make a generous offering to the cause; which they did. Mention should also be made of Rev. L. G. Almen, who was present at most of the sessions and was very helpful, as also were others whose names we cannot recall. Rev. L. A. Johnson, recently of Rockford, Ill., but now pastor of a large congregation in St. Paul, showed a warm sympathy as well as appreciation of the convention by dismissing his congregation Thursday evening, that they might attend the convention. On the whole, we feel this meeting was divinely ordered, and that out of it God will bring his own glory and the good of men.

REPORT FROM ST. PAUL.

St Paul, March 29, 1895.

Editor Christain Cynosure:—The State Convention closed last evening. There is no doubt that its effect upon the community will be beneficial; for truth has been laid before the people, and such truth as all the American churches and the lodges are combined together to keep from the people. On Wednesday evening Bro. Rufus Johnson, of Winnebago City, presided. Rev. Prof. H. C. Stub, of Lutheran Seminary, delivered an eloquent address upon the text, "Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid which is Christ Jesus, "showing that the lodge religon is not on the foundation of Jesus Christ. He was followed by Bro. Phillips in an excellent address, showing the disastrous effects of secret societies upon politics, imperilling the welfare of the state.

On Thursday morning Pres. C. A. Blanchard opened the meeting with reading the Scripture, comments and prayer. Prof. Stub presided during the day. Bro. Phillips delivered an address upon the minor orders,—Good Templars and Grand Army of the Republic,—showing the dangerous character of their lodge religion, it being hypocrisy, if not blasphemy. Bro. Rufus Johnson spoke of the Grange, how he was drawn into it, and while he was a Christian he found himself practicing sun-worship and saluting a fellow-man as "Worshipful," and therefore left it.

In the afternoon Pres. Blanchard spoke on the minor orders. Some secret societies were represented in the audience and a spirited discussion was had between them and Bro. Blanchard, manifestly to the disadvantage of the secret societies. During the day Rev. L. G. Almen, Prof. Stub, and others, took part in the meeting.

Owing to a blunder, for which I hold myself responsible, the audience on Wednesday evening was deprived of an address by Rev. L G. Almen.

On Thursday evening there was a good and appreciative audience to hear Pres. Blanchard on the "Duty of the Church Respecting Lodges." It is to be regretted that all the pastors of the city were not present to hear it. The lesson for the hour was enforced by the past history of the church in its relation to slavery. We shall do well to walk in the light and take beed to the lesson. Yours truly, William Fenton.

NOTES FROM ST. PAUL.

Some 10,000 circulars have been distributed in the city of St. Paul, not only advertising the convention, but containing portraits and testimonies of the late Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon, and the evangelists, Moody and Pentecost. Their testimonies and those of Joseph Cook and Dr. E. P. Goodwin will make valuable reading for those who may not be able to attend the convention. A circular letter and convention dodgers have also been sent to nearly all the pastors of St. Paul and Minneapolis, and doubtless quite a number of the pastors will give notice of the convention from their pulpits on Sunday.

About the first of this month a Christian Workers' Conference was held, of much interest to the Christian workers of Wisconsin and Minnesota. The place of meeting was Rev. Mr. Horton's Institute, St. Paul. When the question of separation was before the conference, there were quite a number of testimonies on the necessity of Christians separating themselves from the secret lodges, several of those testifying to having had a membership in more or less lodges, but thought it necessary to separate themselves from all such associations. It is said that Rev. Mr. Horton was quite positive in his testimony in favor of separation from all secret societies.

CORRESPONDENCE

METHODISM AND MASONRY.

Little Rock, Ark., March 18, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—Situated on a main street and under the shade of the Masonic Temple (an eight-story building) (both being in the same block) stands one of the Methodist churches of our city, with a saloon about midway between them. The pastor of the church is a Mason, with the title of D. D. atttached to his name (as an ornament, of course). A new official board has just been elected, many of them non-professors of the Christian religion, yet high up in Masonry and Odd-fellowship. That this has been brought about with a desire on the part of the church to harmonize itself with the "world" and "the things of the world" or rather to bow the heart as well as the knee to Baal, is plainly to be seen. Undoubtedly there will be no conflict there between their God and the Masons' Baal-god, for how "can two walk together except they be agreed?" At "high or low twelve" they can either of them adjourn from "labor to refreshment;" and as the saloon-keeper is a member of the "craft" he will welcome them. Those that claim to be the followers of John Wesley have departed from his faith and have given heed to seducing spirits. Yea, verily. A. J. Millard.

[The Cynosure is glad to believe that this is an exceptional case, and that many, yes, most of the Wesleyan churches do not follow "Wesley" even, but Christ.—Ed. Cynosure.]

MASONIC DECEPTION.

McNairy, Tenn., March 9, 1895.

Dear Cynosure:—The pretensions of Masonry to reverence for the Bible deceive many. The initiate is received with forms of prayer and quotations from the sacred Scriptures. He has seen the Bible carried in processions, and naturally enough gets the idea that it is the "Book of books," when the truth is, that "in Mohammedan countries the Koran might be (and is) substituted for the Bible." So that while many Masons regard the Bible highly, Masonry does not, but simply uses it as a lodge tool.

Then, too, the lodge uses terms used in Scripture and applies them to other things; as, for instance, "the resurrection of the dead." The candidate hears this expression and, being acquainted with the Gospel, his mind adverts at once to the Gospel doctrine that Jesus Christ died and rose again for our salvation. He naturally supposes that Masonry recognizes that fact; but this is not the case. No reference is made in symbolic religion to the death and resurrection of Christ, but to the mock death and resurrection of the candidate who, in the third degree, is knocked into a canvas held by four men, and is then carried to one corner of the room, covered up, and feigns death until it is pretended by the lodge that putrefaction is far advanced. Finally, by "the strong grip of the lion's paw" (a caricature of the lion of the tribe of Judah, or Christ), he is brought back to life. These disgusting performances Masonic authors teach plainly are part and parcel of the "ancient mysteries" of the ancient "sun-worship" so hateful to God, as we learn by the Scriptures. The death has direct reference to the decline of the winter sun, and the resurrection to the return of the sun in spring "to his wonted vivifying influence."

Thus we see Satan has instigated a religious philosophy with seeming parallels to the religion of Christ. This philosophy uses some truth; but the great central facts of true religion—pardon and the renewing of a man by the Holy Spirit through Christ—is repudiated, and the most boastful and God-insulting claims are set up for "another religion which is not another but a base counterfeit." Yours in the love of the truth,

C. Powers.

MAINE NOTES.

New Market, N. H., March 21, '95.

Dear Cynosure:—The Lord opening the way, I have spent about three weeks in Maine stirring up the minds of the brethren, visiting ministers and other friends, distributing religious and anti-secret tracts, and holding meetings. I preached twelve times in Lebanon, Shapleigh and Cornish. The saints were much comforted, and a few sinners converted. The power of the Lord was gloriously manifested in these meetings. I wish to put on record some evidence to show that it is neither wise nor true to say that all ministers are Masons or secretists. I visited ten ministers—three being in New Hampshire and seven in Maine. Of the former, two never belonged to any lodge, and take anti-secret papers; and one of them, the foremost pastor of his village, has publicly denounced secret lodges as bulwarks of crime. The third one I found an Odd-fellow under conviction. I preached the Gospel of repentance to him, gave him two copies of President J. Blanchard's sermon on Odd-fellowship, prayed with him, and I think he will come out of his Christless lodge and make a noble witness for the truth. The Holy Spirit is working mightily in his heart, and he subscribed cheerfully for an anti-secret paper and expressed great gratitude for my call.

At West Lebanon, I found Pastor C. C. Foster, an old comrade in the war against the lodge Baal, who twenty years ago gave of his small salary $5 00 to secure the Carpenter building for the N. C. A. headquarters. His face is still to the front and his armor bright. Here I also found my beloved college classmate, Rev. J. T. Closson, who never belonged to any lodge but the college D. K. E., which he now disapproves. Here also I called on an aged retired preacher, who I understand is a dormant member of one or two of the quart-measure lodges, but I was not led to disturb him.

At Lebanon Center, I found Pastor Curtis, an intelligent disapprover of all secret lodges, never having been in that bondage. At North Lebanon, the pastor is understood to be an adhering lodge man.

At Sharpleigh the pastor is a war veteran and a seceding Freemason, having the same experience as Pres. Finney. When he found Christ, he left the lodge with all other sins. He is a valuable witness against the soul-destroying influence of Masonry.

Pastor Robert Lawton at Newfield has never been stung by the lodge snake, but had never had his attention called to the root sin of oath-bound secrecy nor to the moral rotteness of the system. He is a bright, clean young man and I was glad to make his acquaintance and put much-needed truth withinh is reach. I make no plea for cable-towed preachers, but it is not wise for Christian reformers to slander Christian ministers. It is almost superfluous for me to add that ministers need more light on the lodge question, and that the church, as a whole, has the chronic infirmity of dreading the forefront of the moral battlefield. Her sons and daughters, however, are there; praise the Lord!

At Cornish, I was invited to assist in setting the church in Gospel order. A part of the church covenant is: "We desire above all things the glory of God and the salvation of our fellow-men. We regard membership in a secret society incompatible with membership in a Christian church."

Here also it was thought expedient to call a somewhat informal and extemporaneous meeting of the Maine State Anti secret Christian Association. This was a necessity, as President Jackson has died since the last meeting, and Secretary I. D. Haines is a missionary in the West Indies. The following officers were chosen for the ensuing year, or until others shall be chosen in their stead: President, Rev. Charles L Baker, Kittery Point; vice president, Andrew Boardmen, Skowhegan; secretary, Frank B Guptill, Cornish; treasurer, Henry W. Goddard, West Sidney. Executive committee, C. L Baker, F. B. Guptill, H. W. Goddard, Chester D Small, Cornish; Joel Norton, Kittery Point.

The anti secret force in Maine for active work has developed very rapidly within the last few years. A single copy of the Cynosure coming to an honest praying man for two years, had much do with the anti secret character of the Cornish church, and still more to do with the revival and reorganization of the Maine Christian Association. Behold what God hath wrought! Praise his name forever! S. C. Kimball.

OBJECTIONS TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

De Kalb, Ia, March 20, 1895.

Dear Cynosure:—One, though sweet spirited, if he give valid objections to secret societies by telling the truth in regard to them, is sure to offend. As long as the lodge exists "the cross" will not "cease to be an offence." It is self-evident they cannot stand the test of truth. God commands us to prove all things, but the lodges object in regard to their idols; they say, you do not or cannot know anything about it without joining. What nonsense, that one must be blindfolded to obey a command of God. Lodge religion cannot stand investigation among Christians, because, as Bishop Weaver said before the apostacy, "Their religion in the main is a Christless religion."

Much, however, that is called right God abhors; and so does the Christian, if his spiritual discernment is what it should be. How much we need the Saviour to open the spiritual eyes of our understanding, that we may see ourselves and things more as God sees. Nothing is right, though it may be called great and good, if it cannot stand the test of truth in the light of God's Word.

Lodge religion has been tried by this rule and found wanting. It is so of every false religion. The religion of the Bible alone has the spirit of Christ. Cyrus Smith.

FROM THE STATE CAPITAL.

Springfield, Ill., March 23,
Christian Citizenship Headquarters)

Editor Cynosure:—I hope every reader of these lines will write a letter at once to his representative urging him to vote for Mr. Kaiser's bill No. 23, which is now on the regular House calendar. It is a good bill, and would act as local option to the greater portion of the State. Remember that its enactment is removed from party politics or the will of the candidates elected. It brings the question up every year, and therefore is educational. Massachusetts has a similar bill. There is a chance to get this bill through if our people will rally to it. We find the license committee against us, and evidently "fixed." We may be able, however, to force matters somewhat, as we have good men in the House.

A vile bill to permit race track gambling passed the Senate. It will likely fail in the House. Two significant remarks were made in debate this week. One, "From the speeches made here one would think it a sin to live in Chicago." The other was, "We are on the verge of an industrial revolution."

The Keeley League held a well-attended meeting in the House Thursday night in the interest of their bill, which provides that a county judge may appropriate $100 or less to commit a confirmed drunkard to a "Cure." It has other features, among which is the privilege of the money thus advanced being returned.

James H. Shaw.

OUR FATHER.

Beaver Falls, Pa.

Dear Cynosure:—In a recent Cynosure there is an article by "Crucifer" on "The Lord's Prayer and Lodge Prayer," in which a very important question is raised, but not in my judgment satisfactorily answered.

The question, Is Christ acknowledged in the "Lord's Prayer?" is not to be answered in the affirmative because it is called the "Lord's Prayer," for that though a true is a human designation. Nor is it because Christ taught it to his disciples. For while that fact warrants its use, it does not settle the question as to his recognition in the prayer itself.

There are certain other questions related to this one that may first be considered. Among these is, why is Christ to be recognized in prayer? The answer, to my mind, is, because he is the possessor of all things needed by his people. This possession is by purchase right. As a priest he paid the ransom price for his people, and also for all things needful for them.
